If you have farmed many years you have found that it is necessary that the soil be fed in order to keep it in shape to produce. Bradley fertilizer will meet every requirement. See curie.

The school bell will ring Monday and it is your business to see that everyone of your children who have arrived at that age, are there. The school here will be the best in years and the attendance promises to be large. Let us all do what we can to make it a successful year.

Sale bills were printed at this office Monday for Mrs. Oliver Kloptenstein, who lives one mile west of Grabill, for Saturday, October 2 at which time horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, household furniture, farming tools, wood, corn and many other articles will be sold. J. L. Rhodenbaugh, the popular auctioneer will handle the crowd.

The Monroe Brothers will have their restaurant in operation, this week. Some new furniture was purchased at Wayne, and Geo. Milliman installed a four light hollow wire system of the Bystrom make, the best on the market. You can't help but find their place at night as they have a street light connected to their lights. Dick has been treating already. Success to you.

Last Sunday about twenty persons from St. Joe and vicinity withessed the launching of a 16 foot motor boat, the launching being performed about one mile east of town. This boat is a sixteen footer transom stern model, with a beam slightly in excess of four feet, propelled with a gasoline motor capable of developing a speed of six to seven miles an hour. The hull was built by Clay Coburn from paper patterns furnished by a Michigan firm. After the launching had been successfully performed by the aid of willing and expectant onlookers, Ed Cupp of Spencerville, after a number of efforts succeeded in starting the motor which carried the boat steadily down stream in a manner which fulfilled all the expectations of its joint owners, Clay and John Coburn. This is perhaps the first amateur built boat of this description on the St. Joseph River, excepting of course, those used at Robison Park, Ft. Wayne.

Clayton Hathaway was at Auburn last week and had his tonsils removed. He is getting along fine. Paul Curie and little Miss Helen Bowman were at Wayne on Thursday and had the same operation. They are also getting along nicely.

The state board of health has been asked to define pure lard as the board expects it to be made. Lard is the rendered fresh fat from hogs in good health at the time of slaughter, is clean, free from rancidity and contains, necessarily incorporated in the process of rendering, not more than five per cent of substances, other than fatty acids and fat.

Roscoe Barney returned Monday morning on the Wabash from the west after spending several months in different localities. His health has been improved and he is now feeling fine. He says that he was engaged in playing baseball for some time and being given free transportation to Kansas City he desided to come home for awhile.

Mrs. Hoover, a trained nurse of Garrett, who has been taking care of the Newton Perry family, who have been suffering with the typhoid fever, was taken to her home Tuesday noon by Dr. Lake, she having taken sick with the same disease. As soon as she reached Garrett she was given into the charge of her home physician and she will probably be taken to the hospital at Ft. Wayne. Her condition is serious and is to be regretted as her services were greatly needed by Dr. Lake at this time.

Some of the loveliest days of the year are at hand. This is the season of the glowing orchards and georgeous sunsets. The work of the entire year is summed up in richly laden wagons and barns stacked as high as the swallow's nest. The ceaseless effort of the twelve-month suddenly finds rich expression. It is like a full toned clock striking the hour. It is a season of contentment after work and weariness and has the quality of all perfect art—the quality of melancholy, what Shakespeare called "a dying fall." How thankful we should feel for these autumnal blessings so generously showered upon us, and when we behold the bountiful harvest—the golden grain as it waves to and fro in the balmy breese—the ranks of tasseled corn waiting to be garnered, we are impelled to echo the sentiment of one of Indiana's poets—the late Captain Lee O. Harris, when he wrote: "Let us sing of Indiana every heart with love elate, may the smiles of heaven linger, on the dear old Hoosier State."

FOR SALE: A good residence property in St. Joe. Terms $100 down, balance on monthly payments. Edwin Berry.

Mr. Geo. A. Treace of two miles west of Cedarville, was in town, Monday, having some dental work done. Soon after dinner he received a telephone message from home, stating that Neal, his son, had met with quite a serious accident while cutting corn with a horse cutter, having cut the leader cords off on his right foot. The boy was immediately taken to the hospital at Fort Wayne to be cared for.

About six o'clock Monday morning the news was sent from the D. J. Baker residence that Malissa Reasoner, aged 62 years, had peacefully passed away. She had been in poor health for some time but was some better and was able to be about the house, while she had not been away from home for sometime. Mr. Baker states that on Monday morning, she was getting up when they arose as usual from their nights rest and Mrs. Baker after awhile prerared her a stimulant and she lay down again and within a few minutes she was gone. On Saturday, word was sent her brother who lives in the west, to come if possible and we learn that he is on his way here. No definite arrangements will be made until he arrives Consumption seems to be the cause of her death. Mr. Baker stated that a short service would be held Thursday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock at the house. A full account of her life will appear next week.

Considerable excitement was caused last Saturday night. The streets were crowded with people and rigs and Don Hindman's horse became frightened and lunged into a young Webb's rig standing near him, smashing the rig down completely in front, frightening Webb's horse and it started to run with full speed up the street, at every jump the buggy would strike its heels causing it to kick and run. The running horse started near the band and was headed off by the crowd. The animal ran wild up the street but was stopped in front of Frank Kinsey's residence. The horse was loosened from the rig and brought back and Champ Bailey was called to doctor the severe wounds on its hind legs. The animal was in misery for some time and was placed in Chas. Koch's barn and cared for. It might have caused some person to be badly injured as the rigs drive up where the people gather and children are allowed to run at large on these occasions. Mr. Webb and Boston unloaded from their buggy in a very short order and were not hurt in the least. When the Hindman horse began to shy the Misses Grace Sechler and Gladys Barney jumped from the rig but received no serious injuries.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Gov. Johnson Submits to Operation.

For a deep-seated intestinal abscess Gov. John A. Johnson was operated on in St. Mary's Hospital, in Rochester, Minn., by Dr. William J. Mayo, assisted by Dr. Charles Mayo. It was a difficult and serious operation, according to the surgeons who witnessed the work, and Governor Johnson's condition is regarded as serious, and the best they will say is that they hope for an ultimate and speedy recovery. Gov. Johnson was upon the operating table for two hours and fifty-three minutes. As soon as he had recovered from the effects of the anesthetic, his first words were for Mrs. Johnson, who came to his bedside when she heard that her husband was conscious. The doctors found a small deep seated abscess connected with the intestines, and the cause of the attack. It was a difficult, serious and prolonged operation. Governor Johnson stood it well and rallied. The chances are for his recovery, although he will not be out of danger fof five days. He is suffering great pain.

Bathers Blown Into Street.

A half score of persons were injured, several probably fatally, at San Francisco, Cal., when a boiler in the Lurrine baths exploded. Women patrons were blown through the windows of their compartments into the street and the building was almost completely wrecked. A roar from beneath the building shook the neighborhood and a cloud of steam and smoke belched forth. The boiler was torn from its foundation and hurled through the roof. From the second floor of the structure men and women were blown through great gaps in the walls and the windows.

A Double Tragedy in Chicago.

Mrs. Jacob Silvers, formerly of New York, shot and killed Mrs. Augustus Tripp, of Chicago, her sister-in-law, and committed suicide in the apartments of the former in Chicago. Mrs. Tripp was found dead when the house was entered, with ten bullet wounds in her body. Mrs. Silvers died at a hospital. Before she died she recovered consciousness and made the statement that she had killed Mrs. Tripp and then committed suicide.

Eight Men are Killed in Wreck.

As the result of a head-on collision between passenger train No. 4 and fast freight No. 51 on the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis railway, one mile west of Pegram Station, Tenn., eight men were killed, one seriously injured and a number of others reported more or less hurt. No passengers were killed. The cars caught fire and several of the victims were cremated.

Woman Jumps Overboard.

Mrs. Rebecca Zisel Mandelbaum jumped overboard from the Dutch steamer Ryndam and was drowned while coming from her home in Lots, Russia, to join her husband in Chicago. The suicide occurred on the morning of September 6, soon after the liner left Rotterdam. No reason is known for the suicide.

Admiral Stuart to Retire.

Rear Admiral Daniel D. Stuart, who was promoted through the retirement of Rear Admiral Sperry, Sept. 3, was transferred to the retired list Sept. 15. He is a native of New York and was graduated from the United States Naval Academy th 1869. He has served practically all around the world.

Car Hits Taxicab; Five Hurt.

Five women and a baby were seriously injured in Pittsburg, Pa., when a taxicab in which they were riding, was wrecked by a street car. The party was going to a wedding breakfast when the accident occurred. Among the injured were the mothers of the bride and groom.

Lightning and Fire Destroy Church.

Saint John's Catholic church, Dryades and Clio streets, New Orleans, La., was almost totally destroyed by fire as a result of a bolt of lightning. The loss will amount to about $200,000, partially covered by insurance.

William Lloyd Garrison Dead.

William Lloyd Garrison, son of the great abolitionist, and widely known as a publicist and reformer, died at his home in Lexington, Mass., at the age of 71 years.

Ex-Shah Goes Into Exile.

The deposed Shah of Persia has left the confines of the Russian legation at Teheran and started his journey to Russia. He is to live in exile, probably at Odessa.

HARRIMAN, RAIL KING, GOES WAY OF ALL FLESH

WORLD LOSES FINANCIAL POWER

The Cause of His Suffering Is a Mystery Which May Never Be Solved.

Edward Henry Harriman died at his home at Arden, N. Y., some time between 1:30 and 3:35 o'clock Thursday afternoon.

His end removes from the railroad world of the day its supreme figure. It leaves the greatest railroad system in the world—a system which he himself built up and welded together—without a head. It marks the closing of a career unique in the financial history of this country. At 14 Mr. Harriman was an office boy; at 22 owner of a seat in the Stock Exchange of New York, and at 35 a millionaire. At 49, though wealthy, he was still a mediocrity and in the wider sense unknown. In the ensuing twelve years occurred the meteoric rise that made him the undisputed emperor of the railroad business of the nation. His death at 61 is an event that will make itself felt throughout the entire financial fabric of the world.

While it has been known for weeks that Mr. Harriman was a doomed man the greatest mystery surrounds the nature of the disease from which he suffered. Stomach trouble was the name given to his illness by his doctors, but during the last three or four weeks the rumor gained wide circulation that he had cancer. It has been intimated by men who were in a position to know that he was afflicted with the same ailment that caused the death of the late William Rainey Harper, president of the University of Chicago.

The death of Mr. Harriman removes from the world its greatest single railroad and financial power of modern history. Like a story from "The Arabian Nights" reads the biography of this magician of steel rails and stock markets. In forty years, from poverty and obscurity to almost fabulous wealth and colossal power, from broker's clerk to master of more than 75,000 miles of railroad and steamship lines, enough to belt the globe with a triple girdle; from market "scalper" to arbiter of more than $150,000,000 in cash and with nearly a billion dollars in stocks and securities at his beck and call—such is a bird's-eye view of the career of the "Napoleon of the railroad world," as they call him, who has just gone the way of all flesh.

How Harriman got his start has always been somewhat of a mystery to Wall street. The methods by which he bounded into command of the captains of industry have always been an enigma to his rivals and associates alike. Taciturn, mysterious, sphinx-like, but still wielding a wand that seemed to turn everything it touched into gold, Harriman was the psychological puzzle of the "street."

MAJ. GEN. E. M. M'COOK DIES.

Officer in Civil War Succumbs After Illness of Months.

Gen. Edward M. McCook, two times Governor of Colorado when it was still a territory and a Major General in the army during the Civil War, died at the Chicago Baptist Hospital. Gen. McCook's home was in Denver, Colo. The body was taken to the general's former home in Steubenville, Ohio. Mr. McCook came to Chicago two months ago. He was suffering from Bright's disease and went to the hospital for treatment. Gen. McCook was born in Ohio on June 15, 1833. Following his serving as Governor of the Territory of Colorado he was appointed United States Minister to Hawaii. Gen. McCook was a member of the family of "fighting McCooks," almost a score of whom have been military men of fame. He was active in the territorial legislature of Kansas at the time the State of Kansas was formed. On the first shot at Sumter he joined the Kansas legion and sustained the reputation of his family throughout the war. He was eloquent as an orator and on the death of Gen. Thomas delivered the funeral oration.

WHOSE LITTLE GIRLIE ARE YOU?

CANADA CLAIMS LAND TO POLE.

Answer Returned to Question from House of Commons.

Canada claims all land directly north of the American continent as far as the pole upon which it would be possible to nail a flag. This position will be taken, it is semi-officially stated, in reply to a question asked in the British House of Commons as to the ownership of the north pole, soon after the result of Cook's and Peary's explorations became known. The question was referred to Canada for reply. Canada's answer in effect will be that all the territory between the North American boundary and the north pole must be recognized as Canada's hinterland. The islands, it is maintained, have been formally taken possession of by Captain Bernier, Canada's arctic explorer, who is now lost in the far north.

MEXICAN FLOOD IS DESTRUCTIVE

San Juan River on Rampage Inundates Plantations and Railroads.

Word has been received from Xicotencatl, in the State of Tamipaulas, Mexico, that the entire country was inundated along the Tampico branch of the Mexican Central Railroad between the San Juan River and La Cruz. Several towns report loss of life ranging from a few up to 500 persons in some instances. Below Xicotencatl all the plantations on the Tamesi River were destroyed and several towns wiped out. The destruction along the San Juan River was almost complete. All the irrigation works in and around Matamoras have been ruined and will involve a loss of millions of dollars. The Tampico branch of the Mexican Central Railroad for several kilometers has completely disappeared between San Juan River and La Cruz.

CRANBERRY CROP IS LOST.

Reports received at Necedah, Wis., from various points in that, the greatest cranberry district in the West, show that the crop has been practically ruined by frost and fire. Many of the largest marshes are completely ruined, and no attempt will be made at picking. Others have suffered a loss of 50 per cent. Near Norway Ridge enough damage has been done to throw 2,000 people out of employment in the picking season.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Reports from Memphis are to the effect that John W. Schorr is once more to enter the racing game upon a large scale.

Charles A. Comiskey, of Chicago, has spent $100,000 for new players this season and has about twenty-five youngsters on his staff.

A crowd of 15,000 were present at Saratoga when Rocky O'Brien, owned by James McManus, won the $17,000 Hopeful stakes, six furlongs, at 40 to 1.

R. D. Little, former internationalist, won the New York State tennis championship singles on the courts of the Crescent Athletic Club. In the final he defeated Robert Leroy, Columbia University's intercollegiate champion, 6—1, 2—6, 6—2, 8—6.

J. B. Handy, of the New York Athletic Club, and L. B. Goodwin, of the Illinois Athletic Club, gave C. M. Daniels, the champion swimmer, a hard fight in the 440-yard event at the swimming meet of the New York Athletic Club. Daniels won in 5:57 4-5.

DIE CROSSING DEATH VALLEY.

Bodies of Two Miners Found and Third Man Probably Is Lost.

The bodies of Emery Bodge and Tom Flanz, two miners who perished of thirst, while attempting to cross Death Valley, were found Saturday four miles west of Skidoo, Cal., by members of the searching party scouring the desert for a brother of President Eldredge of the National Sewing Machine Company, who has been lost for three weeks. The men whose bodies were found left Rhyolite late in August and started across Death Valley, where the thermometer reaches 130 degrees in the shade during the summer months. They carried two canteens of water each, but this supply must have been exhausted before they had gone half way. Crazed by thirst they wandered about until they were overcome by the heat and lay down to die. Young Eldredge was attempting to reach Rhyolite, Nev., from his mining claims in the Panaminil range. He left his companions three weeks ago. Men from all the desert camps have searched the desert. The burro which he took with him when he started across the valley was found a few days ago, but there was no other trace of the man.

BULLET IN HIS BRAIN; RECOVERS

Washington, D. C., Man Carries Memento of His Attempt at Suicide.

With a 22-caliber bullet imbedded in the center of his brain, fired there with suicidal intent more than two weeks ago, Frank Blaine left the Casualty Hospital in Washington, D. C., Monday, discharged as cured. He said he suffered no discomfort other than pains in the head and neck and he talked rationally at all times. The surgeons at the hospital who have been observing Blaine closely, said they detected no ill effects from the bullet in his brain and it is their belief that he will not suffer from it in future years. An X-ray photograph of the young man's head showed the bullet imbedded in the center of his brain.

CUTS WOMAN; KILLS SELF.

Jealous Man Wields a Razor in a Double Tragedy.

Jealousy caused Christian Hettenbrook, 42 years old, to attempt to kill Mrs. Anna Carter, who had sheltered him for two years in her home at 137 South Torrence street, Dayton, Ohio. After drawing a razor blade across the throat of Mrs. Carter, Hettenbrook, who killed Charles Wessenich in a fight here two years ago, cut his own throat, and died almost instantly. The woman is expected to die. Hettenbrook has three sons and a daughter in Los Angeles.

NEW YORK BANKER A SUICIDE.

J. W. Castles, President of Union Trust Co., Cuts His Throat.

John W. Castles, president of the Union Trust Company at 80 Broadway, committed suicide at the Grand Union Hotel in New York by cutting his throat with a razor. He had been ill for several months with nervous prostration as a result of overwork. The bank is one of the big New York institutions and has deposits of over $60,000,000.

Castles was elected president of the Union Trust Company in December, 1908, and assumed office early in January, after he severed his connection with the Guaranty Trust Company. The panic at that time was a thing of recent passing. Castles found a heavy load of work awaiting him. As a result of this heavy work his health suffered.

GETS $100,000 FOR SAVING LIFE.

Widow Will Come Into Legacy as Result of Presence of Mind.

Mrs. Hattie Carhart Winders, a young widow living with her parents in Edinburg, N. J., will shortly come into a legacy of $100,000 as a reward for having saved the life of a young man in a runaway seven years ago. For more than a year agents of the estate of William H. Anderson in England have been searching in America for Mrs. Winders. They finally located her through an advertisement. The story of the accident, which she believes was the cause of the bequest in his father's will, she told as follows: "One evening Mr. Anderson took me to Princeton. As we were leaving for home he had a sudden seizure and toppled back in the carriage. The horse ran away while I was trying to arouse him. Finally I got hold of the reins and brought the horse under control."

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

The school Board at Hastings, Minn., have elected Miss Irene Cox, of Cloquet, as supervisor of music and assistant teacher in English.

Prof. Charles Fragee of Richmond, Ind., was elected as a member of the faculty of the Duluth normal school by the Minnesota normal board.

The Western College for Women, at Oxford, Ohio, through the efforts of its president, John Grand Newman, has raised an endowment fund of $250,000.

Students must show an average of 80 per cent for their senior high school work in order to be eligible for a place in the freshman class at the Minnesota "U."

Prof. Frederick Starr, anthropologist of the Chicago University, will go to Tokio, where he will appear as a Japanese shopkeeper. He will adopt the habits, manners and customs of the Japanese in an attempt to study Japan and its people.

If President Taft consents, 300,000 school children of Chicago will form a double line of honor through which the President will pass when he visits Chicago, Sept. 18.

Morningside College, Sioux City, has been given $10,000 in order to complete the $150,000 necessary for the college granted conditionally by the American education board. Morningside now has an endowment of $400,000.

TAFT'S LONG SWING AMONG THE PEOPLE

STRENGTH IS GAINED BY REST

With Central Bank as His Theme, Executive Considers Plan of Financial Changes.

On his fifty-second birthday President Taft entered on the first stage of his 13,000-mile tour of the United States. His train formed the second section of the regular express from Boston to Albany on the Boston and Albany division of the New York Central Railroad. The first speech of the President's series of addresses to the people was made in Boston; the last is to be made at Richmond, Va., Nov. 10. The next day the President will be back at his work in Washington. When the President left Chicago he passed over what Eastern people call the political borderland. Then his real work of enlisting strength for his policies as he outlines them seemed to begin.

In addressing 3,000 persons at a banquet in Boston, on the eve of his trip across the continent, President Taft prophesied a great increase in the commerce of the country. Leaving the discussion of the tariff, of railroad control, and of the curbing of corporations to be explained in detail in later addresses, Mr. Taft spoke more fully of the changes needed in the monetary system of the country.

The plan to establish a central bank as a safeguard against such financial panics as that of 1907 was one of the financial subjects considered by the President. There are two dangers which must be avoided in this plan, he said, both of which had been explained to the President by Senator Aldrich. Control of this institution, giving great power over the financial welfare of the nation, must be kept out of the hands of Wall street interests, he asserted. The other danger which the President said must be prevented is that the central bank, if formed, should be manipulated for political purposes.

PRESIDENT TAFT.

Mr. Taft took occasion, in his brief reference to the tariff, to condemn the efforts of certain public men to stir up sectional strife in calling upon the West to organize against the East. His address was marked by praise of Senator Aldrich.

PRESIDENT TAFT ON NATIONAL PROBLEMS.

* * *

There are two indispensable requirements in any plan to be adopted involving a central bank of issue: First, that control of the monetary system shall be kept free from Wall street; second, that it shall not be manipulated for political purposes.

* * *

I hope for a satisfactory money system before the end of this administration. We must mend our roof before the storm shall show us again its leaky and utterly inadequate character.

* * *

We are, unless all signs fail, upon the eve of another great business expansion and era of prosperity.

* * *

Throughout this country there is free trade of the freest character, and due to this, the prosperity of the West, especially in agriculture, is even more pronounced than that of the East.

* * *

We are all in the same business boat. Prosperity of one section adds to the prosperity of the other.

Cincinnati Physician Kills Burglar.

Responding to a call for aid at the house of a neighbor where a negro burglar had forced an entrance, Dr. Robert D. Maddox, a prominent Cincinnati physician, shot and killed the negro. The burglar was identified as John Scott, who had served three years in the Frankfort (Ky.) penitentiary.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER V.

Rupert Carroll got up to town in very good time. He drove straight to his own club in St. James' street, where he deposited his bag and lunched, and then he sallied forth to try and catch his cousin at the Junior Carleton Club. But he was unfortunate. Lord Netherville had looked in there for a moment for his letters, but he had just gone, and so he missed him by a few minutes only. He got through the time, however, very satisfactorily, for even on a wet Saturday afternoon there is always something that a man who has been for two months in the country can find to do in London. What with his hair-cutter, and his shirtmaker, and a game of billiards with an acquaintance at the club, it was a quarter to five, and time to start to Victoria, almost before he realized that it was so late.

He got to the station in excellent time, tossed his bag into a first-class carriage, bought himself some afternoon papers, and then looked about for Lord Nethervile. There was no great crowd on the platform; a large family of children, going to the sea-side, occupied the central position; a small sprinkling of passengers were quietly taking their places, but he could see nothing of his cousin.

A long way down the train, three men, apparently third-class passengers, were standing together in a group—they stood with their backs towards him, and close by him at the book-stall lingered a thin, sallow-faced boy, who was looking apparently at the sensational pictures on the outsides of the yellow-backed novels.

The boy was near enough to see him, but not within hearing. Perhaps for reasons of his own he did not want to come too near. Rupert saw him—as one sees things that make no impression on one's mind one way or the other, but he did not notice him particularly. Presently a man, in respectable dark clothes came up to him and touched his hat to him.

"Mr. Carroll, sir?"

"Yes, that is my name."

"I am Lord Nethervile's valet, sir. He has sent me to you with a message."

"I never saw you before, my man; how in the world did you find me out?"

"Not very difficult, sir," the man answered, with a smile. "My lord and you is as like as two peas. My lord told me I couldn't possibly mistake you—no more I could. If you will allow me to say so, it, it's the most extraordinary likeness I ever saw."

"So people say. Well, and what have you come to tell me?"

"That his lordship is extremely sorry that he is unable to go down to Harvington by this train, but he will come by the next—the 7:34."

"Does he want me to wait for him?"

"No, sir; he most particularly wishes that you should go on by this train and explain to the ladies that he has been unavoidably detained, and that he is exceedingly sorry that he cannot get down in time for dinner. He will dine in town, sir, so that Miss Carroll may not in any way be inconvenienced by the alteration in his arrangements. He hopes to arrive at the house about a quarter before 9 o'clock."

"Very well, you can tell him that I am very much disappointed not to travel down with him, but we shall expect him later."

The valet touched his hat and walked away down the platform. Meanwhile Billy had left his post of observation at the book-stall.

"That's 'im," he said to the Marquis in a whisper, jerking his thumb backward over his shoulder.

The three men each in turn, one after the other, but casually, not to appear to be watching, turned half round and took stock of the gentleman at the further end of the platform, and then got into a third-class carriage.

It was nearly dusk when Rupert Carroll got out at Harvington. It was past half-past 6 o'clock, and the days were shortening. The rain had ceased, and there was a red glow in the west, where the sun had gone stormily down from under an opening in the heavy clouds.

His sister's house was but half a mile by the short cut from the station, and the pony carriage—her only conveyance—was not usually sent to meet visitors, but the gardener had come up with a barrow to wheel up the luggage. Carroll explained that he was alone, and that Lord Netherville was coming by the later train. The old man took his bag an umbrella and mackintosh, and started off by the road, which was rather longer than the field path, and Rupert lingered for a few minutes' friendly chat with the old stationmaster, who had known him as a boy. Meanwhile, three travelers had got out of a third-class carriage at the back of the train, and had passed quickly out of the station in front of him.

"Which is the way to the village?" inquired one of them of a country girl, who was loitering outside the station yard in the hope of attracting the attention of Joe, the porter, with whom she was keeping company.

"Over yon stile, and straight on by the path. You can go by the road, if you like—but people mostly goes by the field path—it is shorter."

Rupert came swinging his stick gaily as he stepped out of the station. For a moment he paused at the stile, as though uncertain whether to take the field path or the road. If he had taken the latter, his whole life would have been altered, and this story would scarcely have been written, but after a brief hesitation, he decided in favor of the short cut, and jumped lightly over the stile.

There were three grass fields between his sister's garden wall and the station. The path ran across the center of the first of them, and the second was entered by a swing gate. Through this second meadow the path followed the hedge. The hedge was wide and high and straggling, and there was a deep ditch on one side of it, at the bottom of which ran a tiny runnel of muddy water, and great clumps of alder bushes and brambles straggled out irregularly from it, overshadowed by a line of trees. It was quite impossible in the faint owl's light to distinguish clearly any objects along the ragged hedgerow, and Carroll looked neither to the right nor to the left, but walked quickly ahead, anxious only to reach his sister's house.

Three forms crouched silently under shadow of a large thorn bush. They were absolutely motionless, so still against the background of blackness as to be perfectly invisible from the path. Two paces carried Carroll just beyond them.

"Now then—now!" whispered a voice.

Then a sudden rush from behind—a cry, a struggle—half-a-dozen ringing blows.

"Scoundrels! let go!" gasped a choked voice that died away into a smothered groan—then, nothing more!

Only a lifeless body huddled up across the path that in the next moment was quickly dragged down into the darkness of the muddy ditch—and presently it lay there quite alone in the silence of the gathering shades of night.

CHAPTER VI.

Monday morning dawned, brilliant with sunshine and redolent with sweet sounds and scents. The grateful earth sparkled and glittered after the heavy rain, the grass was greener, the flowers fresher, the river rushed in fuller flood on its way. Irene flung open her casement window and thrust her golden head out into the sunshine.

"To-day, to-day!" she cried aloud in a rapture of happy love. "And the skies are blue, and the birds are singing, and the air is full of music to welcome him back! Oh, happy, happy day! that brings my darling back to me!"

And then she blushed and laughed over her own rhapsodies—she recalled to herself that she was not a love-sick wood nymph, but a matter-of-fact and sober-minded British maiden with many household responsibilities upon her mind.

Her aunt was going back to town by the 10:15 train. She must see that breakfast was in good time, and the fly duly ordered to convey her to the station. She must gather a bunch of flowers for her to take with her—that time-honored custom of country hospitality, by which the departing guest is speeded on his way.

Lady Garland was safely got off—the last good-byes were spoken, the last parcel handed into the fly and, with her bunch of flowers in one hand, and waving her adieux out of the window with the other, Aunt Anna was whisked away down the muddy lane, and Irene drew a gasp of relief as she followed her mother back into the porch.

"She will be in plenty of time for the train," she said, consulting her watch. Then she added in an abandon of delight as she flung her arms about Mrs. Garland's neck: "Oh, darling mamma! how delightful it is to be together again!"

The mother kissed her child fondly.

"My child is all my own still," she thought, led astray by the loving words; "she wants nothing but her mother—nobody has come between us yet!"

"I think, Irene, as it is so fine we might go over to Wanstead by the 12 o'clock train and lunch with old Mrs. Soames. It is so long since we have been to see the old lady, I feel we have been rather neglectful of her lately."

"Oh, not to-day, mamma! not to-day!" cried Irene, in dismay.

"Why not, my love? I think to-day will do very nicely."

"Oh, mamma! no—no!" and then she blushed a bright rose red from brow to chin, "please, dear mamma, not to-day. Mr. Carroll is coming back, and—and—he said he would be here for lunch."

For a moment Mrs. Garland was very silent. A sort of chill had fallen—was it the day?—or in the air—or was it there—in the narrow gap betwixt her own heart and her child's?

"Then of course we cannot go to Wanstead—that settles it—I had better see about the luncheon, as he is coming," and Mrs. Garland moved away towards the door of the passage that led to the kitchen.

Irene walked up and down the little square of lawn that lay between the front door of the house and the road behind. She could see right down the lane from here, the lane that led to the village, and to the "George," and along which her lover must come. She was in a fever of impatience—Why did he not come? Oh, how could he be so cruel and unkind as to keep her waiting? Her mother appeared at this moment beneath the archway of roses and honeysuckle at the side of the house.

"Irene, my dear, why do you stop out in the sun with nothing on your head?"

"I am looking out for Mr. Carroll. Oh, mamma! do you think anything can have happened to the train?"

"You silly child, the train went by an hour ago! I saw the smoke along the valley when I was up in my bedroom."

They waited till 2 o'clock, and then her mother refused to wait any longer. They sat down together to the pretty flower-adorned table, with that vacant chair standing there in its place. Perhaps even yet it might be filled!

"Tell Bessy to put on her bonnet and run round to the 'George' and see if Mr. Carroll is coming to lunch," said Mrs. Garland to the parlor-maid as they sat down. And Irene's heart revived a little at the words. It was better to know than to be left in tortures of suspense, she thought, yet when they had nearly finished the simple meal and the little maid brought back word from the "George" that Mr. Carroll had not come back, she almost regretted the suspense that had not, at any rate, bereft her entirely of hope.

She and her mother went out in the punt in the afternoon; they took their tea and discussed it under the shady willow bank amongst the water lilies, at a spot where she and Rupert had often sat and talked together, and she exerted herself to be quite happy and bright and cheerful, so that her mother should not see the smallest difference in her spirits or manner.

She put up her hand once as they sat there, and took hold of the same bough that Rupert had held the last tried to guess the exact place where his fingers had rested, and to recall his very words and the expression of his eyes; these memories were sweet to her, and they served to console her in her disappointment. But she was glad when bedtime came, it brought her nearer to news of him.

She was up and dressed betimes the next day watching for the postman. He was late. She saw him a long way off come trudging along the lane. She ran down to meet him at the garden gate. The old postman was a long time fetching them out of the depths of his canvas bag. They came out of it one after the other. Two for her mother, one for the cook, a post-card for Bessy, two newspapers, then at last, one letter for her!

She clutched at it eagerly, letting all the others tumble down together on the grass at her feet. It was from her cousin, Mrs. Purvis! The postman trudged onwards along the lane. Bessy picked up the fallen letters and papers that lay at her young mistress' feet and carried them into the house, and still Irene stood there, motionless, pale, frozen into stone, gazing blindly at the letter in her hand.

Presently she turned and went back slowly into the house, and upstairs into her own room. She did not weep or bemoan herself; only she sat quite still for a very long time upon the edge of her bed, staring blankly and blindly before her, he mind almost as vacant as her eyes. Her cousin's letter, unopened and unheeded, lay upon the floor at her feet. She roused herself after a time, and went about her duties and daily occupations as usual, until night brought a gleam of hope once more, and she began to long again for the next morning's post.

But the days went by, one after the other, and the old postman came along the lane morning after morning, and brought her no letter from Rupert Carroll. Neither word, nor sign, nor token came from him to whom she had given her heart; sometimes she asked herself whether it was all a dream, whether Carroll had ever existed, ever told her of his love, ever asked her to be his wife? At night she wept bitterly, and was often unable to close her eyes until the grey daylight crept through her shutters. Yet ever a sense of loyalty to her promise made her do her utmost to conceal her anguish of mind from her mother's knowledge.

Lake Michigan's Sand Dunes.

Shifting sand dunes are causing trouble on the borders of Lake Michigan. The dunes are formed by the on shore winds, which sweep the beach sand beyond the reach of the waves. The sand accumulates in low mounds about any obstructions, such as stones or bushes; thus started the dune is sufficient cause for its own growth. The wind keeps piling the sand up from behind, the dune grows and the sand on its crest is blown over to the leeward side of the mound, so that the dunes gradually march inland. On the east side of Lake Michigan the dry west winds have heaped up numbers of dunes, ranging in height up to 200 feet. In Indiana the dunes have moved inland across a forested area, burying and killing trees, leaving the dead trunks as skeletons behind them in their march onward. A famous instance of dune migration is that of the Kurische Nehrung, a long sand bar off the coast of Germany, where a dune ridge marched over a church, burying it for thirty years, at the end of which time it was gradually uncovered by the progress of the dune.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Bad Boy's Retort.

"Little boy, don't you know that you shouldn't go fishing on Sunday?"

"Sure, I know it, but you see the fish ain't been educated up to keeping the Sabbath yet."

The Mauretania's boilers, placed end to end, would make a string 547 feet long.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

A new pipe organ will soon be installed in the Methodist church at Thorntown. The name of the donor is withheld.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Lutz, living east of Noblesville, celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary one day last week.

Jacob Wagner, aged 24, a farmer living in Posey County, near Evansville, committed suicide. He had just returned home from Evansville, and taking a bottle of carbolic acid from his pocket, said in the presence of his family: "Here is my last drink." He drained the bottle and was dead in a short time. No reason is assigned for his act.

A landscape artist has been at St. Mary-of-the-Woods, near South Bend, planning extensive improvements. The work will take several years and will cost $100,000. There will be a sunken garden and a lake on the grounds. The Sisters of Providence recently bought an additional 160 acres, making about one thousand acres in all the estate.

In a letter just received by Frank Tucker, City Clerk of Warsaw, Joseph Furey, who drew first number in the Flat Head drawing, said he had entered no contract with any one to share his winnings. At the time of the drawing Mayor C. A. Rigdon is said to have declared he entered into a written and signed agreement with Furey to share the winnings.

The Rev. J. F. Sulger, pastor of St. Stephens' Episcopal church, received a telegram from Grand Exalted Ruler Sammis, at Lemars, Ia., stating that he had appointed him grand chaplain of the Elks. The Rev. Mr. Sulger has been Exalted Ruler of the Terre Haute Lodge of Elks, whose delegates worked for the election of Sammis at the Los Angeles convention recently.

While Mr. and Mrs. Davisson, living a few miles southwest of Shelbyville, were picking pears in an orchard Mrs. Davisson accidentally stirred up a bumblebee nest. Instantly there was a fight between the women and the bees. Davisson assisted in putting the insects to flight, but not before his wife was stung twenty-five times. Mrs. Davisson has been ill since her experience.

The first football accident of the season occurred at Princeton, the victim being the 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bruner. He was playing the game with a number of companions, and in one of the rushes he fell to the ground and was trampled upon. His right hip-bone was broken and he was otherwise bruised and injured. It is feared the injuries will cripple him for life.

A burglar who evidently knew exactly where the money in John Ervin's cigar store at Muncie was kept, calmly walked past the cash register without disturbing it and its small amount of change and went to the spot where the tin cash box was hidden. The thief appropriated $110 and departed without eaving a clew. It is estimated that burglars and pickpockets have obtained $1,000 there in the last three days.

Walter Corey, 37 years old, was instantly killed while working at the Elmer Shelhorn farm, five miles north of Greensburg. He and H. C. Hodges were operating an ensilage cutting machine, when the fan broke. The bearing, weighing about twenty pounds, flew off, striking Corey right over the heart, crushing in five ribs and fracturing his left jaw. He died instantly. He was a prominent farmer, a member of the Odd Fellows and Rebekah Lodges, and leaves a widow and two sons.

Governor Marshall recently appointed Mrs. Julia S. Conklin, of Westfield, to membership on the Board of Trustees of the Indiana Soldiers and Sailors' Orphans' Home at Knightstown. Mrs. Conklin was a member of the board for twelve years. She succeeds Mrs. Laura A. Cumback, of Greensburg, who resigned as trustee to be a candidate for the principalship of the schools at the home. Mrs. Conklin is president of the Robert Dale Owen Memorial Association and is prominent in the work of the State Federation of Clubs.

A peculiar situation has developed in Princeton school circles. Unless about twenty pupils of Patoka Township are immediately transferred to the city High School patrons threaten to bring suit to compel the recognition of such transfers. The pupils whose transfers have been held up have enrolled with the city High School and expect to take their places among the classes. As a result of the sudden increase in attendance the High School is crowded to overflowing and the faculty is unable to cope with the situation at present, as the seating capacity of the High School department is only 158, while 170 pupils are enrolled.

Owing to the epidemic of scarlet fever in Bedford, the School Board has postponed the opening of the public schools. There are twenty-five cases of the disease in the city.

The Winona & Warsaw railroad directors have announced the following election of officers: J. E. Beyers, president; W. B. Frazier, vice president; Sol Dickey, secretary and general manager; C. H. Worden, treasurer; J. C. Spade, assistant treasurer; J. F. Beyers, general superintendent.

Corn in the field has been selling at public sales in the vicinity of Greenfield at $17@$22 an acre. The farmers are expecting a good crop and high prices.

Mrs. Lincoln Byers, of Bedford, who has been suffering from the effects of a bean that lodged in her throat, is rapidly recovering. Her condition for a time was critical.

The Rev. George Crabtree, who has for the last two years been pastor of the Presbyterian churches at Clayton and New Winchester, has accepted a call to a church in New Albany.

John Edwards, aged 12 years, residing a few miles south of "Hell's Neck," in Gibson County, was smoking a cigarette, and when he saw his grandmother coming toward him he hastily put the "coffin nail" in his pocket. His clothing caught fire and it was with difficulty that he was prevented from burning to death.

William Mooney, employed at the Speer sawmill, near Heltonsville, while attempting to put a belt on a pulley, lost his balance and fell between two circular saws that were in motion. One of the saws caught his right side and cut through his body into his lung. The unfortunate man was also cut about the face, head and hands. The chances are against his recovery. Mooney has a wife and one child.

Ora Coppock, aged 20, an interested student of wireless telegraphy, has been ambitious to make Tipton a station and with his own apparatus, manufactured at home has erected what he terms an "aerial," high above the treetops, near his dwelling in North Independence street. He was desirous of getting in touch with the station at Michigan City and this was accomplished so easily that he became enthusiastic and has sent for sensitive instruments, hoping to catch flashes from New York and other cities.

In the suit of I. H. Lee against W. M. Dunn, that has been filed in the Circuit Court at Noblesville, trouble over a patent right has been brought to light. In his complaint Lee charges that Dunn recently had patented a tip for a pool cue. Lee asserts he furnished the money to get the patent through on condition that he receive half interest in the invention. Judge Christian has issued a temporary restraining order prohibiting Dunn from making any disposition of the patent until Lee's claim for half interest is tried in the courts.

Otis Sosby, on his way home from church at Franklin, shot a horse while trying to get at a dog that sprang at him. He was riding a horse owned by J. H. Forsyth, and the accident occurred midway between Franklin and Trafalgar. When the dog sprang at him, Sosby thrust a pistol behind him and fired. The dog retreated immediately and Sosby thought no more about the matter until he noticed the peculiar actions of his mount. An investigation showed that he had accidentally wounded the horse. The animal died soon afterward from the effects of a bullet that entered its flank.

Mrs. Rosana Blue, known as "Grandma" Blue, died at Indianapolis at the Alpha Home for Aged Colored Women. Mrs. Blue was born on Bear Creek, Monroe County, North Carolina, about a century and a quarter ago. Friends quote her as saying: "I was 62 years old when my old master sold me in a group of other salves. He said 'Rosana is too old to raise a crop.' I know I raised ten crops after that before the war broke out." Of Civil War times, and especially of Massa Abe Lincoln, she had a distinct remembrance. She was considered an old woman at that time. Mrs. Blue came from a family noted for its longevity. Her mother lived to be 128 years of age.

That Newton L. Gilbert, former Congressman from the Twelfth District and erstwhile Lieutenant Governor of Indiana, who now holds one of the big Government positions in the Philippines, is getting to be as big a man as President Taft—figuratively speaking—is exemplified by the fact that he is now occupying the house that was Taft's home when the latter was Governor of the Philippines. This information is gleaned from letters written to friends by Gilbert. The former Fort Wayne man states that his new home is situated in one of the most desirable residence portions of Manila directly on the bay. Mr. Gilbert writes that he and his wife have recently returned from a three weeks' trip to Australia. They were accompanied on this trip by Bishop Brent, one of the foremost religious leaders of the island. He has purchased a big touring car and with this makes trips around the island. Before long, he writes, he expects to return to Fort Wayne for a visit, but he states that he is entirely too busy at the present time to fix any definite date for his return.

Mrs. Sadie Hayes, aged 55, died a few days ago and her mother, Mrs. Cole, aged 96, died an hour later from the shock. Both were widows, living near Clay City.

Francis Mackey, aged 16, son of Frank Mackey, of Seymour, was drowned in the reservoir of the traction company. He could not swim, and water wings he was wearing slipped from under him. His companions were too far away to be of any assistance.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Chicago Trade says: "The growth in banking power reflected by the official statements this week adds further testimony to the improved commercial position. Loans are seen to have increased considerably over this time last year and there are developments in progress which foreshadow a stronger demand for money in the near future. The discount rate, consequently, gathers firmness. It is fortunate that credits operate smoothly and make financing easier for the needs of the industries and transportation interests now entering upon a period of greater activity.

"Trading defaults again make an encouraging exhibit. Movements of commodities make a favorable comparison with a year ago. Increasing production is noted in iron, wood, brass and leather manufactures. No abatement yet appears in heavy contracts for railway equipment, rails, structural steel and pig iron.

"Machinery makers report wider remand fo rnew outfits, especially for mining purposes, and the improvement is well sustained in electric lines, heavy hardware and furniture.

"Despite poor export requirements the dealings in grain and flour remain large. Mail and road orders are exceptionally good, and aggregate bookings make a high total for dry goods, footwear and food products.

"Bank clearings for five days, $231,500,334, exceed those of the corresponding period last year by 18.3 per cent, and compare with $242,951,602 for six days in 1907.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number twenty-one, against twenty-five last week, and twenty-three in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number five, against four last week, six in 1908 and five in 1907."

NEW YORK.

Operations in industrial lines are still expanding, and in some branches of the iron and steel trade record outputs are the rule. In fact, manufacturing is in the forefront as regards activity. Jobbing trade is good, and at some centers, particularly where fall festivals are held, purchases of dry goods, groceries and staple lines in general have really increased.

The earlier gathered crops, such as wheat, cotton and oats, are being moved to market quite freely, and the good prices being realized from the sale of these products will make for easier collections and growth in trade.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Sept. 9 were 191, against 166 last week, 191 in the same week of 1908, 172 in 1907, 164 in 1906 and 188 in 1905. Failures in Canada for the week number 25, which compares with 33 last week and 34 in the same week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

Pain

Nearly all woman suffer some pain at times, due to the ailments peculiar to their sex. If your trouble is yet in a mild form, take Cardui to prevent it becoming more serious. If you have suffered long years, get Cardui at once. Use persistently and it will help you.

Take CARDUI

Mrs. L. Eells, of New Hartford, Ia., was afflicted for 24 years. She writes: "For the past 24 years I have been afflicted with womb trouble, causing extreme nervousness, pain in right side and back — altogether making life a burden. I tried doctors and various other remedies without relief. Finally I began using Wine of Cardui. Now I am entirely cured. I cheerfully advise all women similarly afflicted to try Cardui." A farmer who makes a success of his work remarks: "When I am ready to sell my stuff I insert a little advertisement in the paper telling what I have for sale, and if live stock how many head of each and how and when they are ready to ship. The result is that the buyers are right after me, either personally or by mail, and naturely I always get the highest price. If I want to buy or sell a cow, a steer, a hog, a horse, seed grain or a second hand implement, I insert a little ad in the paper that costs me from 25 cents to $1.00, and instead of traveling over the country inquiring of my neighbors the newspaper does it for me, saving me time and trouble."

The Frank Barney property recently destroyed by fire has been sold to the Lutheran church and the same will be cleaned up and made into a lawn. The Aid society furnished quite a good bit of the cash with which to purchase the lot and the balance was subscribed by the members of the church. The buildings and rubbish will be sold off and when this is done the Lutheran church will be well protected from fire unless it should catch in the building. The consideration was $350.

With Heart Trouble

"Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has cured me of heart disease of over 20 years' standing. I was so bad that I could not do my work, and could scarcely draw a full breath without fainting or smothering. The doctor told me he could do no more for me; then I commenced taking the Heart Remedy. I shall never forget that night. I slept better than I had before in months. I kept right on getting better, until I was perfectly well."

MRS. LAURA RUSSELL,
Logan, Iowa.

When the heart action is weak, it fails to pump the blood through the lungs with sufficient rapidity. Then the lungs do not absorb the proper amount of oxygen, although they may be taking in a normal amount of air. The result is shortness of breath, smothering spells, difficult breathing, oppressed feeling in chest. Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy strengthens the heart nerves and muscles, and in this way increases the circulation.

A WHOLE YEAR FOR $1.00

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1 00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not as creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. This is a good copy to start with. We'll save an extra one until Monday. Yes?

Ira Smith, wife and Mrs. Bice met with an accident, last Saturday night, while on their way to town. It seems as though two rigs tried to pass at the east side of the river bridge and Mr. Smith's horse ran their rig astride the banisters and threw them out inflicting severe injuries on the women while Mr. Smith was injured on the face. Dr. Shook dressed the wounds and several bruises were found. It will be remembered that some two years ago Mrs. Bice received a broken limb and the same limb was injured again. It is hoped that nothing serious may result.

All She Could Do in an Hour.

"Please state to the Court exactly what you did between eight and nine o'clock on Wednesday morning," said a lawyer to a delicate looking little woman of Spencerville on the witness stand. "Well, she said, after a moment's reflection, "I washed my two children and got them ready for school, and sewed a button on Johnny's coat, and mended Nellie's dress. Then I tidied up my sitting room and made two beds and watered my house plants and glanced over the morning paper. Then I dusted my parlor and set things to rights in it and washed some lamp chimneys and combed my baby's hair and sewed a button on her little shoes and then I swept out my front entry and brushed and put away the children's Sunday clothes and wrote a note to Johnny's teacher asking her to excuse him for not being to school on Friday. Then I fed my canary bird and cleaned off the breakfast table and gave the grocery man an order and swept off the back porch and then I sat down and rested a few minutes before the clock struck nine. That's all." "All!" said the dazed lawyer. "Excuse me, judge; I must get my breath before I call the next witness."

Held Institute.

A Preliminary Institute was held at Spencerville School House last Saturday, many teachers besides Trustee Fetters, were present. The A. M. was taken up by Supt. Coe. He spoke of many things which patronage would be pleased to know, especially the items on a leaflet which every teacher received, a code of Respectory Laws—viz:

1. That elegant language must be used.
2. That tobacco was intolerable.

It was said to be indecent for lady teachers to attend bowling alleys: but very right for the he teacher to smoke or chew, if "the poor to be walloped", boy did not see him. And of course, he would, most likely.

That patrons were to blame for indecent writings or actions on the part of a pupil, (if so, then, when the Naked King appears in the imagery of your Fourth Grade Child, you my dear patron will be to blame! "if somebody is unfit for their good post."

It was said, that the patrons thought more of their "Porkers" than their other products, (my child of course) (and yours.)

—Better ask the patrons about that matter.) It was inferred that a better class of teachers were in vogue: but yet, "the same old mule is in the same old stahl, E-Au—E-Au." A. S.

Chinese Secret Societies in Java.

An ordinance just passed in Java falls heavily upon Chinese societies in Netherlands, India. A fine of 100 guilders or three months rigorous imprisonment is the penalty for every Chinaman found in possession of secret society documents or emblems or caught wearing the distinguishing marks of these organizations.

Those who preside over the meetings of such societies, allow meetings to be held in their houses or fail to inform the authorities of such gatherings being held incur similar penalties. The latter also fall upon Chinamen who recruit for these societies, supply them with money or give them help in any way.

MUST BELIEVE IT.

Every Reader Will Concede the Truth of This Statement.

One who suffers with backache or any form of kidney trouble wants a cure, not merely temporary benefit.

Rev. Maxwell S. Rowland, of Toms River, N. J., makes a statement in this connection that is worth attention. Says he: "I was suddenly taken with an attack of kidney trouble, had severe pains in my back and loins and was generally run down. Doctors were not helping me so I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They brought me prompt relief, and as I continued taking them the pains in my back disappeared and the kidneys were restored to normal condition."

"What relic of your late husband do you cherish the most?"

"His shoes."

"How strange! And why?"

"Because I may find some one to fill them."

A Good Reason.

"Why do you want to sit in my lap, Lieschen; why not on the bench?"

"Because, auntie, I think the bench has just been painted!"—Fliegende Blatter.

'Twas the Same Thing.

Merchant—Here, what I advertised for is a piano mover, and you say you're a piano finisher.

Applicant—Well, that's because I generally finish them when I move them.

Too Uncertain.

The traveling salesman had looked at Mrs. Dolan's third-floor back, and found it neat and attractive. "I'll take it for two months," he said, "and I always pay as I go. I suppose that will suit you?"

"It will not," said Mrs. Dolan, firmly. "There's times I'm not in the house whin folks goes; they're liable to be called off suddint whin I'm out o' the way. My boarders pays whin they come—or else they don't come."—Youth's Companion.

So He Does.

"Do you believe tough beef is as good for a person as tender beef?"

Man in Woman's Work.

Hubby—And what looks more awkward than to see a woman stepping off a street car?

Wifey—I can tell you.

Hubby—What?

The Beauties of Nature.

"I suppose you get to admire a great deal of delightful scenery while touring in your car?"

"Yes, every time we have a breakdown."

Diplomatic Mike.

Mike—Sure.

Hungry Higgins—How did youse do it?

Mike—When she opened de door I ses, "Is your mother in, miss?"

Up-to-Date.

Lady—But poverty is no excuse for being dirty. Do you never wash your face?

Tramp (with an injured air)—Pardon me, lady, but I've adopted this 'ere dry-cleanin' process as bein' more 'ealthy an' 'i-geenic.—Punch.

Miss Smart—I am so glad to hear it, count. Most noblemen I have met are always broken.

He Was Great.

"Yes, he's a great thinker, isn't he?"

"Yes. He thinks he knows it all."—Detroit Free Press.

How She Sang.

A maid was brushing her mistress' hair when she mentioned that she heard Miss Evans sing in the parlor the night before.

"And how did you like it?" asked the mistress.

"Oh, mum!" exclaimed the maid, "it wus beautiful! She sung just as if she was gargling!"—Woman's Home Companion.

A Luxury.

"If you were worth a million you could afford to indulge in luxuries."

"Yep, I could afford to marry for love, then."—Houston Post.

Human vs. Dog Nature.

"Why do you keep that dog tied? There's no danger that he'll run away."

"That's just it. I keep him tied, in the hope that he will want to run away."

There's a Reason.

Binks—If you ever intend to marry pick out a woman who can swim.

Jinks—Why?

Binks—She can keep her mouth closed.

Domestic Amenities.

Wife—So nice of you, dear, to be interested in the troubles of your friends.—Boston Transcript.

She Took a Pair.

"How much are these shoes?" asked the lady who had the reputation of being a keep shopper.

"Those shoes are not for sale," replied the salesman, who had something of a reputation, too; "we're giving them away with every pair of shoe laces at $3.50."—Judge.

A DREADED DUTY.

Soldiers Hate the Job of Guarding Military Prisoners.

The grimmest phase of the soldier boys' life is prison duty—the guarding of military prisoners. These are divided into two classes:

First—Garrison prisoners, who have received light sentences for minor breaches of discipline and will be returned to duty in a short time.

Second—Military convicts, who for attempted desertion or other serious military crimes have been dishonorably discharged by order of a court martial and have received sentences varying from a few months to several years' confinement at hard labor, according to the gravity of the offense. Into their ranks the vicious element, or those who hold their oath of enlistment too lightly, eventually find their way.

Every morning at fatigue call the prisoners are drawn up in a long line in front of the guard house and surrounded by a chain of sentries. The sombre prison garb of the "generals"—military convicts were formerly known as "general prisoners"—is marked with gigantic capital "P's," which render them conspicuous and therefore make escape more difficult.

Some are evil-looking fellows with long and unsavory records. Doubtless many have "done time" more than once in civil prisons before evading the watchfulness of the recruiting officer and finding their way into the army. Others are rosy-cheeked lads who in all probability have yet to see their twenty-first birthday, and in nine cases out of ten the charge against them is desertion. Homesickness or restlessness under military restraint and discipline have led them into the rash act, the heavy penalties of which they may not have fully realized.

In groups of twos and threes and guarded by sentries with loaded rifles these men perform most of the disagreeable work and menial labor about the army post, which is highly varied in character and may consist of anything from sprinkling the flower beds on the officers' lawn to digging ditches for monster sewer pipes. Although they generally perform their enforced tasks cheerfully, occasionally a particularly disagreeable piece of work causes a miniature strike and a dozen men may "buck"—that is, refuse to work.

Insurance Misinformation.

If one is to believe all the statements made by applicants for life insurance policies, some families have been distinguished by very curious, not to say inexplicable, happenings. The British Medical Journal selects a few of the most amusing blunders:

Mother died in infancy.

Father went to bed feeling well, and the next morning he woke up dead.

Grandfather died suddenly at the age of 103. Up to this time he bid fair to reach a ripe old age.

Applicant does not know anything about maternal posterity, except that they died at an advanced age.

Applicant does not know cause of mother's death, but states that she fully recovered from her last illness.

Applicant has never been fatally sick.

Father died suddenly; nothing serious.

Applicant's brother, who was an infant, died when he was a mere child.

Applicant's fraternal parents died when he was a child.

Mother's last illness was caused from chronic rheumatism, but she was cured before death.

In the Sunset of Life.

We all find life is very short, but if we give the last ten years of our lives in solving the innumerable problems that are around us, we shall feel the better for it wherever we go afterward.—Countess of Warwick.

Should it come to a vote, every married man would cast his ballot to suppress the fashion magazines.

NEW VEGETABLES.

Efforts are being made to introduce in the Southern States certain useful vegetables hitherto unknown to this country, which are known in tropical regions as the yautia, the dasheen and the taro. The last named is already familiar as an ornamental plant, under the name of caladium or "elephant's ear." All three are nearly related, and their starchy, edible roots are highly prized in warm lattitudes.

These roots, indeed, resemble the common potato in composition and in flavor. That of the yautia, for example, when properly cooked, is not easily distinguished from the "Irish" tuber. It is sometimes white, sometimes red and sometimes yellow, according to variety. So rich is it in starch that it yields nearly one-third of its weight in flour, and its leaves are prepared for the table after the manner of spinach.

One reason why it is deemed desirable to introduce these plants is that they flourish in land that is too wet for ordinary crops. It has been ascertained that they will grow well in this country as far north as the Carolinas. Not only are they useful by reason of their edible qualities, but their high yield of starch affords a prospect of great usefulness fer them as stock feed or in the production of alcohol.

The yautia seems to have been originally native to the West Indies. It was cultivated by the aborigines in those parts centuries before Columbus discovered America. Even to the present day its roots, which look somewhat like sweet potatoes, are raised on the islands of that archipelago in great quantities, the production often reaching ten tons to the acre. Did the white potato not exist they would take the place of it admirably.

You'll have to hand it to the gossips. If it wasn't for them we would all be tempted to be a little more careless.

HIS FIRST AFTERNOON OFF.

He Wanted to Go to the Ball Game, but He Didn't Find Time.

"I'm so glad, dear, the Saturday half holidays have begun. Would you mind just shaking the sewing room rug out of the window? The woman that was in to help me do the cleaning to-day couldn't stay——"

"Well, who's stopping you? I don't see why you can't give me a lift with the rug. Then when you get that through I think you might shell the peas for dinner this evening. It is a simple little thing for you to do. And Eddie says the pedal of his velocipede is twisted in some way and he can't ride it. You are very handy with tools and——"

"But when will I get a chance to go to the ball——"

"Now, don't worry about that. You will get there if you have a little patience. Don't forget what I have asked. Then will you run around to the tailor and get your suit? I took it around for him to press. It is perfectly good and will save you from wearing out your new one. And while you are out you might as well order the vegetables for dinner. Then you can tell the butcher that we want a pair of broilers for to-morrow, split up the back and not sent until 10 o'clock, as his icebox will keep them fresher than ours."

"It's nearly 2 o'clock now. I want to go——"

"Well, I'm not preventing you. And you've got to see about the dining-room screen."

"I tell you I want——"

"Go! Go ahead! Just as soon as you have done what I asked you and have gone over to the dairy to ask the man to save me a pint of cream for to-morrow, you can get out. While you are about it I see nothing to interfere with your getting a new coffee machine. The one we have is worn out. I would get it myself but I can't get down to the avenue this afternoon ——"

"But where are you going?"

"Now, there you go. You have an afternoon off and I knew you would want to go to the game, so I decided to take the children up to Bronx Park to see the animals."

"Where's the monkey wrench? Where's the velocipede? I'll fix it. And if you want me to get dinner I will."

"You will? Oh, you dear!"

And when she got back he had done nearly everything she told him, the New York Press says. But she wondered why he had changed his mind about going to the game.

A TRANSFORMATION SCENE.

Some one says, "Unhappy is the man who cannot fool." He who cannot descend from his pedestal of greatness and play is indeed to be pitied. The change from rollicking gaiety to awesome dignity is not always so abrupt nor so plainly seen, however, as that described by William Toynbee, in "Mr. Pitt in Private Life," an article published in the Westminster Review.

That great statesman, upon whose word so many tremendous issues hung, was in the habit of retiring to his country-house for seasons of relaxation. There he dropped his character of august prime minister and became for the time a romping schoolboy.

One day he had been skylarking with his young friends. He rushed into every fray with the ardor of the youngest present. When the fun was most furious, a servant entered the room and informed the prime minister, who was coatless and embellished with burnt cork, that Lords Hawkesbury and Castlereagh had arrived from London on important business.

"Ask them to wait," remarked Pitt, and proceeded with the game. When that was finished, Pitt said that he must attend to two noble lords, and retired to his dressing-room to repair damages. Presently he returned, and a remarkable transformation took place.

Standing in the middle of the room, the prime minister drew himself up to full height of unapproachable dignity. To the astonishment of the young people present, the two lords came into the room almost on their hands and knees, and with abject obsequiousness explained the object of their visit.

Mr. Pitt listened with an air of distant hateur, and with a sentence of two dismissed his noble guests.

Speech Before a Dressing.

Willie—Yes, uncle; but I'm only learning, same as you.

Uncle George—Same as me? What do you mean?

Willie—Why, dad was telling us only yesterday as how you had an awful job to keep your head above water.—The Sketch.

Literature the Last Resort.

People resort to literature exactly in proportion as they are unable to make a living any other way. Literature as a symptom of financial despair has received far too little consideration at the hands of economists.—Philadelphia Evening Post.

AFTER SUFFERING TEN YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MARLTON, N.J.—I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given me new life.

I suffered for ten years with serious female troubles, inflammation, ulceration, indigestion, nervousness, and could not sleep. Doctors gave me up, as they said my troubles were chronic. I was in despair, and did not care whether I lived or died, when I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so I began to take it, and am well again and relieved of all my suffering."—Mrs. GEORGE JORDY, Box 40, Marlton, N.J.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

Why He Could Not Talk.

A commuter, says a writer in the New York Times, hired a Swedish carpenter to repair some blinds on the outside of his house. During the day the commuter's wife looked after things, and once or twice came out to see if the man was getting on all right.

"Is there anything you need, Mr. Swenson?" she asked, on her second trip.

The carpenter gulped once or twice but made no reply. The lady repeated the question.

Again a gulp and no answer.

"Why don't you answer me, sir?" said the lady, indignantly.

The Swede turned and looked down at her gravely.

"My mout is full of sgrews," he said. "I cannot speag undil I svaller some!"

A Poor Motto.

"To say that the Japanese is only a living piece of commercialism is all wrong," he declared. "The Japanese is chivalrous and kind. But too often men accuse him of living up literally to the Yorkshire motto. The selfish and despicable motto adopted by a certain hard, narrow type of Yorkshireman is, you know:

"See all, hear all, and say nowt,

ROBERT ADAM.

He Created a New Era in English Architecture.

Robert Adam (1728-92) was to English architecture what Benvenuto Cellini was to that of Italy. He was architect to the King, beloved at court, a member of Parliament, and it was said of him that he "could not help adorning all that he touched." Those of the English people who dwell in Adam houses prize them as rare jewels.

Adam introduced into English architecture a lightness, delicacy of touch and charm of proportion which it had never before possessed and which gave his name to that splendid period of architecture the style of which lasted over a century. Everything in a house, from the panel in a ceiling to the vases and gilt wood tripods and branches for lights, from hangings at the windows to a woman's hairpin holder, Adam designed himself.

Adam got his rich, beautiful and distinctive style from the ruins of the Emperor Diocletian, at Spalato. As a finish to interiors he conceived the idea of using figures in relief upon walls, colored and adorned according to Raphael's Stanze painted fiat upon the walls of the Vatican. His idea was as bold as its result was beautiful. He also adopted Pompeiian styles for decoration.

"Adam was artist as well as architect, and his walls, ceilings and interior adornments are marvels of harmonious colors," says an architect. "He employed no less personages than Angelica Kaufman and Zucchi to paint many of the panels and medallions let into his ceilings, and it was his habit to have carpets woven to match the pattern overhead and harmonize with the color there employed. The keynote of Adam's style is 'movement,' combined with perfect artistic fitness, and it is peculiar for its grace and stateliness."—New York Tribune.

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE

Agrees with Him About Food.

A trained nurse says: "In the practice of my profession I have found so many points in favor of Grape-Nuts food that I unhesitatingly recommend it to all my patients.

"It is delicate and pleasing to the palate (an essential in food for the sick) and can be adapted to all ages, being softened with milk or cream for babies or the aged when deficiency of teeth renders mastication impossible. For fever patients or those on liquid diet I find 'Grape-Nuts and albumen water very nourishing and refreshing.'

"This recipe is my own idea and is made as follows: Soak a teaspoonful of Grape-Nuts in a glass of water for an hour, strain and serve with the beaten white of an egg and a spoonful of fruit juice for flavouring. This affords a great deal of nourishment that even the weakest stomachs can assimilate without any distress.

"My husband is a physician and he uses Grape-Nuts himself and orders it many times for his patients.

"Personally I regard a dish of Grape-nuts with fresh or stewed fruit as the ideal breakfast for anyone—well or sick."

In any case of stomach trouble, nervous prostration or brain fag—a 10-day trial of Grape-Nuts will work wonders toward nourishing and rebuilding and in this way ending the trouble.

"There's a Reason," and trial proves.

MATHIAS AND HIRAM.

Two Examples of the Henpecked Husband Are Contrasted.

From the little French village of Vault-les-Francois comes a recent variation on the oft-celebrated theme of th henpecked husband. Included this year in the program of festivities and sports for Shrove Tuesday was a competition for husbands. There was a fine fat pig as a prize to be awarded to the man who should prove himself, to the satisfaction of a jury, most completely the master of his own house.

There were many entries, and it was only after searching interrogatory and long deliberation that the award was made to a certain big, bluff, domineering fellow by the name of Mathias.

So sure had Mathias been of victory that he had brought with him a sack to contain his prize. Into this he proudly popped the pig, and started for home. But the quarters were close and piggy was vigorous. There was a violent heaving, squealing and rending; the pig tore open the sack, escaped, and took refuge beneath the platform upon which the jury was still sitting.

"Couldn't you have brought a stronger sack?" asked the mayor, impatiently, annoyed by the hubbub.

"I wanted to bring the new one," apologized Mathias, "but my confounded wife, Mathilde, wouldn't let me."

As one man, the jury rose and rescinded its verdict, and it was a sadly crestfallen Mathias who went pigless home to his Mathilde.

Perhaps, had he possessed as ready a tongue as a certain ne'er-do-well Hiram of old Hentley, he would have been able to turn his defeat once more to victory. Hiram was deservedly henpecked; yet the theme upon which he oftenest expatiated was the rightful pre-eminence of man over woman. He cited his own household as an example.

"Elviry, she ain't so smooth-tongued as some women be," he once declared, complacently, "but words ain't anythin', it's deeds; and Elviry she knows a wife's juty, and she does it. Never crosses me about a thing. Does anythin' I ask. Gratifies my every wish. Thinks up things I ain't been clever enough to know I wanted, even——"

"And sees to it I have 'em," Hiram went on. "Why, that wife o' mine, she——"

"Hear to that, now—comin', Elviry, comin'!—hear to that, now, will ye!" concluded Hiram, looking round him with genial triumph. "I ain't had a mite of exercise these three days, and Elviry she knows 'tain't good for me. I'd ha' forgotten all about needin' any; but not Elviry, no, sir! There ain't sech another consid'rate, dutiful, devoted wife in all Hentley, if I do say it, as my—comin'! comin'! Yes, here I be, Elviry!"—Youth's Companion.

ORIGIN OF "O. K."

Term Came Into General Use in America About 1828.

How many of the countless thousands of persons who daily use the popular abbreviations "O. K." ever give a thought to its origin? Yet a very interesting story is told of its birth and at one time "O. K." was the slogan of a Presidential campaign. There are, in fact, several explanations of its meaning, and quite a few legends are told to explain it.

It is plausibly held that in early colonial days the best rum and tobacco imported came from Aux Cayes, in Santo Domingo. Hence the best of anything came to be known locally as Aux Cayes, or O. K. The term did not, however, pass into general use until the Presidential campaign of 1828, when the supposed illiteracy of Andrew Jackson, the Democratic candidate, was the stock in trade of his Whig opponents. Seba Smith, the humorist, writing under the name of Major Jack Downing, started the story that Jackson indorsed his paper O. K. under the impression that they formed the initials of "Oil Korrect."

The Laborer and His Hire.

At a conference in New York of foreign missions boards reference was made to the increased cost of living of missionaries on home leave, which made it harder for them to get along than if they stayed in their foreign field of labor.

"Why," said the speaker, "a missionary must travel decently, and that reminds me of a story of Mr. Spurgeon and a fellow clergyman. The two were just starting on a railway journey and Mr. Spurgeon's friend showed him a second class ticket.

"'See,' said he, 'what good care I take of the Lord's money.'

"'See,' said Mr. Spurgeon, bringing out a first class ticket, 'what good care I take of the Lord's servant.'"—Youth's Companion.

COVERED WITH HIVES.

Child a Mass of Dreadful Sore, Itching, Irritating Humor for Two Months—Little Sufferer in Terrible Plight—Cured by Cuticura.

"My six year old daughter had the dreadful disease called hives for two months. She became affected by playing with children who had it. By scratching she caused large sores which were irritating. Her body was a complete sore, but it was worse on her arms and back. We employed a physician who left medicine, but it did not help her and I tried several remedies, but without avail. Seeing the Cuticura Remedies advertised, I thought I would try them. I gave her a hot bath daily with Cuticura Soap and anointed her body with Cuticura Ointment. Swinburne's Idea of "Cleopatra."

"Cleopatra," which is to be sold with other Swinburne rarities at Sotheby's, was described by the poet in a letter to T. J. Wise, as a "trumpery ephemeral," and he added, "George Meredith, I remember, strongly (and no doubt justly) remonstrated with me for producing such a farrago of the most obvious commonplaces of my ordinary style—as it was in '66, or thereabouts. The verses were never intended for reproduction or for preservation, but simply scribbled off as fast as might be to oblige a friend whose work I admired." Mr. Wise, however, was quite content to pay 15 guineas for a coup of the poem, on which Swinburne remarked: "If I were not a bit of a bibliomaniac myself, I should be shocked to think of your wasting good money on it."—London Chronicle.

One Thousand Horse Power Gas Engine.

It is difficult to say when a gas engine becomes a large gas engine. A few years ago 300 horse power was considered the starting point, then 500 horse power, and now in a recent article published in a German paper 1,000 horse power seems to be taken as the maximum. The list gives the names of twenty-eight makers, nineteen on the continent, four in England and five in the United States. Altogether it adds up a total of 628 engines, giving a combined output of 1,035,709, or more than 1,000,000 horse power in large units.

Hamlins Wizard Oil is over fifty years old and, like an old friend, it can be depended upon just as surely as the family doctor who may be miles away.

A Town of Fresh Surprise.

Meissen is a town of crooked streets that wind about delightfully in its depths and suddenly climb the heights on each hand—a town with a fresh surprise of architecture, of costume or of landscape at every turn. One is constantly finding some landing whence ancient walled steps shoot up on the one hand to the burg and down on the other hand to the river.—From Robert Haven's Schauffler's "Romantic Germany," in Cenutry.

Match Facts.

John Walker, an English chemist, was experimenting in 1827 with an inflammable mixture for use on shipboard. One day he happened to rub a stick dipped in this mixture across a table. There was a report, the stick took fire, and, because John Walker was no fool, the match was born.

John Walker, the match's inventor, put his wonderful invention on the market in April, 1827. The Walker match was as big as a lead pencil, and it cost a shilling a box. Because it could only be lighted by drawing it through a piece of sandpaper folded in two, the Holden match supplanted it in 1833. The Holden was a lucifer; it ignited more easily than the Walker; so it put the Walker out of business. Sweden is to-day the home of the match industry, and exports annually about 2,000,000,000 boxes of incomparable matches.

Character Indispensable.

Talent helps a man to obtain success, but it is character which secures it for him. A man will succeed with character and very little talent, and will never succeed without character, whatever talent he may have at his disposal.—Max O'Rell.

Might Be Worse.

Sandy Pikes—Oh, cheer up! Suppose the rest of it was soap instead of land.—Ally Sloper.

Youngest Great-Grandmother.

Mme. Edna Bertonelle, a seamstress in the Quartier Montmartre, Paris, is held to be the youngest great-grandmother in the world. She was married at the age of 14, and her first child, a girl, married at the same early age. When Edna was 31 she was a grandmother. Her grandson married at 17 a young woman a few days his junior. On her forty-eighth birthday Mme. Bertonelle was a great-grandmother.

Gold and Silver Trophy For the Best Ear of Corn

To be known as the W. K. KELLOGG National Corn Trophy—To be Given at the National Corn Exposition, OMAHA, Neb., December 6 to 18, 1909.

You'll Have to Tie it Down

—But is it any wonder? There never was a food that so pleased the tastes of the little ones—or so well agreed with them. And the same is true with grown-ups. All are ready and anxious for more before the next meal comes around. It's all in the flavor—the delightful, different flavor that has made a nation of Corn Flake eaters. But this flavor is found only in Kellogg's, the kind that you should ask for and insist on having. Your grocer has it or can get it for you.

KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE CO., Battle Creek, Mich.

For the purpose of encouraging the better breeding in corn for improving the quality, W. K. Kellogg, the President of the Toasted Corn Flake Co., offers a $1000.00 beautiful solid gold and silver trophy to the person growing the best ear of corn in two different seasons, the first season's specimen to be sent to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November, 27th, 1909. This offer is open to every man, woman and child in the United States. It will be judged by the leading corn authority of the world, Prof. P. G. Holden.

A very pleasant surprise was given Rev. J. A. Brown, at his home east of St. Joe on Tuesday evening of this week. It was made to remind him that another year had gone, he had forgotten at the time that it was his birthday. In the evening he had gone to Bible Class as was his usual custom, and on his return home found a large gathering of his church members and neighbors, who showered him with beautiful post cards and other little tokens of respect. The evening was spent in the usual social manner and lunch was served. After which all departed wishing him many more such happy returns.

It will be a matter of news to our readers to know that petition will be circulated in October to be presented to the County Commissioners on November 1st. for a Local Option election, to be held the latter part of November. This is a question of Saloon or No Saloon and it is up to the voters of the county to decide it as a business proposition. Think about the matter and decide as you think right.

On Monday the Waterloo Dawn passed into possession of Ab Kelley who purchased the plant of Karl Gerner. The deal has been on several days. Mr Kelley has placed a Mr. Moffett of Hartford City in charge. We understand that new material will be added immediately and the plant put in first class shape. Mr. Gerner took possession of the Dawn thirteen years ago. It is the opinion of some that Mr. Kelley has a political bee in his bonnet and by this means he can secure free advertising, however the purpose will be revealed later. We wish the new management success.

D. J. Baker accompanied the remains of Melissa Reasoner to Iowa for interment, leaving here Friday forenoon on train No. 17, and arriving at Keswick, Iowa, Saturday, at 11:00 o'clock a. m. Brice Reasoner a brother was on his way from Edmonds, Washington, and not knowing his sister was dead, and not being able to communicate with him was reason for delay in starting. On Friday morning, Mr. Baker received a telegram from him stating that he was at Denver, Colo., and would reach here Sunday. Mr. Baker wired him enroute to go to Keswick, and in about an hour after Mr. Baker arrived at Keswick, Mr. Reasoner phoned from North Webster for someone to come after him. Thus all three of the living brothers and the one living sister was there to attend the funeral which was held Sunday afternoon at Spring Dale church where she was a member. Mr. H. W. Beams prepared the body for burial and Mr. Baker says that at time of burial one week later there was not a particle of odor or discoloration about her body.

Mrs. Jennie White returned last evening from Muncie, where she went as a delegate from St. Joe, to attend the thirty-sixth annual convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. This grand convention was held in Muncie's High St., M. E. church from Oct. 1st to 5th. The enthusiasm was great at every session. There was an average attendance of one thousand at every meeting, 488 voting delegates were present. This was the largest convention of this organization ever held in the state. Reports from Superintendents of 43 different departments of work were given. Allen county delegation asked for the convention for 1910, and it was granted.

Kansas City Stock Yards, Oct. 4, 1909. There was a big trade in stock and feeding cattle here last week, total shipments to the country for the week 1020 cars, containing 29,000 head. Greatest demand all week was for the better class of feeders, and although the supply of this class was large, it was cleaned up closely from day to day. Medium to low grade feeders and stock steers were not quite as brisk in movement as the good feeders, and closed the week 10 to 25 lower, a reduction sufficient to stimulate trade considerably, and to reduce the hold over 2000 head at the close of the week, as compared with number on hand at end of previous week. The run of cattle for the week was heaviest of the season, at 91,000 head, including 13,500 calves. The feature of the stocker and feeder trade last month was the heavy movement to Illinois, feeders from that state taking 1051 car loads, while in September last year they took out only 480 car loads. Total shipments for the month from this point to the country amounted to 3725 cars, same month last year 3218 cars, and for the nine months ending with September this year 13,329 cars, same month last year 12,555 cars. The run today is 20,000 cattle here, much smaller than anticipated, market steady to strong on all kinds. Bulk of the feeders are selling at $4.10 to $4.75, a moderate number of sales at $5.00 to $5.40, most of the stockers $3.25 to $4.25, a few sales at $4.50 to $5.00, stock cows and heifers $2.25 to $3.60, feeding bulls, $2.80 to $4.30, stock calves considerably lower than a week ago, at $3.25 to $4.50. Kansas continues to contribute bulk of the beef steers, at $3.75 to $6.27, but the panhandle, New Mexico and Colorado are sending in more stuff each week, grass beeves from these states at $3.80 to $4.75, cows $2.90 to $3.50, bulls $3.00 to $3.60, veal calves $5.00 to $7.50. Supply of cattle from below the quarantine line here last week was 290 cars, beef steers at $3.50 to $4.25, cows $2.80 to $3.40. J. A. Rickart,

NOT AN EXPERIMENT

Over a Million of Cole's Patented Stoves in Use in America Today.

Readers of this paper should not get the idea that Cole's Hot Blast is in any sense an experiment. It has been proved supreme over all heating stoves by years of use by hundreds of thousands of customers. Their annual output of the famous Cole's Hot Blast from Chicago, the Original, is 60,000 stoves. They are in use in every state of the Union in the homes of capitalists and wage earners, and the most enthusiastic testimonials are received at the factory of the Cole Manufacturing Co. in Chicago every day.

The reason the Cole's Hot Blast is three times over the biggest selling soft coal heater is because the patented features that make it remarkable are controlled by the Cole Manufacturing Co., and, therefore, could not be used on any other stove.

So Cole's Hot Blast is backed by its astounding guarantee only after the manufacturers have proved in thousands of cases absolutely everything they guarantee.

We have a letter from the President of the Cole Manufacturing Co. authorizing us to guarantee every purchaser of Cole's Hot Blast in this way:

Cole's Hot Blast is guaranteed to reduce the fuel bill a third over any lower draft stove of the same size; guaranteed to hold fire from Saturday night until Monday morning; guaranteed to have a smoke proof feed door; guaranteed to remain air tight as long as used; guaranteed to give uniform heat day and night with soft coal, hard coal or lignite; guaranteed to use less hard coal for heating a given space than any base burner with same size fire pot, and guaranteed to heat the rooms from one to three hours in the morning with the fuel put in the day before (which does away with kindling or rebuilding the fire each morning).

This is making a great heater business for us, and should at least induce every reader of this paper to see them before buying their heater this winter.

Planet Only Mere Matter of Thirty Million Miles Away and Is About to Leave Us.

LIFE THERE IS HELD CERTAIN

Astronomers Find Conditions of Atmosphere Like Those of the Earth.

If you wish to find out whether the inhabitants of Mars use English or talk in some sort of outlandish tongue, you had better do it right away or you will have to wait a decade and a half for another chance as good. Mars has been right up close, almost at hand-shaking distance, celestially speaking, and now it is rolling away [illegible] tudes. At Flagstaff Prof. Lowell has had his eye glued to the great telescope, and made nightly contributions to the world's knowledge of Martian conditions.

According to a telegram sent out by him he is able to observe the drying up of the canals in what should correspond to the southern hemisphere of the earth, and is more than ever convinced that this phenomenon is seasonal, and that the canals are artificial irrigation ditches, denoting life on the planet at least as intelligent as that of the earth.

PLAYER CATCHES A HUMAN FLY

Baseball Team Member Prevents Child from Falling Onto Rocks.

Through his ability as an athlete, William Neff, a member of the Slatington (Pa.) baseball team, saved the life of little James Marshall of that town. The child was playing on the brink of a steep embankment, and, losing his foothold, plunged head first down the incline. Neff, who was returning home from work, saw the fall and sprinted under the tumbling lad in time to catch him in his arms, saving the child from being dashed to death on the jagged rocks below.

AWAIT END OF THE WORLD.

Awaiting the end of the world, which they believed would come before 6 o'clock Saturday night, the 300 or more members of "the Latter Reign of the Apostolic Church," who call themselves "Triune Immersionists," and are popularly known as "Holy Rollers," reassembled for a long watch meeting in their Bethel, in West Duxbury, Mass., on the main turnpike between Boston and Plymouth.

Believers only were allowed to enter the Bethel during the afternoon. An exception was made in the case of the Rev. Dr. Dillon Bronson, of Brookline, a Methodist clergyman. When he came out he said the participants were evidently earnest in their beliefs, but that much of their talk was unintelligible. Women, with eyes closed and bodies trembling from excitement, made strange, incoherent utterances, which others, claiming to have the "gift of tongues," translated into religious prophecies. Dr. Bronson said there was much personal hypnotism "in the air," and that he even felt the influence of this hypnotism himself.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

The township of Highland, not far from Aberdeen, S. D., was visited by a destructive tornado, which destroyed half a dozen barns and one house.

A strike of 250 actors and actresses employed at moving picture shows in Chicago marked a demand for $25 weekly for single acts and $50 for doubles.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, in his recently published report, estimated the value of farm products for 1908 at the sensational sum of $7,778,000,000. During the past nine years there has been a gain for agriculturists of $3,061,000,000.

The new grand stand at the State fair grounds in St. Paul will cost $275,000. This is an excess of $75,000 over the appropriation for that purpose. The fair board intimate that the Legislature may be asked for an additional appropriation.

Kansas has two forestry stations, each of which has a considerable number of young trees at the disposal of those who want them. The only cost is the expressage and a guaranty that the receiver will care for them a certain number of years.

Carl Harrington Hanna, grandson of the late Senator Mark Hanna, is working in Cleveland to learn the ore business. He is in the employ of the Mark Hanna company and toils twelve hours daily.

Acting Secretary of Agriculture Hays has issued an order which releases from quarantine, on account of scabies or mange in cattle, that portion of North Dakota lying south and west of the Missouri River.

About 1,500 acres of cotton were planted in California as an experiment with such satisfactory results that it is predicted that cotton will become one of the staple crops of the Imperial valley. The first cotton crop is being harvested now.

Contractor William Horrabin, of Grinnell, Iowa, has begun work on the biggest paving contract ever let in the State of Iowa. It comprises 92,000 square yards and will cover all the business portion and several of the finest residence streets of the city.

MOORS ROUTED IN BLOODY FIGHT

Two Towns Taken by Spaniards and Ring Around Guruga Closing.

The war office in Madrid announces the complete success of the movement in Morocco against the Moors. Both Nador and Zeluan have been occupied. At the latter town there was bloody fighting with large bodies of Moors. The ring around Mount Guruga is now considered almost closed, and the position of the Moors is desperate. Kaid Amas appeared before Gen. Marina, the commander of the Spanish forces, and asked terms of surrender for the tribes intrenched on Mount Guruga. The results of this conference are not known, but it is believed the Moors are ready to submit without conditions. The immediate successful termination of Spain's war against the Moors, which has been going on since July, would be of inestimable advantage to the government of Premier Maura, against which the campaign in Spain is daily becoming more intense among the lower classes. A large section of the upper classes, however, are manifesting warm support of the government. The minister of the interior is being deluged with letters begging him to continue the work of maintaining public order.

U. S. CREW SLAIN BY PIRATES?

Rumor in Manila That Moros Have Captured Revenue Cutter.

Official dispatches from southern Philippine ports say it is rumored that the revenue cutter Sora has been captured by Moro pirates and the crew murdered. The authorities have been unable to secure confirmation of the rumor, although dispatches have been sent to all adjacent points. The Sora was used as a patrol boat against the Moro pirates of the southern archipelago in the general campaign against smuggling inaugurated by the insular government a short time ago. It was commanded by Captain E. A. McGorty and carried a crew of fourteen, all Filipinos. The cutter left Balabac, twenty miles south of Palaman, carrying J. L. Perrine, collector of the port, who was bound to Sandakan, in British North Borneo, to purchase supplies. Nothing has been heard of the vessel since.

TEN BURN IN RAIL WRECK.

Panhandle Passenger Hits St. Paul Caboose and Flames Destroy Car.

Ten men were killed and more than half a dozen injured probably fatally, besides others hurt, at 12:30 o'clock Tuesday morning when a Panhandle passenger train crashed into the rear end of a Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul stock train at 12th and Rockwell streets, Chicago. The killed were stockmen riding in the caboose. One of the dead is H. H. Potter, stockman, home at Diamond, N. D. Six others were in the caboose, which caught fire. Those who lost their lives were burned to death. Six of the bodies were recovered before the flames drove the rescuers back.

Mystery in Girl's Drowning.

Mystery surrounds the finding of the dead body of Kate Patten, a 22-year-old shoe factory employe in the Ohio river at Portsmouth, O. Authorities are investigating. The body was afloat in an eddy near the shore, and in plain view of the girl's home. She was last seen in company with her fiance Wednesday night, but he can throw no light on her death.

M'CLUNG U. S. TREASURER.

Former Yale Athlete Named by Taft to Succeed Treat.

It was announced the other day at the White House in Washington that Lee McClung of Knoxville, Tenn., football star at Yale in his day and now treasurer of Yale University, has been selected as treasurer of the United States to succeed Charles H. Treat. Mr. Treat, whose resignation takes effect Oct. 15, has consented to remain as treasurer until Nov. 21. Although Mr. McClung has been living at New Haven, where he has been doing important work in connection with the finances of Yale, his home is in Knoxville, where his family resides. Mr. McClung was for four years connected with the Southern Railway and also engaged in important business enterprises in Tennessee.

RICH MAN STARVES TO DEATH.

Aged Hermit Is Found Surrounded by Violins He Had Been Making.

The body of Christopher Kuhn, 68 years old, a cabinet maker, was found in his squalid room at 1622 Central avenue, Cincinnati. He had been dead since Sept. 6 when, according to neighbors, he died of starvation. Secreted in the room where many thousands of dollars' worth of securities and deeds to property the hermit owned. A bank book showed he had $1,100 on deposit. Kuhn remained almost constantly in his room making violins. Several valuable instruments were near his body.

The Sporting World

The Harvester, Ed Geers' unbeaten stallion, won the Queen City stakes of $2,000 for 2:09 trotters at Fort Erie in four straight heats.

The performance of Hamburg Belle, 2:01¼, on the grand circuit this season, stamps her the successor of Lou Dillon as queen of the trotting turf.

America won a victory over Germany in the first of a series of boat races for the President Taft and Governor Draper cups at Marblehead, Mass.

The national committee of six have revised the rules for basket ball so as to make the game simpler and easier. Numerous changes are adopted, especially relating to the umpire and scorekeepers.

In the presence of 15,000 people, King James, the even money favorite, easily won the Ocean handicap, one mile, at Sheepshead Bay, defeating Jack Atkin by three lengths. The race was remarkably fast, the mile being run in 1:37 4-5.

There are now two golf champions in the Ainslie family, of Oak Park, Ill. At Exmoor Miss Sallie Ainslie won the women's Chicago championship. Her younger brother, R. Oakes Ainslie, captured the Western junior title at Westward-Ho.

The star jockey, George Odom, who is now a full-fledged owner, recently won a double victory on the course at Sheepshead Bay. Prince Gal and Bonnie Keiso, neglected in the betting, were real surprises to the many witnesses of the races.

MEMORABLE DAY IN NEW YORK'S HISTORY

Hudson-Fulton Celebration Begins with a Great Naval Pageant Fifteen Miles Long.

WARSHIPS THE BIG ATTRACTION

Crowds Are so Great They Can Only Be Estimated—Millions Witness Fireworks at Night.

The boom of sunrise guns aboard the warships in the North River awoke New York Saturday morning to the first day of the celebration, long planned and long awaited, which honors the work of Henry Hudson and Robert Fulton. The river that Hudson found and where Fulton set his steamboat was the place toward which the eyes of 5,000,000 persons turned for the most impressive pageant that ever floated in the New York harbor. A thousand vessels, varying in type from the one-man catboat to the mighty cruiser Inflexible, were there; fifty-seven warships, representing the navies of the United States, Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, Holland, Mexico and Argentina, 450,000 tons of steel, bearing 28,000 officers and men and armed with 1,897 guns.

Would Have Fooled Fulton.

Copies of the Half Moon and Clermont, so faithful to the original models in every detail, that Hudson and Fulton themselves would have been puzzled to find the differences; 120 steamboats and ferryboats, seventy-five steam yachts, seventy-five motor boats, 300 tugs and steam lighters, 400 sailing craft and small launches. All but the greatest and least of these craft met in the upper bay for the parade that escorted the Half Moon and the Clermont up the Hudson. The warships remained at their anchorages.

The day's first spectacle—not counting the grim line of warships in the North River—was the assembling of the naval pageant in the upper bay. Four American cruisers and five submarines were assigned to escort the Half Moon and the Clermont. The Clermont was towed from its anchorage to join the Half Moon. Then, with the escort trailing in the rear, the two little craft which epitomize the celebration cruised along the Brooklyn shore in sight of the spectators. Meanwhile the rest of the parade was assembling and when the Half Moon and Clermont finished their round of the upper bay and sailed into the mouth of the Hudson they fell into line.

It was not until 1 o'clock that the mass straightened out into something like procession formation. The boats moved up the Hudson in double line at a speed of eight miles an hour, but such was the number of participants that the column was nearly fifteen miles long.

At night, with scarcely enough interval to allow the crowds to get dinner, the participants in the gay parade moved over the same route, while the river was gorgeously decorated. By far the most enjoyable feature of the celebration was the fireworks display on the river and the illumination of the vast fleet of war vessels and the city. Millions witnessed the scene.

WED TO AND DESERTED 5 MEN.

Alleged Confession by Wife After Arrest by Sixth Husband.

When he found marriage certificates in his wife's trunk, Frederick Chapman of Kansas City, who believed he had married an unsophisticated country girl, investigated further and discovered what he considered evidence that Mrs. Chapman had not been divorced from her last husband. Chapman confronted his wife with the certificates and she confessed previous alliances. He then preferred a charge of bigamy against her and she was arrested. She is held for trial in the Criminal Court. According to an alleged confession to the prosecuting attorney, Mrs. Chapman admitted having been married to five men besides Chapman, and said she had deserted each of them. Her first husband was Frank Ritter, whom she met in Paola, Kas., ten years ago. Another was James Chaney of Butler, Mo., and Martin Wheeler of Jasper county, Missouri, was the third. Her two other husbands were Kansas City men.

TWO PITTSBURG BANKS CLOSED.

Land and Mercantile Trust Companies in State Examiner's Hands.

The Land Trust Company and the Mercantile Trust Company, both State institutions in Pittsburg, did not open for business Monday. James L. White, State examiner, is temporary receiver for both banks. These companies were consolidated recently, but, it is said, they were unable to carry out the merger and made arrangements Saturday to assign voluntarily to the State banking commission. Officials say the depositors will be paid in full.

2,000 Lost in Mexican Floods.

General Trevino, military commander of the district of northern Mexico, who has directed the distribution of aid through the section swept by the recent flood, estimates the number of lives lost at 2,000. Two thousand bodies were recovered between Monterey and Tampico.

THE PEOPLE'S PULPIT

THE PATTERN ON THE MOUNT.

By Rev. George Elliott, D.D.

As Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, see, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount.—Heb. 8:5.

Life needs a pattern. Every great work begins in a dream; it first lives as a vision of the mind, as a picture on the walls of the soul. One might venture to build a shed for cattle or a sty for swine without calling in an architect or making a plan, but not so with a mansion for man, a palace for a king, or a temple of God.

God gives the pattern for our lives. Upon the prophet's ears there fell out of clouds of glory the divine message; "See that thou make all things after the pattern showed to thee in the mount." We all have set before us tasks not less sacred than that of building shrines to Jehovah. Indeed, our task is akin to that of Moses, to make our lives into living temples where God may dwell.

God has a plan for each of our lives and it is our wisdom to discover it. And so there comes to every earnest soul high moments when He reveals His plan for each of us, moments on mountain top of ideal vision. Conscience gives its vision of duty, imagination its vision of beauty, intellect its vision of truth, and the will its vision of power. In these revealing moments we see as God sees and the great divine patterns shine before us. Our life is a divine thing; it has its roots in the unseen world. There are heavenly ways to do all earthly things. Our work as men is to follow God on the paths of his creative toil. All science is the discovery of God, all art the imitation of God, and all religion is the inspiration of God.

Pattern gives dignity to life. It is our ideals which save us from the vulgar and the commonplace. Culture has this kinship with genius that it gives insight, a certain power to perceive the imminent ideal beneath all things. Other ploughmen beside Robert Burns have overturned a mouse's nest or uprooted a crimson-tipped daisy, but the poet alone saw more than vermin and weeds; he beheld in mouse and flower the tragedy of life, its broken plans, and the fading of all earthly glory. Things suggest more than they are to the awakened soul. The cataract is more than falling water and the mountains than heaped up rocks. We need to get behind the shows of sense with this interpreting vision. It is by this subtle insight that souls leap from flesh to spirit and put on sudden greatness.

The heavenly pattern is given not merely for contemplation but realization. Vision means responsibility. We cannot do without the dream, but we dare not do nothing but dream. We are under bonds to live up to our best. Youth ought to build "castles in the air," but it is weak and wicked to leave them in the air; they are meant to teach us how to build on the ground. Thought is sterile until born in speech, desire is unimportant until it leaps forth as the deathless deed, feeling is folly which does not finally flesh into the living fire of service.

Man stands forever between his visions and his tasks, between heaven and earth, between his ideal conception and an unformed universe. His mission is to subdue the earth by the power of the vision. He is to encircle the earth with the girdle of manhood, which is the law of God. As the builder must follow the plans of the architect, or the orchestra interpret the score of the musician, so should we finish God's creation for him and make it perfect after God's plan which He gives us vision to see.

There is a peril in neglected vision. Earth will offer its poor patterns and we will be tempted to exchange standards. It is easy to degrade an ideal, to pull down the stars and trample them in the mire. It is easy to mistake the scaffolding of life for the real building, earthly and temporal success for eternal character. The vision often fades too soon and we put earth's worst in the place of God's best. Not by dreaming but by fulfilling our dreams shall we fulfill the plans of God. "I slept and dreamed that life was beauty," sang the poet, but "I woke and found that life was duty."

Both the sleeping and the waking thought were true. Life is a dream of beauty to be made real in deeds of duty.

Where shall we look for the supreme Pattern? Not on Sinai, where Moses stood, but on Calvary, where Jesus died, do we see the full ideal. In the Christ we see God's plan after which He is creating all things, and for the shaping of our lives. He is the mountain top where Heaven touches earth, where the divine and human meet and where the real and ideal come together. Great is the majesty of the mystery of love which Jesus Christ reveals. Make your love like His and it will be great enough to satisfy God

SOLICITUDE FOR OTHERS.

By Rev. A. W. Snyder.

We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification, for even Christ pleased not Himself.—Romans xv. 1, 2, 3.

Certain captious critics have objected to religion on the ground that it chiefly has to do with the world to come and not with our present work in this world.

This is untrue. Religion has not chiefly to do with another world. It has chiefly to do with right living now and here, our present duty to ourselves, to God and to our neighbor. We all know that it is not an easy thing to live as we should. At the best it is hard to order our lives aright. We need the aid of everything that can help us to this, and then, even, we will sadly come short of our whole duty to God, to ourselves and to those around us.

We certainly cannot afford to dispense with any help to holiness. To lessen or destroy any assistance to good conduct would be to lessen the safety of society and the value of life. Now, it is certain that "the fear of God" is a restraint and a powerful restraint to many people, as it should be. To lessen or destroy in one's mind all fear of "a certain looking for of judgment" would seriously imperil the security of society. As to this there can be no question. Nor can there be any question that to rob human kind of the consolations of Christianity would be an irreparable loss, as was so pathetically admitted by John Stuart Mill.

No, it would not be better, or anything like as well, for people to give time and thought to temporal affairs without any regard to their eternal well being. It might as well be said that it would be better to bring up a boy without regard to his ever being a man. His while training has reference to the future, and what he is to be and do. Nor should it be planned only with reference to the brief years of his mortal life, but with regard to what he will be forever and ever.

The supposition that Christianity has to do only with the life of the world to come is altogether a mistake. As every one knows, the Bible—and above all, the teachings of Jesus Christ—abounds in good advice as to right living now and here in this world, which if fully put in practice would make human life a thousand times better, safer and sweeter than it is. Take the teaching of the text as an example:

"Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification, for even Christ pleased not Himself."

Think what a blessed thing it would be if every man, woman and child the world over would begin doing this to-day. Why, in such case every house and home on earth would be lightened and sanctified and glorified, and God's will would begin to be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

HOLY, HOLY, HOLY.

By Bishop Heber.

[In even the smallest collection of standard hymns there would certainly be several by Reginald Heber (England, 1783—India, 1826), the author of "Greenland's Icy Mountains." By many authorities the hymn below is thought to be his finest piece of work, and in the services of the churches of all denominations it takes high rank. In fact, in a large number of them the first verse is invariably used as the opening note of praise Sunday mornings. It is always sung to the tune, "Nicea," written expressly for it by Dr. J. B. Dykes.]

Holy, holy, holy! Lord God Almighty!
Early in the morning our song shall rise to thee;
Holy, holy, holy! merciful and mighty!
God in three persons, blessed Trinity.

Holy, holy, holy! all the saints adore thee,
Casting down their golden crowns around the glassy sea;
Cherubim and seraphim falling down before thee,
Which wert, and art, and evermore shalt be.

Holy, holy, holy! though the darkness hide thee,
Though the eye of sinful man thy glory may not see;
Only thou art holy; there is none beside thee,
Perfect in power, in love, and purity.

Holy, holy, holy! Lord God Almighty!
All thy works shall praise thy name, in earth, and sky, and sea;
Holy, holy, holy! merciful and mighty;
God in three persons, blessed Trinity!

SHORT METER SERMONS.

Every life has some great love.

Any wisdom this world has it has from its fools.

Love is eternal because it never worries about dying.

There may be many longing for heaven for whom heaven is not longing.

Faith is to be measured by what it makes you do, not by what it makes you want others to do.

It is always easier to be poetical over the heathen than to be practically helpful to your neighbor.

You never know how much travel you are being saved when life leads you through a dark tunnel.

You may know that a man means his prayer for the kingdom of heaven when he tells the truth in a horse trade.

Great Crops in Western Canada

Canadian Correspondence:

During the early days in the growth of the crop in Western Canada, as well as throughout the ripening and garnering period, there is yearly growing an increasing interest throughout the United States, as to the probable results when harvest is completed. These mean much to the thousands of Americans who have made their home in some one of the three Provinces that form that vast agricultural domain, and is of considerable interest to the friends they have left behind them.

The year 1909 is no disappointment; it will bring comfort and happiness, wealth and luxury to those who are following agriculture as a pursuit in the country now occupying so much of the attention of the world—of this continent in particular. Reports from the grain fields warrant the note of optimism that has been so prominent during the past few months. The crops of wheat, oats and barley have been harvested and it is now safe to speak of results. Throughout the entire grain-growing area of 320,000 square miles there has been a uniform production and a high average. Careful estimates place the yield of spring wheat at 30 bushels per acre, winter wheat at over 40 bushels and oats exceed 50 bushels per acre. Barley also has proved an abundant yield. What will attract the reading public more than volumes of figures will be the fact that those who have been induced through the influence of the Government to accept of 160 acres of free grant land, or, by the persuasion of friends to leave their home State of Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Nebraska or the other States from which people have gone, have done well. Financially, they are in a better position than many of them ever expected to be, and in the matter of health, in social conditions, they have lost nothing.

The columns of Canadian newspapers are filled with accounts of this year's harvest, writers vying with each other in giving the proper coloring to their reports. These make exhilarating reading to the man who has interests in that country. Lethbridge people claim it to be the keystone of Southern Alberta, while Calgary people claim the same for their district. It was in this district that the growing of winter wheat in western Canada originated. Its success there led the farmers east and west of it to experiment and what can now be said of one part may well be said of the whole. In a few years from now these great plains over whose breadth for years roved hundreds of thousands of heads of cattle, following the millions of buffalo that once grazed their grasses, will be a solid grain field covering a territory of over 30,000 square miles, and very little of it but what will yet be worth from $40 to $60 per acre. Already the homestead and pre-emption lands are being well filled.

In the district of Calgary and in Central Alberta, since the report of a year ago was made, the increased acreage in crop has been remarkable. The newly-arrived settler has got to work and with the steam-plow and ordinary methods of farming a large amount of new land is contributing to the wealth of the country. Railroads have projected and built branches which reach out laterally from the main line, and it is now possible to reach parts rich in agricultural possibilities that were not accessible a year ago. Towns have come into existence during that time that will soon become cities; schools and churches have been erected throughout the country districts; telephone lines have been constructed, and an air of prosperity is everywhere apparent. There are to be found those who speak of a "pioneering" life in western Canada, but as one man said, "if this is pioneering I don't for the life of me see what our forefathers had to complain of." He didn't know, though, for the pioneering of his forefathers was discomfort and hardship. The opening up and development of western Canada, with its railroad lines to carry one to almost the uttermost part of it, the telegraph line to flash the news to the other outside world, the telephone to talk to one's neighbor, the daily and weekly mail service which brings and carries letters to the friends in distant parts; the schools headed by college-bred and highly - certificated teachers; the churches manned by brilliant divines; the clubs; the social and festive life; what is there about any of this to give to the man who goes there to make his home the credit of being a pioneer? Nothing! He might as well be in any of the old middle west states.

A few years ago when this country was not as well known as to-day there was some justification in long-winded attempts to educate the reader on conditions there, to tell him of its geographical relation with the United States, but with about 400,000 Americans now there writing back to their friends, with the mass of literature that has been placed in the homes of farmers in every State of the Union and the thousands of columns descriptive of the country that have appeared in newspapers and magazines, it would seem a reflection on the intelligence of the reading public to repeat it. It is not proposed to do so. Its topographical characteristics are divergent. There is the level prairie with its rich deep loam and underlying subsoil, the higher and rolling lands with their groves of timber, the wooded lands rich in soil. The wants of all can be supplied; some want one kind and some another and they can all be suited. The man who wants to put in his steam plow and force the energies of the soil into immediate production can be suited, and so can the man who wishes large tracts for the same purposes, and at the same time enjoy the companionship of the timber. In many parts it is possible to have a hundred mile square of wheat, without a break. A writer says: "We were driven west and north of Moose Jaw through 20 miles of dead ripe wheat, acres of stooks and well-worked summer-fallows. One of these fields would yield 40 bushels to the acre, and another man had oats that would yield 90 or 100 bushels to the acre. In this district wheat will average 30 to 35 bushels. The conditions were never better and throughout the district the people are assured of a most prosperous year." In the Melfort district, three hundred miles in another direction, we hear of a farmer whose yield of oats will run from 85 to 100 bushels per acre; then traveling over another stretch of three hundred miles the Pipestone district in Manitoba is reached and we learn of more 30 and 40 bushels to the acre crops of wheat. So it will be seen that the splendid crops are not confined to one district, but are general throughout the entire country.

Speaking of his experiences while traveling through the Canadian West, Thomas C. Shotwell, financial Editor of the New York American, said that heretofore he had entertained optimistic views regarding the Canadian railroads and lands, but his trip has convinced him, not only of the soundness of his views, but it also has established the conviction that the great expansion of the next few years will be in Canada's western areas. "I have never seen such wheat," said he.

It takes an army of men to handle the Western Canada crop, and it is estimated that 30,000 people have been brought in this year to assist in the great undertaking; there being excursions from the outside world nearly every day for the past six weeks.

In this article no attention has been given to the growth of flax which has had great attention paid to it in some districts. It is safe to say that in addition to the 130 million bushels of wheat, the 170 million bushels of oats and the 30 million bushels of barley, there will be over two million bushels of flax. The approximate value of all these crops may safely be put at One Hundred and Sixty Million Dollars, as against a total of 118 million dollars in 1908

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"A firmer money market and increasing payments through the banks indicate sustained progress in the business conditions. Trading defaults include none of special importance, but more small storekeepers have failed as a result of unprofitable returns due to high prices.

"Movements of commodities exhibit gains in factory outputs, general merchandise, provisions, live stock and hides, and there is heavier outgo of grain, although marketings declined from the rush of fall seeding and wet weather.

"Lower temperatures stimulated the demand for necessaries here and at the interior, and there is rising activity in the leading retail lines, heavyweight apparel, millinery and footwear being under large absorption. The demand also is strong for food products, furniture, men's furnishings and general dry goods.

"Wholesale houses have a fair attendance of buyers, and there are more mail and road orders for the principal textiles, current orders being influenced by scarcity of needed supplies and advancing costs. The markets for raw materials disclose well-sustained values, and the demands have widened for lumber, wool, leather and minor metals.

"Manufacturing generally makes steady headway, new contracts being notably large in pig iron, steel, wire, electric lines, heavy machinery and hardware. Furniture factories report capacity more largely engaged for the future. The furnaces, mills, car shops and forges enter considerable work for 1910 and the prices obtained are on a more profitable basis of production.

"Other indications of the sustained recovery in the industries are attested by increasing capacity and hands employed. Plans for costly construction in this district disclose no abatement. Earnings of the Chicago steam roads exhibit satisfactory gains, and the coal mining interests derive encouragement from multiplying orders and a better outlook for prices.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 28, against 25 last week, 28 in 1908 and 16 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 11, against 7 last week, 7 in 1908 and 3 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

Trade continues of favorable proportions, demands for all staple lines being noteworthy features, though there is a tone of conservatism in many reports. Shipments are heavy, and in many instances buyers are requesting prompt deliveries. Business on spring account is also of good volume. Retail trade is getting into better shape at many centers, but warm weather has retarded its fullest development.

Commodity prices, both for raw materials and edibles, are generally firm. Collections show improvement. Iron and steel continue active, the characteristic features being heavy buying of pig iron at higher prices, urgent requests for finished goods and increasing outputs of everything.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Sept. 23 were 171, against 198 last week, 267 in the like week of 1908, 166 in 1907, 165 in 1906 and 185 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 37, as against 30 last week and 32 for the like week in 1908.—Bradstreet's.

M'CANN FOUND GUILTY.

Chicago Police Inspector Convicted of Grafting—New Trial Asked.

Police Inspector Edward McCann, charged with "grafting," was found guilty by a jury in Judge Barnes' court in Chicago. Sentence was not pronounced, and will not be until after the hearing of arguments for a new trial. The law provides an indeterminate sentence in prison.

The charges against the inspector in charge of the Desplaines street district were the most sensational which have been aimed against a police official in years. State's Attorney Wayman charged that "graft" aggregating many thousands of dollars had been collected from disorderly houses in return for "protection." The chief witness against McCann was Louis Frank, a Russian immigrant, who, although unable to read or write, has accumulated a fortune of several hundred thousands of dollars in the West Side "tenderloin." Frank testified that he collected the "protection" money from denizens of the tenderloin.

The rate for "protection" was said to be $40 a month. Several checks, each dated a month apart, and calling for that sum, were exhibited in court.

INSPECTOR M'CANN.

A list of women from whom it was charged "protection" money was regularly collected was read in court and was identified by Frank. McCann's defense was that he had suppressed and regulated vice in his district with so rigorous a hand that a conspiracy, headed by Louis Frank, was formed against him.

QUAKE IN CENTRAL ILLINOIS.

Shock Awakens Residents in Region from Peoria South to Ohio River.

A slight earthquake which was felt in Southern and Central Illinois and Indiana and throughout Southwestern Missouri, occurred early Monday. In St. Louis the tremor came at 3:47 o'clock. So far as has been learned little or no damage resulted. The general direction of the shock was west to east, and it was felt more clearly in thinly settled districts. Villages west of St. Louis reported the destruction of a few chimneys.

Reports of the phenomenon were received from all stations on the Mobile and Ohio Railway as far south as Cicero, where the vibrations were from south-southwest to north-northwest. In Madison, Mattoon and other towns in Central Illinois there were shocks at practically the same time. At Springfield, windows and chandeliers were rattled and many persons were awakened. In Peoria residents of the bluffs and the central part of the city were aroused from sleep by the tremor. A dispatch from Decatur says two shocks were felt there, but no damage was done.

Evansville, Ind., was severely shaken. Houses rocked and creaked and pictures on the walls swayed. Many people were awakened by the shock. A rumbling noise accompanied the disturbance. A telegram from Princeton, Ind., says the sky was brilliantly illuminated, while two distinct shocks, each lasting ten seconds, were felt there. A settling of the earth's crust, with the seat of the disturbance many miles distant, is the generally accepted cause of the quake. Earth vibrations lasting for one minute were recorded at 3:45 o'clock at St. Ignasius Observatory, Cleveland.

ADMITS KILLING TWO GIRLS.

Mystery of Kidnaping and Murders at Utica, N. Y., Solved.

The mystery which for many days surrounded the kidnaping of three little Italian children and the murder of two of them in the Eagle street culvert in Utica, N. Y., two weeks ago last Sunday night, was solved the other day, the police say, when they secured a full confession from Theodore Rizzo. Rizzo, he admits, attacked the two little girls, but when they threatened to tell their fathers, he shot them, and the little boy as well, leaving all three for dead. When arraigned before Justice O'Connor, Rizzo collapsed. Examination was then waived and Rizzo was remanded to jail.

Five Years

of Heart Trouble Cured by Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had pains in my left side, and under my shoulder blade, could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath the least exertion would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. When I had taken six bottles I was cured."

MRS. C. C. GORKEY,
Northfield, Va.

If there is fluttering or palpitation it is an indication of a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the heart. It is not necessarily diseased—just weak from over-work. The heart may be weak just the same as the eyes, stomach or other organs. You can make a weak heart strong by taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy. Get a bottle from your druggist, take it according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

Rally Day was fittingly observed Sunday morning by the Lutheran Sunday School. The church was beautifully decorated with farm produce, such as corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, pumpkins, tomatoes, celery and sunflowers. The program given by the children was excellent, the flag drill by the boys was especially fine and shows careful preparation. A short talk was given by Mr. John May, the township president of the Sunday School Association, which was heartily appreciated by those present. They report an attendance of 97 and collection $2.19.

The report that our druggist, F. R. Bowman, has sold his stock of goods to W. L. Wernert of Toledo, Ohio, has come to be a reality. Mr. Wernert came Monday and invoicing was commenced immediately. Mr. Wernert comes to us well recommended, having worked at the business all his life. Mr. Bowman has been in business here for the past twelve years and his efforts to give the people here a first-class store has surely been appreciated and a successful business was the result. While Mr. and Mrs. Bowman are out of the store they intend to live here in their beautiful little home. We most heartily welcome Mr. and Mrs. Wernert to our little city.

Mrs. Eliza Bishop of Auburn, visited friends here a part of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. John Blythe of Hicksville, were guests of Jack Beams and wife, Sunday.

Mrs. Catherine Steward of Garrett, visited her mother, Mrs. W. W. Silberg, part of last week.

Stella Harter of Hall's Corners, will assist Mrs. Cora Hart in her millinery department, this season.

We could have had quite a number more locals this week, if all who knew of news had reported to us. We can't find out everything.

Rural carriers, Henderson and Tyndall, will commence their vacation of fifteen days this week, substitutes Shutt and Rhoads will carry in the meantime.

Furnaces arrived Saturday for Nick Goldsmith, Clyde Rectenwal and John Beams. Jack Beams is doing the furnishing. He has more orders yet to fill and reports a fine trade in them.

Just received a large shipment of men, women and children shoes direct from the factory. They're the kind that's right. Come in to Beams & Co's., store and ask to see them.

The elevators opened their doors Monday morning to the public in general and when the writer was there they seemed to be busy and Mr. Wall Steward informed us that already that morning six loads of grain had been brought in. He paid $1.11 for wheat and 37 cents for oats. The capacity of the bins complete is about 16,000 bushels. The power is furnished by a large Fairbanks-Morse gasoline engine, being located at the west of the elevator in a small house. Mr. Steward will endeavor to treat all customers right and will pay the highest market prices at all times for grains. He don't intend to advance prices in order to get the business but will pay a reasonable price in order to live and let live. See his announcement on this page of THE NEWS.

Aged Lady Passed Away.

Alice Leever Price was born in Clairmont County, Ohio, on November 29, 1831 and departed this life at her home, ½ mile north of Wesley Chapel M. E. church, on September 27, 1909, having reached the age of 77 years, 9 months and 28 days. She was one of the eight children of Louis and Mary Leever, all of which preceeded her in death except one brother, Edward Leever. On March 2, 1854 she was united in marriage to Mahlon M. Price at her old birthplace. To this union was born seven children, three daughters and four sons. Her husband and two daughters preceding her in death. One daughter dying in infancy and the other when a few years old. Her husband departed three years ago.

Eleven years after their marriage, 1865, they moved to the farm where they both died, she proving to be a good helpmate to a prosperous farmer. In her girlhood days she became a Christian and lived an ardent Christian life and was a faithful worker for the Methodist church until her master called her home. She leaves to mourn her death one daughter, Martha M. Driver, four sons, William A., George L., Courtland R. and Louis M. Price, seven grandchildren, two great-grandchildren and a host of friends.

The funeral services were held from the Wesley Chapel M. E. church, Wednesday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock. Rev. D. A. J. Brown of Spencerville, officiating. E. Carlington of Harlan, funeral director. Burial in Scipio cemetery.

Visiting Day.

Mrs. A. was more shocked that amused when, in reply to her question, "Who was at Sunday school this morning;" her 4-year-old daughter, said, "Everybody but Jesus."

"Why, my dear," said Mrs. A., "wherever did you get such an idea;"

"He was out visiting this morning," the little lady confidently said.

"Daughter," said Mrs. A., "who told you such a story?"

"Nobody didn't tell me, mother, but they just kept singing it over and over again: 'Jesus is calling, He's calling to-day.'"—Success Magazine.

Qualifying for the Service.

In his "Memoirs of Eighty Years," Dr. Gordon Hake, who was a nephew of Gen. Charles Gordon, tells how he won the approbation of his uncle, later celebrated as the hero of Khartum. It was by a boyish feat which he learned in his school days. Most boys feel a vaulting ambition at that age, but too few of them in later years fulfil its aims.

I may mention here, in taking leave of my boyhood, that there was a bath at Islington called Peerless Pool, to which in summer the boys of the school were sent to bathe.

It was a large mass of water, oblong in shape, with a wide promenade. There we would spend a whole afternoon, sent there by the authorities when the half-holiday was at hand.

There, to excite the wonder and applause of the other boys, I punished myself by taking the longest run to the water's edge that was obtainable within the enclosure, and by leaping somersault-fashion into the air to a great height and reaching the water in a seated posture.

In doing this I inflicted on myself a punishment equal to that of being flogged.

Being somewhat sheepish at the age of fifteen, I did not stand very high in the estimation of my uncle, General Gordon, while staying with him at Woolwich; but one day he took me down to the Thames to bathe.

There was a platform, probably for the soldiers to jump from into the water. This afforded me a long run, and I resolved on performing my feat.

My uncle was perfectly surprised at it, and often alluded to it with surprise in later years. After this display of my pluck, he was much in favor of my going into the army.

CHILDREN SHOWED IT.

Effect of Their Warm Drink in the Morning.

"A year ago I was a wreck from coffee drinking and was on the point of giving up my position in the school room because of nervousness.

"I was telling a friend about it and she said, 'We drink nothing at meal time but Postum, and it is such a comfort to have something we can enjoy drinking with the children.'

"I was astonished that she would allow the children to drink any kind of coffee, but she said Postum was the most healthful drink in the world for children as well as for older ones, and that the condition of both the children and adults showed that to be a fact.

"My first trial was a failure. The cook boiled it four or five minutes and it tasted so flat that I was in despair but determined to give it one more trial. This time we followed the directions and boiled it fifteen minutes after the boiling began. It was a decided success and I was completely won by its rich, delicious flavor. In a short time I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and kept growing better and better month after month, until now I am perfectly healthy, and do my work in the school room with ease and pleasure. I would not return to the nerve-destroying regular coffee for any money."

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

"Your clothes, too, were torn and covered with mud, as though there had been a struggle. Your watch was gone; your pockets rifled and turned inside out. It was evident that you had been half murdered and then robbed, but the wretches had time to get off, and not a trace of them has ever been seen since."

"They must have been hard up indeed to be reduced to robbing me! I shouldn't have thought I was worth it! I don't remember what money I had; but my watch—an excellent timekeeper—was one of those cheap silver ones. I bought it in the Strand, and I think it cost thirty-five shillings."

"You can remember that? And yet you cannot remember what happened that day, or what the men were like, or how many of them, nor how you traveled down?"

"Not in the very least. I bought the watch last year. I can remember being in London in May—nothing more."

"You do not remember that Lord Netherville's valet met you at Victoria and gave you a message for us?"

"No, I cannot remember it."

"When he came down by the later train, he was in a frightful state of mind about you. You see he believes that you were attacked nistead of him, because he was bringing down a very valuable pearl necklace in his pocket."

"What on earth was Netherville doing with a pearl necklace in his pocket?" inquired Carroll in surprise.

Agatha grew very red indeed, and looked down.

"He was bringing it to me—as a present," she answered at length in a low voice.

"To you? Oh, Agatha, why? But I think I can guess! You are engaged to Netherville?"

"I was for a short tme—I am not now. I have broken it off," she said, falteringly.

"Broken it off! Why, in the name of fortune? Netherville is a capital chap. So you and he were engaged? Well, this is news to me! But, my dear girl, you mustn't really throw him over! this must be seen to. I shall insist upon things being made up. I must write to him."

"Oh, please, please, Rupert, do not do anything of the kind. The whole thing was a mistake, and it is quite, quite over. Pray do not ask me any more. I know I have treated him very badly, but I cannot help that. I could not marry him."

"You women are cruel creatures! You think nothing at all of breaking a man's heart. I confess I cannot understand you, Aggie? Where would you find a better husband, I should like to know?"

"I do not expect to do so. I do not want a husband, I shall never marry," she answered hurriedly, her eyes filling with tears, while she turned her head away so that he should not see.

"Well, I consider you treated him shamefully, so throw him over for no reason."

"I had a reason," she replied almost in a whisper. "I did not love him."

"Bosh!" he replied contemptuously and angrily, "you ought to have found out that sooner, when he first asked you to marry him."

That was all the sympathy Agatha got from him. Miss Carroll came into the drawing-room, and, with a heart aching and smarting with his cold and disapproving words, the poor girl slipper out of the room as her god-mother entered.

"What would he think of me, if he knew what the real reason is?" she cried to herself as she stood alone outside in the hall, "if he knew that it was because I love him, and him only! I always did love him—it was only Netherville's likeness to him that attracted me for a little while, but when he was brought back bleeding and lifeless, and I thought that he was dead—then, then I realized that it is Rupert only whom I love, and that his cousin could never be anything to me! But I—I am no more to Rupert than the wind that blows across the garden. He only thinks of me as a sister. Oh, shall I ever win his love, or warm his cold heart into life?"

"Well, Sir James has gone," she began, cheerfully. "He feels sure that there is no permanent injury to your brain, and that you will regain your memory entirely and perfectly. It will depend probably upon your bodily health and strength. It may come back to you by degrees, or again it may come back to you suddenly—in one moment—or odder still, it may return at first partially, in sort of patches—he likened it to the sun coming through mist—that gives out gleams and then vanishes again before it thoroughly succeeds in sweeping them away before its rays. All that you have to do is to lead a very quiet life, and not increase the pain in your head by worrying yourself over it. After all, unless you could have identified the wretches who attacked you, there is nothing else that it very much matters your having forgotten latterly, is there?"

"I suppose not," then for a few moments he was silent. "Louie, Aggie tells me I was at some place on the river before this happened. What was the name of it?"

"You were staying at an inn—the 'George Inn,' Chatswell; it is a village not far from Abingdon, I believe."

Again Rupert was silent, pondering deeply. The name conveyed no sort of idea to him, and yet his mind could not refrain from groping about in the darkness that enveloped it.

"You came away at an hour's notice," continued Miss Carroll, "because I wrote and asked you to come to us for the Sunday. You left nearly all your belongings behind you, so I telegraphed to the landlord of the inn, and had them sent up to Paddington Station, where Netherville was so obliging as to send his servant to fetch them and take them to his rooms in Victoria street. I knew you would not want them all down here, so I just sent for a few necessaries, and your cousin has given the rest of them house-room till you want them."

"I daresay it's all right," said Rupert, abstractedly. "By the way, Louise," he continued, with more animation, "what is all this about Netherville's having been engaged to Aggie, and her breaking it off. Why did she throw him over? It seems a great pity."

"It is a terrible pity," answered his sister with a sigh. "It was a good match, and I like Lord Netherville. I had never seen him, as you know, before that dreadful night, but he took your accident so much to heart, and was so kind and nice about it all, that I was quite drawn to him."

"What on earth made her change her mind? Do you know?"

"Who can tell?" she answered with a shrug of the shoulders; "girls take all kinds of whims into their heads; they are silly creatures, sometimes they will cry for the moon, and often they throw away their best chances for a mere caprice! Oh, it is no joke to look after a modern young lady, I can tell you!"

"I hate a girl who behaves heartlessly to a good chap for nothing at all!" cried Rupert energetically.

"I don't think Agatha is heartless, she is only extremely foolish," replied Miss Carroll quietly, and the subject was dropped.

CHAPTER IX.

November began. The days were dark and dreary. It rained a great deal; it was not cold, only damp and grey and wretched. The dead leaves were nearly all stripped from the trees, and swirled about in melancholy eddies down the lanes, or lay in dank brown heaps against the hedge-rows. As to the river, it was the most miserable place in the world. All the beauty was drenched out of it, and the only moving thing to be seen on the sullen waters was an occasional barge, laden with wood or coals, dropping slowly down stream, and vanishing again into the gloom of the distant mists. The Paradise was Paradise no longer. It was as though life and youth and beauty were dead, and old age and sorrow alone were left.

One afternoon Irene and her mother walked to a village about two miles from Chatswell—away from the river towards the hills. On their way home it came on to rain in torrents; they had umbrellas, but not waterproof cloaks. The rain dwas very heavy and the wind blew it slangingly against them, so by the time they reached The Cottage they were both drenched to the skin.

"You must change everything at once, Irene, you will catch cold," said Mrs. Garland, and although she was very wet herself, she would not feave her daughter until she had seen with her own eyes that she put on dry clothing, and that she was thoroughly warm. Perhaps she lingered in her own wet garments too long in her daughter's room, or perhaps it was, after all, mainly because of that letter that came the next morning from Lady Garland; Irene never quite knew, but no doubt Mrs. Garland caught a chill in the rain, and the one thing came on the top of the other.

When Irene came downstairs to breakfast the next morning, she found her mother sitting by the table with an open letter in her hands. Her face was deadly pale, and she shook all over, as though she had ague.

"Oh, my child, my child!" wailed Mrs. Garland, "your aunt has seen him—she has spoken to him—there is no longer any doubt about him; he is the most wicked man in the whole world."

It was Irene's turn to tremble and turn pale. She took the letter from her mother's hands and read it.

"At length, my dear Gertrude," wrote Lady Garland, "I am able to tell you something about that man Carroll! My dear, he is even worse than I supposed him to be! In fact, had I not heard it with my own ears I could never have believed in such inhuman cruelty. It happened in the Army and Navy Stores. I was just coming out of the drug department, having been there to get some lozenges for my cough, when I saw a back that seemed familiar to me. Two gentlemen were standing together. Then one of them wished his friend good-bye and went away, the other turned half round, and I saw at once that I was right in my supposition, and that it was Rupert Carroll. Well, nobody can say that I am not a courageous woman—I have always plenty of pluck at my command in an emergency, I flatter myself, so I walked straight up to him.

"'I wish to speak to you,' I said, without any further preamble.

"Mr. Carroll turned round, took off his hat, and remained staring at me. He did not even change color—he only put on an air of surprise.

"'I wish to speak to you about your conduct to my niece,' I said.

"'Your niece, madam?' he replied, with an air of unconcern, 'and who, pray, is your niece?'

"'My niece, Miss Garland, sir,' I answered, my temper rising at his coolness, 'whose affections you have trifled with for your own amusement, and whom you have basely deserted without a word of explanation.'

"'My dear madam, I never heard of the lady in my life,' this finished scoundrel had the insolence to reply.

"'Never heard of Mrs. Garland and her daughter?' I cried, with hot indignation. 'Have you forgotten the house where you were welcomed with such warm hospitality and where you were treated with every kindness? a kindness you repaid by deceit and base ingratitude, making love to Miss Garland without her mother's knowledge and consent, and then leaving her without a word or a sign when you were tired of her?'

"Then this shameless villain actually laughed, laughed in my face, Gertrude!

"'I think you must be mad, my good woman!' he actually dared to call me that! his 'good woman' indeed!

"'I never heard of Mrs. Garland or Miss Garland. I never received any kindness or hospitality from them nor did I ever make love to either lady in my life. I beg that you will not annoy me any further by these absurd accusations, or else I must request the authorities here to remove you from the place.'

"My dear, after that—I went away—positively crushed. I pass over his insolence myself—but that he should have denied all knowledge of you and of poor dear Irene, seems to me to surpass everything that I have ever heard in my life concerning the duplicity and wickedness of man—and that is saying a good deal!"

"Mamma, do you think Aunt Anna can have made any mistake?" said Irene at length when she had read this letter carefully all through—"she ought never to have mentioned my name—never! It was horribly bad taste of her, but still I cannot help thinking that she may have made some blunder. Perhaps——"

She never finished the sentence. She looked up across the table at her mother, and was horrified to see her face drawn and contracted with pain.

"Mamma darling, you are ill!" she cried as she flew to the bell—Mrs. Garland was gasping for breath.

"It—it—is only a stitch—I think!" but she held her hands clutched clutched against her side and could hardly bring the words out, and she shivered from head to foot.

Irene put her to bed and sent for the doctor. It was acute inflammation of the lungs, brought on no doubt by the wetting of the previous day, and aggravated possibly into active illness by the shock of Lady Garland's letter.

She was ill for nine days, and all through those long days and nights when Irene watched constantly by her bedside, the poor lady continued to bemoan herself over her daughter's unhappy love affair. In her sensible hours she would weep and pity her child—but in her delirium she would start up in bed and revile the man who had deserted her daughter and had even denied all knowledge of her. After a few days, these frenzied paroxysms wore themselves out, and a still more alarming reaction set in. The fever left Mrs. Garland spent with weakness and absolutely reduced to the lowest ebb.

"If we could have kept her mind quiet," the doctor said to her heart-broken daughter, "I might have pulled her through, but this distressing trouble, my dear Miss Garland, has no doubt aggravated the fever and so left her with no strength to fight her battle for her life. Now, I must honestly own to you that I have but little hope."

The poor lady sank rapidly. The ravages of the disease added to the ravages of fever had left her prostrate. On the evening of the ninth day she died.

Just before the last moment came, a little flicker of life awoke in her. She beckoned to her child to stoop her face towards her so that she might hear her feeble words. Choking with sobs Irene obeyed her.

"You must go to Aunt Anna," said the voiceless whisper—"write to her—your home must be with her—promise me—there is no one else."

Irene promised—she kissed her mother passionately, her hot tears rained down upon the dying woman's pallid face. Irene was alone in the world. Then came the nightmare that follows upon the death of our dear ones.

When anyone has offended me, I try to raise my soul so high that the offense cannot reach it.—Descartes

JOLLY JOKER

Fred—Why is she so popular? Arthur—A light hurts her eyes.—Truth.

Benham—In every sense of the word. Mrs. Benham—There isn't any sense in your words.—Judge.

Patience—And was the judge considerate? Patrice—Very; he asked my age before he swore me!

Passenger—Is this ticket good to stop off? Conductor—Yes'm. But it won't be good to git on again.

"Going up to hear that lecture on appendicitis to-day?" "Naw. I'm tired of these organ recitals."—Cornell Widow.

Frank—Were you actually surprised, as you said, when I proposed? May—Yes, indeed; I really had all but given you up!—Vogue.

"Did you ever gamble, ma?" "Only once, my son." "And when was that?" "When I married your father."—Princeton Gazette.

"You accuse this aviator of trespassing in your garden?" "Yes, judge; I caught him among my air currents."—New York Herald.

He (just rejected)—I shall never marry now. She—Foolish man! Why not? He—If you won't have me, who will?—Boston Transcript.

"Everybody ought to marry for love." "That's all right in theory." "Well?" "The trouble is that most of us can't afford it."—Pittsburg Post.

"I would like to help you, my poor man, but I haven't much work to give you." "That'll suit me down to the ground, ma'am; I don't want much.—Sourire.

He—You know, Clara, about the diamond engagement ring I want to give you, diamonds have gone up so—— She—Oh, you dear boy! How sweet of you to want to make sacrifices to prove your love!—Baltimore American.

"I admit I have the fault you mention," said the conceited man, self-complacently, "but it's the only fault I have, and it's a small one." "Yes," replied the candid friend, "just like the small hole that makes a plugged nickel no good."

She (pouting over hubby's charge of extravagance)—If I hadn't lost my head when you proposed, I'd never married you. He—Lost your head! And you say that in the face of this milliner's bill. Great Scott!—Boston Transcript.

"Captain, is there no way in which the ship may be saved?" "None at all, sir, we are going to the bottom; but I should not worry about the ship, sir, if I were you—she is fully insured. You'd better find a life belt.—Exchange.

"Mamma," inquired little Waldo of Boston, who was spending the winter in Florida, "what is that body of water?" "The Atlantic ocean, my dear." "The Atlantic ocean!" exclaimed little Waldo, in amazement, "why, I thought the Atlantic ocean was near Boston!"

It was a dark night. A man was riding a bicycle with no lamp. He came to a crossroads, and did not know which way to turn. He felt in his pocket for a match. He found but one. Climbing to the top of the pole, he lit the match carefully and in the ensuing glimmer read: "Wet Paint."

Charley Baskum was slyly holding, under the table, the hand of the winsome miss on his right, when his partner bridged. "Well," he ventured, "I am holding a heart hand, but I'm in doubt." "You know the rules of the game," suggested the miss. "Nothing risked, nothing won."—Judge.

"You've been courting me now for a number of years, George," remarked a girl to a young man, "and I want to make a little leap-year proposal." "I—I am not in a position to m-marry just yet," stammered the youth; "but——" "Who said anything about marriage?" interrupted the girl, "I was going to propose that you stop coming here and give somebody else a chance."

The boss entered the office, his face clouded, his brow wrinkled in angry thought. He called the office boy. Regarding the youth sternly, he said: "Johnny, do you smoke cigarettes?" "I d-d-do a l-l-little, sir," stammered Johnny, paling beneath the tan of the baseball field. The boss fixed him with his eagle eye. "Then gimme one," he said. "I left mine on the bureau."—St. Paul Dispatch.

The hard looking customer had been arrested for stealing an umbrella. "What have you to say for yourself?" asked the police justice. "Are you guilty or not guilty?" "I'm one o' the guilty ones, y'r honor, I reckon," answered the prisoner. "The umbrella had the name of J. Thompson on the handle, G. H. Brickley stamped on the inside o' the cover, an' I stole it from a man named Quimby."

Little Willie was playing one day with the girl next door, when the latter exclaimed: "Don't you hear your mother calling you? That's three times she's done so! Aren't you going in?" "Not yet," responded Willie imperturbably. "Won't she whip you?" "Naw!" exclaimed Willie in disgust. "She ain't goin' to whip nobody! She's got company. So when I go in, she'll just say: 'The poor little man has been so good since he's had the measles!'"

Habitual Constipation

May be permanently overcome by proper personal efforts with the assistance of the one truly beneficial laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs & Elixir of Senna, which enables one to form regular habits daily so that assistance to nature may be gradually dispensed with when no longer needed, as the best of remedies when required are to assist nature, and not to supplant the natural functions, which must depend ultimately upon proper nourishment, proper efforts, and right living generally.

NEW TELEGRAPH COMPANY

Pushing Lines of Wires Across Missouri, Illinois and Indiana.

The quiet contest for a place in the telegraph business which has been in progress for some time in Missouri, Illinois and Indiana, has resulted in a complete victory for the new independent company, the Telepost. Wherever its lines have been established it has put into effect its universal schedule of flat rates, which mean a reduction of telegraph charges such as only this new company can give without loss of money through the use of the inventions of Patrick B. Delaney, by which remarkable automatic machines do the work of the old hand method of transmission.

The Telepost Company is bringing competition into the heart of the zones of the greatest volume of telegraph business, viz.: New England, the North Mississippi Valley region, and the Washington, Philadelphia, New York belt. The lines are established and thriving in New England, work is going ahead with all possible speed in and around New York, and now in the North Central district, in which the main centers are Chicago, St. Louis, Springfield, Indianapolis and Kansas City, another victory has been gained by securing extensions into Indianapolis for the line now operating from St. Louis to Terre Haute. In a few weeks' time Indianapolis and St. Louis and Indianapolis and Chicago will be connected. Westward the work is pushing on beyond Sedalia, Mo.

The effect of a sharp competition and reduced rates, as evidenced in New England, has been to stimulate business, and justifies the conclusion that experts are correct in their opinion that with the rates cut in half the telegraph business will be trebled in volume, which has been the general experience in England, France and other countries where the telegraphs have been put on a basis of modern efficiency and reasonable charges.

Recognizing His Opportunity.

Gentlemanly Caller—Of course you will want some new books now.

Member of School Board—I think not. All our purchases are made and are in the hands of the children, or will be in a day or two.

Gentlemanly Caller—Yes, but your geographies are old-fashioned, you know. We are running a specially prepared, up to date edition through our presses right now, with the north pole plainly marked where Dr. Cook discovered it. How many thousand copies do you think you can use?—Chicago Tribune.

Charley and His Hands.

"You say your husband occasionally consults a palmist?"

"Yes," answered young Mrs. Torkins. "You see, Charley plays cards a great deal."

"But he isn't so superstitious as to think he can foretell his luck?"

"No. He takes it for granted that his luck will be bad. But he says it's worth the money to have somebody tell him he has a hand worth looking at."—Washington Star.

A lion then sprang into view,
And roared, "There's no use flyin'!
I'm going to make a meal of you!"
But he caught the lion lyin'.

HER PHYSICIAN ADVISED

Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Columbus, Ohio.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound during change of life. My doctor told me it was good, and since taking it I feel so much better that I can do all my work again. I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fine remedy for all woman's troubles, and I never forget to tell my friends what it has done for me."—Mrs. E. HANSON, 304 East Long St., Columbus, Ohio.

Another Woman Helped.

Graniteville, Vt.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored my health and strength, and proved worth mountains of gold to me. For the sake of other suffering women I am willing you should publish my letter."—Mrs. CHARLES BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

Women who are passing through this critical period or who are suffering from any of those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of the fact that for thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills. In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Melvin Goddard, of Manila, was seriously injured by being thrown from a cart while breaking a colt to drive.

The 200 men employed in Dering Mine No. 8, at Clinton, who quit because they thought the cage unsafe, returned to work after repairs had been made on the tipple braces.

The Oxford Improvement Company was organized at Oxford last week. It will be incorporated at once with a capital stock of $10,000. The object is the location of one or more factories.

The 2-months-old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Girton was found dead in bed at their home in Harmony. The child's face was found buried in the bed clothes, and death was caused from suffocation.

Hiatt McNaught, a farmer, aged 50, who lives three miles west of Thornton, hanged himself. He left his home between 9 and 10 o'clock and his widow found his lifeless body suspended from a beam in the barn at noon. No cause is assigned for his suicide.

The barking of the faithful watchdog saved the lives of Mrs. Maude Wilson and family at Evansville, who were awakened in time to rush from the burning building. The fire is believed to have been caused by an incendiary.

Strolling from the barn lot and wandering into the woods a mile away, a calf belonging to Austin Everhart, of Sullivan, starved to death. The animal became entangled in the brush by a ring in its nose, and was found dead five days later.

Joseph L. Gruber and James B. Harper, of Fort Wayne, have been elected to the thirty-third degree of Scottish Rite Masonry. Wright Rockhill, also a Fort Wayne Mason, had the thirty-third degree conferred upon him last week by the Supreme Council.

Milton Cook, a farmer northwest of Newcastle, is feeding the largest number of 2-year-old steers ever fed at one time by a Henry County farmer. There are 111, valued at $10,000. He expects to feed them until February and then place them on the market.

A Shetland pony and trap, in which were three small children, belonging to C. H. Graver, a grocer of Cambridge City, was struck by an interurban car. The pony was cut and the trap was torn to splinters. Except for cuts and severe bruises the children escaped injury.

Mooresville now boasts of one of the finest and best equipped postoffice buildings of any town of its size in Indiana. The building has just been erected and new and up-to-date fixtures installed by J. L. Matthews. The amount of business of this office has doubled in the last few years. Frank Sheets is Postmaster and Ralph Tresslar and Edgar Shiveley deputies.

By a vote of 59 to 45, it was decided by the National Association of Rural Free Delivery Carriers, in session at Rochester, N. Y., to continue the per capita tax as now at $1. These officers were elected: President, Elias Frey, Pendleton, Ind.; vice president, L. D. Songer, Trenton, Mo.; secretary, P. E. Cull, Concord, Mass.; treasurer, J. D. Williams, Renfrew, Pa. The next convention will be held in Little Rock, Ark.

At the home of Oscar Von Hatsfeld, who says he is a descendant of the royal Von Hatsfelds of the Kaiser's court, who lives in Evansville, can be found running about each day three snakes, one rattlesnake and two deadly copperheads. "Afraid of them?" queried Von Hatsfeld. "Why, no. And I have not even extracted their poisonous fangs, either. They run about the house and nobody fears them. I feed them every day on rats and they like the diet. They are also fond of young pigeons. I have liked snakes ever since I was 6 years old. I played with them when I came across them during my ramblings through the woods over in Germany." Von Hatsfeld says he always had a peculiar power over snakes. He winds them around his arms and body as if they were ribbons.

Governor Marshall has declined a second invitation to make the trip from St. Louis to New Orelans with President Taft, as a guest of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf Deep Waterways Association. In his first declination the Governor stated that his cause for declining was that the management had not arranged for the wives of the Governors to accompany them on the trip. The Governor explained at that time that during the fourteen years of their wedded life he and Mrs. Marshall had never been separated on any occasion, and that he did not care at this time to break the established rule of their household. The second invitation explained that arrangements had been made to have the Governors' wives make the trip on a separate boat, but the arrangement did not strike Governor Marshall as being more acceptable than the former.

The Postoffice at Darlington has been advanced from fourth class to presidential, the receipts for last year having increased to $10,000. The salary of Postmaster William C. Woody will be $1,000.

The finest pearl of the season was brought into Oaktown by H. E. Brown, a well-known pearl fisher in the Wabash river, west of Carlisle. It weighs twenty-two karats and has a fine luster. Experts place its value at more than $1,000.

The house of Lake Modisett, in Brazil, was destroyed by fire. Mrs. Modisett got up to warm the baby's milk and dropped a lighted match to some inflammable material on the floor. The loss is $1,500; insurance, $800.

Benjamin M. Spinner, who was recently elected president of the Twenty-second Indiana Regimental Association, claims the distinction of being the youngest living veteran of the Civil War. Spinner enlisted in the Twenty-second Indiana, at Columbus, on February 23, 1864, at the age of 14 years.

Cards have been circulated about the city of Indianapolis, soliciting attendance at the Sunday morning meetings of a men's Bible class at the First Presbyterian church, Delaware and Sixteenth streets, which is to be instructed by Governor Marshall, who undertook the work at the request of the pastor, the Rev. H. L. Haines. The class will meet every Sunday at 9:45 o'clock.

Fire of uncertain origin destroyed a barn and contents belonging to Dr. R. B. Willan at Trafalgar. The loss is estimated at $7,000, partially covered by insurance. A quantity of feed, one hundred tons of hay and eleven horses were housed in the structure, and added fuel to the flames. The blaze was discovered by a traveling salesman in a nearby hotel, and before he could sound an alarm the fire had gained great headway. Volunteer firemen confined their efforts to saving adjoining property.

The new Scottish Rite Cathedral at Fort Wayne, Indiana, will be dedicated the 16th, 17th and 18th of November, 1909. This beautiful structure is said to be the finest of its kind in the United States. The architecture is purely Masonic and the decorations and furnishings emblematic of the Scottish Rite. The most prominent men in Masonic circles will take part in this ceremony, which will be more elaborate than ever before seen in the State of Indiana. The complete list of committees follows:

CHILD ATE CUTICURA.

Spread Whole Box of It on Crackers —Not the Least Injury Resulted— Thus Proven Pure and Sweet.

A New York friend of Cuticura writes:

"My three year old son and heir, after being put to bed on a trip across the Atlantic, investigated the stateroom and located a box of graham crackers and a box of Cuticura Ointment. When a search was made for the box, it was found empty and the kid admitted that he had eaten the contents of the entire box spread on the crackers. It cured him of a bad cold and I don't know what else."

No more conclusive evidence could be offered that every ingredient of Cuticura Ointment is absolutely pure, sweet and harmless. If it may be safely eaten by a young child, none but the most beneficial results can be expected to attend its application to even the tenderest skin or youngest infant.

A MOST COSMOPOLITAN PLACE.

Buenos Ayres Is Also World's Second City of Latin Population.

Buenos Ayres is, in some respects, the most cosmopolitan city in the world. No important European nation but has contributed its capital and its people to the upbuilding of this great metropolis. It also has the distinction of being the second city of Latin population in the world, says The World To-day, being larger than the largest cities in Italy and Spain.

There is perhaps no city which exhibits a greater variety of pleasing contemporary styles of domestic architecture. The City Council tries to encourage beautiful building by annually offering a gold medal to the architect who is found to have planned the most attractive facade, and by freeing from the building tax the structure thus favored.

The outward aspect of Buenos Ayres is rather that of a European than of an American capital. It has all the finish of a Paris or a Berlin. The absence of the irregular skyline, caused in North American cities by the extreme height of some business buildings, as well as the fact that the ground of the city is quite uniformly built upon, even in the more outlying regions, keeps the city from presenting that unfinished appearance which even our largest cities have.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

A Useful Remedy.

Little Jamie, aged 3, was playing with his little friend, Jack. At the time Jamie chanced to have a rather heavy cold and was sneezing quite often. Jack's mother heard him several times and sympathetically asked: "Why, Jamie, what a cold you have! Doesn't your mother give you anything for it?" "Yes, ma'am," Jamie very respectfully answered, "she gives me a clean handkerchief," whereupon he produced the prescribed "remedy."—The Delineator.

She Was Too Quick.

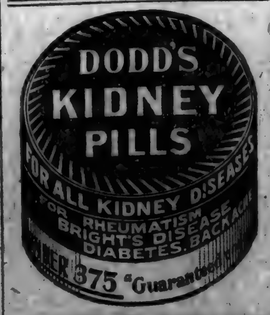
There were three at the little table in the cafe, a lady and two men.

Suddenly the electric lights went out, and the lady, quickly and noiselessly, drew back.

An instant later there was the smack of a compound kiss. As the electric lights went up each man was seen smiling complaisantly.

"I thought I heard a kiss," said the lady, "but nobody kissed me."

Then the men suddenly glared at each other and flushed and looked painfully sheepish.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.



Afraid of Ghosts

Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

Registration Dates, Oct. 4 to 23, inclusive.

The General Land Office at Washington has designated Le Beau and Aberdeen, So. Dak., on the Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. as registration points.

Le Beau, which is the Missouri River terminus of the Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R., is located on the Missouri River, opposite the Reservation, and is the nearest railroad station to three-fifths of the land.

There will be about 14,000 quarter sections allotted to settlers. The land lays well for farming over most of the reservation. The soil is a light loam and is very fertile. It is similar to that in the counties east of the River, where the land sells from $25.00 to $30.00 per acre. Lignite coal is found over a great part of the reservation.

Who May Secure a Homestead—Under the homestead laws of the United States, any person, male or female who is not the owner of more than 160 acres of land in any state or territory, who is a native born citizen of the United States, or has been naturalized, or declared his intention to become a naturalized citizen of the United States (i.e., one who has taken out his first papers of citizenship), who is over the age of 21 years or the head of a family, may make a homestead entry of not exceeding 160 acres of any of the unoccupied lands of the United States.

Joaquin Miller was once overtaken by a countryman who gave him a long ride. Tired, at length, of the conversation, the poet took a novel from his pocket. "What are you reading?" said the countryman. "A novel of Bret Harte's," said Mr. Miller. "Well, now, I don't see how an immortal being wants to be wasting his time with such stuff." "Are you quite sure," said the poet, "that I am an immortal being?" "Of course, you are." "If that is the case," responded Miller, "I don't see why I need to be so economical of my time."—Boston Herald.

Philippine Cigars.

An army officer who has seen service in the Philippines is accustomed to tell his friends that the most likeable thing he found in the islands was the tobacco. Another army officer, at home a persistent smoker, broke off the habit after he had been a short time stationed at Manila, because he could not use the tobacco. Probably the same diversified results will follow local tests of the 30,000 cigars that have reached Boston as an installment of the 150,000,000 which, under a provision of the new tariff act, are admitted to the country free of duty, the Boston Transcript says. In appearance they are not at all suggestive of the old-fashioned Manila "cheroots" but copy standard shapes and sizes and show much better workmanship than did the pioneer cigars from Porto Rico. As these specimens represent it, the tobacco of the Philippines is light colored and mild, and many persons find its flavor agreeable, though others profess to detect a "tang" of bitterness which might be accounted for by improper curing. The retail price of cigars ranges from 3 cents to 10 cents. No mature and experienced smoker ever attempts to choose tobacco to suit another smoker's taste, but with this qualification it seems safe to give it as a consensus of opinion that the novelties from the Philippines are worth their cost.

FASHION HINTS

Something that's just housey, and yet not belonging to the wrapper family, is a little hard to find. The house gown shown here is a pretty solution of the problem. Inexpensively developed in silk muslin, it is charming. If a warmer gown is desired, it would be very pretty in one of the fancy challies.

Announcement

To all users of Heating Stoves in St. Joe

We want to announce that we have received word from the Cole Manufacturing Co. of Chicago that we may sell their marvelous Cole's Hot Blast Heater on the most remarkable guarantee basis ever made by a heating stove manufacturer.

Please read the statement just as made to us by the President of the Cole Manufacturing Co.

Read What Mr. Cole Says:

"You are authorized to sell the Original Cole's Hot Blast Heater this year on the most rigid guarantee ever made by any stove manufacturer. Our guarantee to every customer of yours is—

"1—A saving of one-third in fuel over any lower draft stove of the same size, with soft coal, slack or lignite.
"2—That Cole's Hot Blast will use less hard coal for heating a given space than any base burner made with same size fire pot.
"3—That the rooms can be heated from one to two hours each morning with the soft coal or hard coal put in the stove the evening before.
"4—That the stove will hold fire with soft coal from Saturday night until Monday morning.
"5—A uniform heat day and night with soft coal, hard coal or lignite.
"6—That every stove will remain absolutely air-tight as long as used.
"7—That the feed-door is and will remain smoke and dust-proof.
"All we ask is that the stove shall be operated according to directions and set up with a good flue.

"(Signed) COLE MANUFACTURING CO.,"
(Makers of the Original Patented Hot Blast Stove.)

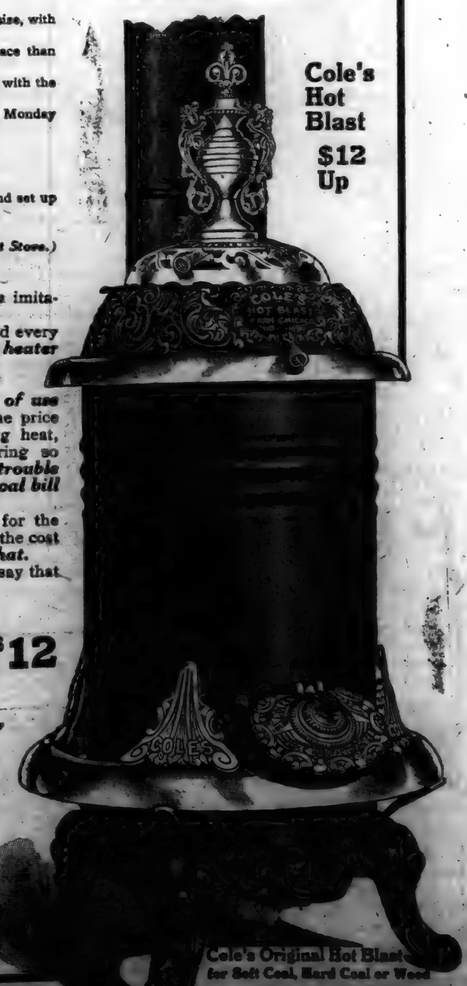
No ifs or ands about it. Your money back if the stove doesn't fulfill this remarkable guarantee.



This is a wonderful guarantee to users of heating stoves. It is just what our customers want and is a guarantee from one of the great manufacturers and puts us in the lead of all dealers.

It is the Original Hot Blast Stove now imitated by so many other manufacturers. It is the patented features giving an everlasting air-tight and gas-tight construction and the patented Hot Blast draft as Cole uses it, burning the wasting gases in the coal that make Cole's Hot Blast the greatest fuel saver ever known, while imitations fail.

We know 60,000 are sold every year. The biggest selling heater made, by all odds.

It is a wonder.

It has proved by years of use that no heater at twice the price approaches it for radiating heat, for holding fire, requiring so little care, never giving trouble —and cutting down the coal bill one-third to one-half.

Right here we want to say that

Our Price of Cole's Original Hot Blast is $12
and upward, according to size.

Please remember, readers, that we are guaranteeing this stove against any heater, size for size, at any price.
We sell all sizes, price according to size.

One season's use will cut your fuel bill in two and give you satisfaction such as you never believed possible with a heater. Will you come in and see?

Mrs. S. M. Hill Dies

Sunday evening September 26 at her home at Laketon occurred the death of Mrs. S. M. Hill wife of Rev. Hill, pastor of the United Brethern church. Mrs. Hill has been ill since March from an attack of dropsy and Bright's disease. The funeral services were held at the Silver Lake church Wednesday forenoon at eleven o'clock, and the burial was in the Center cemetery north of Silver Lake. Mrs. Hill, whose maiden name was Cora E. Cauffman, spent her early life in the neighborhood of Silver Lake. She was married to Rev. S. M. Hill about eighteen years ago. Besides her bereaved husband she leaves four children, the oldest a daughter of sixteen and the youngest a babe of two years. At death she was 33 years 3 months and 3 days of age. She was a devoted christian women, and had hosts of friends wherever she was known.—North Manchester Journal. Mr. Hill and family were formerly residents of Newville, being pastor of the U. B. charge. Mr. Hill and his bereaved family have the sympathy of the entire community.

Bad Blaze Tuesday Eve.

Once more the citizens of our little city were aroused from their slumbers by the cries of Fire! Fire! Fire! Tuesday evening about 10:30 o'clock, the residence of Mrs. Ada Filley on East Main Street, was caught on fire as the result of the chimney burning out. Mrs. Filley had noticed that it was burning and had stayed up to look after it and when she went out doors to see whether it had cooled off, she noticed a blaze coming out of the north roof. She immediately called the peighbors and the alarm was given over town and a crowd soon gathered to help fight the flames. The fire had gotten under pretty good headway before anyone arrived but was burning in between the walls and as soon as they reached the fire, some brave fighting was done. The entire house was torn up and together with the fire, water and dirt, considerable damage was done. The roof was taken off at the north side and the floor and wall upstairs were torn up considerable. A number of things were made worthless caused by the water, smoke and dirt. The loss was covered by insurance. This should be a warning to our town and some equipment should be secured for fighting fire. It is a miracle how the house was saved as the wind was blowing at a great speed and placed several houses on that street in great danger.

No Caucus Was Held

A call for a town caucus for Monday night was made in last week's NEWS and only a half dozen citizens were present and nothing was done. That shows that you are greatly interested in your town. All that some of our people think of doing is to crab whenever something is done that they don't believe in and when a call is made for them to meet, they fail to show up. Something will have to be done by Saturday in the way of getting town officers nominated in order to make it legal. Perhaps a little politics in the matter might liven it up. Get together and have a caucus.

Equiped with Fire Escapes.

Fire escapes were placed on the west and north side of the school house, last week. During the summer the inspector was here and took measurements for the escape. While some think that it was money thrown away, they will come rather handy in case of fire. It's well to be prepared.

We're open to the Public Now.

WILL YOU REMBER?

MONROE BROS.

THIS WOULD ADD LARGELY

To the Pleasure of Living and Greatly Increase the Value of every Acre of Land and Piece of Property in the St. Joe Valley.

We publish in this issue of THE NEWS, a map showing the country and trading centers that would be tributary to an Electric Railway extending the Robison Park line, up the St. Joe River Valley, through the the towns of Cedarville, Leo, Hursh, Spencerville and St. Joe, to Butler, Indiana. We are sure an investigation of this route will show that the country through which it would pass is the most populous and highly improved of any unoccupied territory contiguous to Fort Wayne. Long before the coming of the white man to this country, the trails of the Indians led up and down the St. Joe to Fort Wayne and on down the Wabash across the country westward. They sought out and used the routes offering least obstructions and best adapted by nature for their travels. When civilized man occupied and developed the country, his selection of the same general routes for the construction of Canals and afterward Rail Roads, confirmed the soundness of the judgement of the aborigines. The first great Trunk lines that crossed the Rocky Mountains, followed the Indian trails through the mountain passes. The Canal from Toledo Westward, the Wabash Railroad and the Wabash Valley Traction line, all followed in a general way what nature had best fitted and what savage people had for untold ages used for routes of travel. When north eastern Indiana was first settled many of the first settlers came up the St. Joe to their future homes. The Indian trails were still plainly seen and at frequent intervals were found the remains of towns and burial grounds. For years the St. Joe, was the highway for the transportation of supplies and down which were floated to market at Fort Wayne huge logs of Poplar, Ash and Walnut. These things led to the first settlements and towns being near the river and the mills and centers of trade has drawn the business of the country for miles on each side of the river.

In a straight line from Robison Park to Butler, the distance is about twenty miles. To pass through Cedarville, Leo, Hursh, Spencerville and St. Joe, the distance would be but little more.

Fort Wayne is the metropolis of all the country tributary to this route. No state line divides its allegiance. In political, religious, educational and social relations all our interests are identified with Fort Wayne, Indianapolis and other cities of the State. In addition to the towns this line would strike. It would cross the Wabash, the Balto & Ohio, the Vandalia and Lake Shore railroads. If extended to Hamilton would give access to one of the prettiest lakes in Indiana. If the Toledo and Chicago Electric road were built from Bryan, seventeen miles, to Butler, it would be ninety-eight miles to Toledo from Fort Wayne.

The benefits to the whole sale trade of Fort Wayne, to be gained by the building of this line, giving quick delivery of goods and easy access to already established splendid trading places, would be of immense importance. The farms are generally small, the soil fertile and the improvements equal to any part of north-eastern Indiana. The topography of the country through which it would pass is such that the building of a road could be cheaply done. We are sure an examination of the route will show that it possesses all the advantages, and more, that we have claimed for it.

Will the people along the route "get a move on themselves!" and see if anything can be done to bring about this desired result.

Mort Foote Dies

Mort Foote died at his home east of Harlan Monday night about 11 o'clock. He had been gradually getting worse and the past week up to Sunday, all hopes were given up for him lasting any length of time. The funeral will be held this (Thursday) afternoon at the house and burial in the Maysville cemetery.

Burley--Woodcox

Don Burley and Laura W. Woodcox two of St Joe's young people, celebrated Thursday of the Fall Festival just right by taking an hour off and slipping over to the M. E. parsonage and having the Rev. W. B. Freeland tie the matrimonial knot.—Dispatch. They returned in time to partake of the wedding anniversary supper of both C. C. and I. M. Woodcox, brothers of the bride, at the former's home they having been married fifteen and four years ago on that date. While the wedding had been expected for some time by a few it was quite a surprize to others. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Washington Woodcox of this place and has a wide acquaintance. She is a graduate of the St. Joe High-school. The groom is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Burley, who resides west of town and is a hustling young farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Burley will perhaps live on the farm with his parents. THE NEWS joins their many friends in extending congratulations.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Dynamite Wrecks Viaduct.

A large section of the viaduct over the New York Central tracks near the corner of Elk and Michigan streets, in Buffalo, N. Y., was wrecked by dynamite. An unsuccessful attempt was made on the morning of September 14 to destroy the same structure. Hundreds of windows within a radius of a block were shattered by the concussion. The viaduct which under completion was being constructed by the S. J. McCain Company, of Mercer, Pa., The Company works on the open shop plan. McLean's box factory was badly wrecked by flying pieces of steel and a small frame building used as an office by the Eastern Oil Company was demolished. So far as is known no lives were lost.

Will Teach Soldiers How to Fly.

Wilbur Wright, who came to Washington from New York, has begun his work of instructing the officers of the signal corps in the use of the aeroplane purchased from him by the Government. Mr. Wright, accompanied by Lieut. Frank P. Lahm, went out to College Park, Md., where the instructions were given. The aeroplane purchased several weeks ago, which has been housed at Fort Myers since the flights of the early summer, also was taken to College Park.

Two Fatally Injured in Wreck.

In a remarkable accident to fast train No. 7 on the Iron Mountain and Southern railroad near Hillyard, Mo., Fireman W. P. Brown, of De Soto, Mo., and Engineer H. Hart were both fatally injured. The engine struck a horse, knocking the animal forward on the track, striking the switch stand and throwing open the switch, causing the engine to leave the track. The tender and baggage car were overturned.

New Scottish Rite Cathedral.

The new Scottish Rite Cathedral at Fort Wayne, Ind., said to be the finest of its kind in the United States, will be consecrated and dedicated Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Nov. 16, 17 and 18, 1909. The most prominent Scottish Rite Masons in the country will be present to take part in the ceremonies, which will be the most elaborate ever seen in the State.

Famous Composer Dies Suddenly.

Dudley Buck, the organist and composer, died suddenly at the home of his son in West Orange, N. J. He had just returned from a two years' absence in Europe. Mr. Buck was 70 years old. A widow, two sons, Dr. E. T. Buck, of Indianapolis, Ind., and Dudley Buck, Jr., of West Orange, and a daughter survive him.

Schooner Sinks; Eight Men Drowned.

All hope for the fishing schooner Francis H., commanded by Captain Albert Sadler, formerly of Booth Bay, Maine, and manned by a crew of eight, has been abandoned by the owners, who believe the vessel, with all hands, went down in the gulf hurricane of September 21.

Mrs. Gould Is Given Her Decree.

The formal decree in favor of Mrs. Katherine Clemmons Gould, granting her a separation from Howard Gould, has been filed at New York City. The decree awards Mrs. Gould, $3,000 a month permanent alimony and $3,682 costs. It was said that Mr. Gould would appeal.

Woman Kills Man and Self.

Mrs. Fannie Waters and a man supposed to be E. C. Flanary, address unknown, were found shot to death in the woman's apartments in Memphis, Tenn. The police say the woman killed the man and then herself. No cause for the tragedy has yet been learned.

Dickinson Not to Resign.

Secretary of War Dickinson has denied a report that he contemplated resigning from the cabinet because of illness in his family and the recent death of his daughter-in-law. This report was published in New York under a Washington date.

Kansas City Philanthropist Dead.

Thomas H. Swope, millionaire and philanthropist, died suddenly at his home in Kansas City, Mo., following a stroke of apoplexy. He was 81 years old.

Two Meet Death in Auto Mishap.

Parker Norton, owner of the Mineola Press and Edward Baker, proprietor of a Mineola garage, were instantly killed in an automobile accident near Mineola, L. I., New York.

PEARY'S SHIP IS IN.

With the flag of the Peary Arctic Club at her masthead, the little steamer Roosevelt, which bore Commander Peary on his quest of the North Pole, entered New York harbor Thursday. It was barely daylight when the lookouts discerned the vessel off Sandy Hook, coming slowly. Few of the vessels in the lower bay recognized the Arctic steamer as she rounded the Hook.

Off the point of the Hook the Roosevelt gave three triumphant screams of her siren and ran up the Peary Arctic flag of the New York Yacht Club at her fore and the American ensign at her mizzen. Turning the point of the Hook, the Roosevelt headed into the horseshoe and anchored there within half a mile of the government dock. Commander Peary's ship arrived in the nick of time to participate in the closing ceremonies of the Hudson-Fulton celebration.

Still clad in the rough clothes worn on the arctic trip, although his furs had been laid aside, Captain Bartlett stood on his quarter deck and acted as spokesman for the party. Acting under instructions from Commander Peary, the crew and the scientists and others aboard will remain on the Roosevelt and not enjoy life ashore until they are released by the chief of the expedition.

In outward appearance the Roosevelt looks little like a ship that has braved the ice and storms of the arctic zone. She has received a fresh coat of paint, and the bones of arctic animals that were interwoven in her ratlines have been removed. In her hold, however, she carried a quantity of skins and all the specimens gathered during her cruise. There are no Eskimos aboard, but the life in the arctic zone is represented by a litter of twelve puppies.

"There is no doubt," said Captain Bartlett, "that the Stars and Stripes have been 'nailed to the North Pole' and no doubt that Mr. Peary was there. Peary got there because he was the only man that the Eskimos will follow out of sight of land. They say he is 'Pe-uk,' meaning 'next to God.'"

DECISION IS AGAINST WALSH.

Chicago Banker and Railroad Magnate Must Go to Prison.

John R. Walsh, Chicago banker and railroad magnate, lost his battle to reverse his sentence of five years in the penitentiary for violation of Federal banking laws Tuesday. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the finding of the lower court, and unless the United States Supreme Court interferes he will go to the Fort Leavenworth (Kan.) prison.

The aged defendant was not in court when the decision was read by Judge Grosscup, who sat with Judges Baker and Seaman, but he learned his fate by telephone while at his desk in the Grand Central Station building. The decision fails to upset any point of the finding that Walsh broke the law in the use of funds of the Chicago National Bank, of which he was president.

Part of the opinion, which was written by Judge Humphrey, refutes the defense's assertion that Walsh had no criminal intent in the manipulation of the securities intrusted to him. In this regard the decision quotes: "A reckless act is always regarded as the equivalent of a willful one, and that at least was here."

RUSH FOR FREE DAKOTA LANDS.

Heavy Registration for Cheyenne and Standing Rock Reservations.

Registration for the government lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock reservation of the Dakotas began with a rush at midnight Monday, and within an hour thereafter 1,800 persons had registered at the six registration centers. Land-seekers are there from all over the United States, from New York to California. Mrs. Josephine Reed, of Wabasha, Minn., was the first of the 561 to register in Aberdeen. Judge Witten, who is in charge of the registration, has completed arrangements for handling fully 100,000 persons in Aberdeen alone. Registration began also at Bismarck, N. D., Lemmon, S. D., and Le Beau, S. D.

RAY LAMPHERE'S END NEARING.

Confession Clearing Mystery of Gunness Death Farm Expected.

Ray Lamphere, who was convicted as an accomplice of the arch-murderess, Mrs. Guinness, has but a few days more to live, according to prison physicians in La Porte, Ind. He is suffering from consumption. State's Attorney Smith is confident he will make a confession clearing every detail of the Gunness death farm mystery when he realizes that his end is at hand. Up to the present time he has protested persistently that he knows nothing about how Mrs. Gunness killed and disposed of her victims.

KILL NIGHT RIDERS, HIS ADVICE

Gov. Willson of Kentucky for Drastic Steps Against Tobacco Outlaws.

"Organize a liberty league and kill the nocturnal invaders," is the advice that Gov. Willson, of Kentucky, gives regarding night riders. In a statement the governor lighted the fire that will set the whole of the burley and dark tobacco district aflame. He says that no man should pool his tobacco unless he wants to, and that he will pardon any man who resorts to arms to protect his home.

GLORY ENOUGH FOR ALL.

300 YEARS AGO TO-DAY 100 YEARS AGO

These are types of the men that push the world forward. Thinkers, fighters, men dissatisfied and struggling. Hudson had the courage that brought him to the mouth of a great river. Fulton's restless genius, forever dissatisfied with existing conditions, gave to the world the steamboat. Cook, restless and determined, carried his country's name and flag to the Farthest North. These men are the heroes that the world sees. Honor them. Remember that millions of others unseen are as good, as deserving. Every man who does his duty by his neighbor, his country, his wife, his children and his friends, is a builder of civilization. It is a beautiful and a hopeful world.—Chicago American.

ONE KILLED AND TWO SCORE HURT IN I. C. WRECK.

Trains in Head-On Collision at Parnell City— Victims Delegates to Sunday School Convention.

One person killed and two score injured, many probably fatally, is the reported result of a head-end collision between passenger trains on the Illinois Central at Parnell, Ill. Almost all the victims, including the dead, were delegates to a Sunday school convention held at Farmer City, Ill. A few were visitors returning from the State fair at Springfield.

Parnell is about six miles south of Farmer City. It is a way station, without a train dispatcher or any telegraph connection. The first word was received at Clinton, a hand car having been used to reach the telegraph office nearest the scene, from which the news was wired. A relief train with every available physician in Clinton started for the wreck, equipped for the relief of the injured. More than an hour was required for the run to Parnell and meanwhile the injured continued without aid save such as was afforded in a town of few inhabitants. According to the reports, both trains were making at least forty miles an hour. Every car of the lighter train was derailed. The heavier train suffered less, but the baggage and smoking car telescoped.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

The Saratoga cup closed the meeting at Saratoga. Olambula, from the Montpelier stables, the 3 to 5 favorite, won an easy victory in the Saratoga cup, the feature, one mile and six furlongs.

The Nutmeg Stake for $5,000, for 2:07 pacers at Hartford, Conn., was the star event at Charter Oak Park, but it proved to be rather tame, for George Gano simply walked away from the field.

Lewman, owned by Dr. H. H. Carbon, of Anoka, driven by F. L. Bunday, of St. Paul, fell dead from a ruptured blood vessel in the last heat of the 2:30 trot at the Dane County (Wis.) fair at Madison.

Joe Fealer, of Mount Sterling, Ky., one of the best known horsemen in the Middle West, and an authority on the saddle horse, dropped dead in the arena at the Paris (Ky.) fair grounds, while acting as judge in the saddle horse ring.

Wallace F. Johnson, of the University of Pennsylvania, defeated Melville H. Long, of the University of California, Pacific coast Western champion, in the final of the intercollegiate lawn tennis tournament at Haverford, Pa., and his victory gives him the college championship.

Among the men who have "made good" as managers after dropping out of the big base ball league as players, the following can be named: Hugh Jennings, John McGraw, Joe Kelly, Hugh Duffy, George Stallings, Connie Mack, Clark Griffith, Jim McAleer, Jack O'Connor, John Ganzel, Jimmy Casey, Joe McGinnity, Fred Lake, Ed Hanlon, Jack Dunn, Jimmy Collins, Jesse Burkett, Billy Hamilton, Tom Dowd, Mal Eason, Charley Carr, Jimmy Burke, Ed Gremminger, Bill Bernhard, Frank Connaughton and Heine Peitz

FEDERAL PRISON FOR A MAYOR.

Executive of Burkesville, Va., Sentenced for Misusing Mails.

Abram C. Eby, a prominent Virginia lawyer, who ten days ago was convicted of using the mails to defraud, was sentenced to eighteen months in the government prison at Atlanta, Ga., and to pay a fine of $1 by Judge McPherson. Eby sent a number of letters to President McCrea of the Pennsylvania Railroad, in which he threatened destruction to the Norfolk and Western Railroad, and to other roads in which the Pennsylvania is interested, if he was not paid the sum of $45,000. Eby was lured to Philadelphia ostensibly for the purpose of reaching an agreement with the railroad officials regarding the amount to be paid and was arrested. The defendant, who was mayor of Burkesville, Va., and a referee in bankruptcy of the United States court in that district, did not offer any defense. His counsel pleaded insanity.

NEW DREADNOUGHT LAUNCHED.

British Sea Fighter, the Neptune, Believed Unsinkable by Torpedo.

The Neptune, Great Britain's eighth battle ship of the Dreadnought class or the eleventh, including the three battle-ship cruisers represented by the Inflexible, now participating in the Hudson-Fulton celebration at New York, was successfully launched at Portsmouth, England, by the Duchess of Albany in the presence of a great crowd. The bulkheads of this super-Dreadnought are so heavily armored that experts consider her practically unsinkable by a torpedo.

ALBERT PULITZER IS SELF-SLAIN

Brother of New York World Publisher Commits Suicide.

Albert Pulitzer, a brother of Joseph Pulitzer, publisher of the New York World, committed suicide in Vienna. He made doubly sure of death, for he first swallowed poison and then, standing in front of a mirror, sent a bullet from a revolver through his right temple. An empty poison bottle lay on the table in the room. Mr. Pulitzer, who had suffered a nervous breakdown, was greatly depressed over the inability of his physicians to benefit him.

900,000 ACRES IN TOBACCO.

Reports from the counties of the district received at Burley Tobacco society headquarters in Winchester, Ky., show that the crop for 1909 covers 200,000 acres, and that a little more than half of it has been pooled. The question as to whether the pool shall be declared off or not will be submitted to a vote of the growers in each county. The general opinion is that the pool will stand.

GREAT EVANGELICAL MEETINGS

Gypsy Smith Is Conducting Immense Revivals in Chicago.

Attended by one of the biggest and most remarkable religious demonstrations ever held in Chicago, Gypsy Smith formally opened his evangelistic campaign at the Seventh Regiment Armory in Chicago Sunday night. Long before the service was scheduled to begin the great auditorium, which has a seating capacity of 8,000, was packed. Every seat was occupied and every inch of standing room available was taken. While the gypsy evangelist preached to the great crowd inside 5,000 persons, unable to gain admittance, gathered in the street in front of the armory, blocking traffic on the Wentworth avenue car line for nearly an hour while they prayed and sang hymns.

The entrance of Gypsy Smith was the signal for one of the most enthusiastic demonstrations probably ever made at a religious meeting. Men applauded and cheered, while women stood up in their seats waving handkerchiefs, making a rolling sea of white over the heads of the audience. To quote one of the ministers present, Gypsy Smith "gave it to his audience straight from the shoulder." And when he had finished an estimated number of 300 persons had signified their desire either to become converted or to become "better Christians" and left their seats in the audience to meet the evangelist in a room set aside for the purpose. The meetings are advertised to continue for four weeks.

The British steamer Clan Mackintosh, reported blown up at sea, has arrived at Calcutta, having met with no accident.

The land bill for Ireland, which was indorsed by the Irish Parliamentary party, has been passed through the Commons by the vote of 174 to 61. It is expected that the Lords will approve with only minor changes.

The Spanish operations against the tribes of the Rif coast has now entered the arena of European politics, as the sultan of Morocco has taken up the cause of the tribesmen by sending to the powers a note of protest against the action of Spain. This asserts that Spain has violated the Algeciras convention, and asks the protection of the powers.

Later reports of the annual convention of the German Social Democracy at Leipsic indicate that the revisionists, or practical element of the party, had made large gains. The convention approved the course of a member of the Reichstag in voting for an inheritance tax, and voted down a resolution against any sort of co-operation with the Liberal party.

Speaking in defense of the new budget before a great audience at Birmingham, Premier Asquith replied to the recent attack made by Lord Rosebery and informed the House of Lords that its rejection of the budget would mean a revolution. The premier contended that the proposed taxes on lands were not laid on lands merely, but upon the added values due to social causes, which were passing untaxed to the pockets of the fortunate owners of a particular class of land.

CLEVELAND IS GIVEN THREE-CENT CAR FARE

Company and City Finally Settle Problem That Has Caused Political Turmoil Many Years.

JOHNSON WINS A LONG FIGHT

City May Purchase Lines Whenever Municipal Ownership Is Made Lawful.

A conference was held Tuesday to arrange final details which will result in an absolute settlement of the Cleveland street railway difficulty which has been bitterly agitated for eight years. During the life of the controversy it has been a political issue at all times. Partial settlements have been made and many proposed, but all failed of their object. Now peace is assured.

The basis of the strike has been Mayor Tom L. Johnson's contention for a 3-cent fare. The proposed settlement will be on this rate of fare, and will eliminate the street car question from the fall campaign.

Twenty-five Year Franchise.

All the main points have been settled. It is agreed that the city shall give the Cleveland Railway Company, the owner of the local lines, a twenty-five-year franchise, revokable at any time any of the details of the contract with the city is violated. The city reserves the right to purchase the lines at any time municipal ownership is made lawful, providing the city desires to take over the lines. The city also reserves the right to name a purchaser of the lines after eight years. The initial rate of fare is to be 3 cents on all lines, with a 1-cent extra charge for a transfer.

Both the city and the railway company have agreed to let Judge Robert W. Tayler of the United States Court determine the value of the railway property and the maximum rate of fare. It is agreed that at no time shall the rate of fare be greater than will allow the company an earning power of more than 6 per cent on the value of the property, consistent with good service. Judg Tayler has indicated that he will make the maximum rate of fare 4 cents for a cash fare and the regular ticket rate seven tickets for 25 cents and a cent extra for transfers. This proposition has been accepted both by the city and the railway company.

DR. J. B. ANGELL RETIRES.

Venerable Head of University of Michigan Quits Post.

Dr. James B. Angell on Friday retired from the presidency of the University of Michigan, an office he has filled for thirty-eight years except for the two periods when he was away on leave of absence filling the posts of United States minister to China and United States minister to Turkey. The regents have appointed Dean H. B. Hutchins of the law department of the university acting president pending the appointment of a permanent successor to President Angell. Speaking of his retirement, President Angell said: "I am very glad to lay down the duties of president and enjoy the rest and relief to come with lessened responsibilities for the rest of my days."

CHURCH GETS BIG CONTRACT.

Women of Des Moines to Supply Flags to Rock Island System.

St. Luke's Episcopal church, the smallest in Des Moines, with a parish of but nine men and forty women, has solved the enigma of church existence. Through the influence of Claim Agent E. S. Eberhart of that city, a member of the parish, the church procured from the Rock Island a contract to manufacture the signal flags for the entire system. The women will have to make an average of 2,000 flags a week. The contract has been held by a Lowell, Mass., manufacturing concern. The profit from the contract will enable them to keep a preacher and pay the church expenses. The flags are to be all colors

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER IX.—(Continued.)

Lady Garland arrived post haste at The Cottage to the help of her orphan niece. And there were terrible things in the way of black garments and dressmakerfs and milliners with crape-smothered gowns and bonnets, that it was necessary for Irene to face—there were orders to give, and people to see whom she could not avoid seeing; when all the poor girl wanted was to be left alone with her sorrow; but that was impossible. No sooner are our hearts torn in twain—than, maimed and bleeding as we are, we have to be up and doing—to take up the burden of our life again, and stagger on as best we may, under its weight.

"We will go right away as soon as it is all over, dear," her aunt said to her. "Of course you cannot live here any longer—fortunately your poor dear mother was only a yearly tenant, so that the house can be given up at Christmas with no trouble."

"May I not stay on here till then?" pleaded poor Irene feebly—for she only desired to remain near her mother's grave. But Lady Garland would not listen to her.

"My dear child, it would be the death of you. Certainly you must not do anything of the kind. We will go right away to the sunny South and cheat the winter. What you want is a thorough change of air and scene, and complete rest."

Irene wanted nothing, only to be let alone. But she acquiesced meekly. Had she not promised her mother in her last moments, that she would go to her aunt and make her home with her? and if Lady Garland decreed to take her abroad, there was nothing else left for her but to go, too.

The funeral was over, the last night at The Cottage came. Everything was packed up ready for the departure. The furniture was to be sold by auction the next day, all but a few treasured objects that Irene had pleaded to keep, and that had already been sent away to be stored in her aunt's London house. Worn out with fatigue and sorrow, Irene at last crept wearily to bed, that bed which she occupied tonight for the last time.

She did not suppose that she should sleep at all, but oddly enough, no sooner was she in bed than she sank into a deep and exhausted slumber. And whilst she slept, she dreamt a strangely vivid dream. She dreamt that she saw Rupert Carroll, not clearly, but dimly, as one sees a person in a fog. At first she could not distinguish his figure at all, only the faint outline of his face and the dark eyes that looked at her fixedly and yearningly; then, whilst she still continued to gaze at him spell-bound, the mists that surrounded him gradually cleared away, and she saw him quite plainly, standing in her room between the bed and the window. She started up in bed with a piercing cry:

"Rupert!" she cried aloud, "Rupert, come back, come back!"

Then she heard his voice in answer, and surely, yes, surely she was no longer asleep, for the voice seemed to have a living and a tangible sound.

"Irene! oh, wait for me!" he cried.

Then indeed she knew that she was awake, for she sprang out of her bed upon the bare boards of the carpetless floor, but as her feet touched the ground the vision vanished, and she saw nothing, only the pale beams of a misty moonlight shining faintly through the uncurtained window across the already dismantled room.

CHAPTER X.

That very night, the last night that Irene spent at her old home, the night on which she saw that dream or vision of her lover and heard his strange half-real cry to her, Rupert Carroll came suddenly out of his bedroom at Harvington, walked quickly along the passage, and knocked loudly at his sister's door. Louise sprang up in alarm to let him in; he was standing completely dressed outside her door. He seemed to be in a condition of extreme agitation, and she saw that his face was working with some great and unaccustomed emotion.

"Rupert!" she cried in dismay. "Are you ill? what is the matter?"

"Get up at once, Louise! don't let me go to sleep again, you must talk to me, keep me awake! Something has come back to me; I remember a little—it seems like a fog—but there is something that has become clearer. I have heard a voice calling to me, a voice that I had forgotten. I must go by the first train; is there not one at 4 o'clock?"

"But, my dear Rupert, where—where?" asked Miss Carroll in dismay. "Where do you want to go?"

"Back to that place where I was staying before my accident, Chatswell-on-Thames—don't oppose me!" he cried with the petulant irritation of an invalid, "I tell you I must go."

"My dear boy, of course, of course," she answered, soothingly. "You shall go where you like; but why need you go so very early? Let us wait for the 9 o'clock train at all events, and do go quietly back to bed now?"

"No, no, no!" he reiterated. "I tell you I must go as soon as possible. I am wanted at once, someone has called out to me to come. It was a voice I know quite well. I must go to Chatswell, it was from there that it came, and if I go to sleep again, I may forget it, it may go from me."

Louise Carroll recollected what the specialist from London had said about the divers ways in which memory returns after such strange periods of obliteration, and resolved that no stone should possibly be left unturned that could lead to a complete restoration of her brother's mental powers.

But when, after a hasty cup of tea in the early dawn of the winter morning, they walked shiveringly down together to the station to catch the early train, there is no doubt that this devoted and much enduring sister privately believed that they were off on a wild-goose chase.

She would not consent to let him go alone; and having carried his main point, Rupert acquiesced in her resolution to accompany him; he did not, in point of fact, seem to care very much whether she went with him or no. All through the journey to Victoria and the drive across London in the cab to Paddington, and the subsequent longer railway journey to Chatswell, Rupert remained silent and abstracted. His face was fixed, his eyes stared vacantly before him, and he passed his hand frequently over his brow in the puzzled manner which told her that he was trying to remember. He was clinging like a drowning man to a straw, to that one renewed impression that had come back to him, the voice that he knew and whose tones had thrilled him through and through. "Rupert! Rupert!" it had cried in the darkness to him. "Come back! Come back!"

He knew that voice so well, so well, and he knew that it came from Chatswell; all besides was blackness. But it shone like a beacon light in the center of the impenetrable gloom that overwhelmed him, and he strained every nerve within him not again to lose sight of that flickering gleam. If he lost it, he felt that he would be undone!

When they reached Chatswell station it was afternoon; he helped his sister quickly to alight out of the train, and he looked neither to the right nor the left as he drew her away silently along the road to the village. The porter turned back curiously to stare after him.

"It's that there gent as was stopping at the 'George' last August," he said to the station master. "What 'ave come to 'im, I wonder, 'e never so much as gave me a nod, and 'e look as though 'e were mortial bad. Never seed a chap so gone to pieces in hall my born days!"

Carroll seemed to know the road perfectly, and yet he did not actually remember it, he only followed it instinctively. The once familiar houses and trees and hedgerows, and even the homely faces of the few inhabitants whom he passed, brought back nothing to him, but by some dumb sense, he seemed to know his way to The Cottage.

Once his sister spoke to him, asking him where he was taking her. "Don't speak to me, don't speak to me!" he answered with agitation, as he lapsed into silence.

Then all at once the fog seemed to lift, as he caught sight of the gables of The Cottage. There was the well-known gate beneath the archway of now withered greenery, the porch where he and she had often lingered, the dank and faded autumn garden, strewn with dead leaves, that was like, and yet wholly unlike, that garden where the roses and carnations had bloomed, and scattered their crimson petals, where the nightingales had flung their riotous music into the still, sweet-scented night, and where love's sweet mystery had been wordlessly breathed between eyes that had shone with mutual comprehension, and hearts that had beat in silent unison.

Then like a flash, for a few mild moments light came to him, and he remembered! But—what was this? what nightmare of blackest horror suddenly changed and submerged it all? There was a crowd gathered about the gate, large printed bills were pasted upon The Cottage walls, the doors and windows were wide open; some of the furniture stood outside on the grass plot, and a stream of curious strangers pressed through upon each other's heels into the desecrated home.

"Let us go," said Carroll, in a horror-stricken whisper to his amazed and disgusted sister, "this is not the place at all. I don't know this house, I was never here before. It has gone, it has gone!" he kept on muttering despairingly, "gone from me, gone—! I remember nothing, it is as black as night. I do not know this place, I was never here before!"

Shocked and distressed beyond measure by his wild looks and mutterings, Louise hurried him back to the station; she was as anxious to get him away as he was to go. By great good luck they just caught an up train that took them back to town without any delay. All the way back Rupert sat plunged in the profoundest melancholy, he seemed scarcely conscious of what he was doing. Louise had to lead him about by the arm as though he had been a blind man.

In pouring out the whole story that night to Agatha's sympathising ears, after Rupert had gone to bed, she dwelt at length upon the extraordinary hallucination that had caused him to insist upon starting, in the middle of the night as it were, on such a wild and profitless journey.

Meanwhile upstairs, Rupert Carroll lay face downwards upon his bed. The deep darkness of his mental oblivion lay like a thick cloud upon him. For it was not the forgetfulness of sleep or of unconsciousness—very far from it. He knew perfectly that there was something that was of the utmost importance that he should remember, and yet, struggle as he would, he could not bring it back into his mind. He had a distinct impression that he was probably making shipwreck of his whole life because of the blank in his mind at this precise juncture, and yet he could do nothing to save himself. The expedition to Chatswell had brought no illumination to him. The place, the house, as he had seen them to-day, did not recall the faintest shadow of Irene to him—the voice that had called to him for help, had no personality in it—only a nameless vibration that had thrilled like an electric current through his veins. But her face—her image—her identity who had spoken, were enveloped in thickest clouds of impenetrable gloom.

Mercifully he did not know. There was no one to tell him that had he arrived only two short hours earlier at the once familiar cottage gate, he would have met there Irene herself, draped in deepest black from head to foot coming out of the house which it seemed to her she was leaving for the last—the very last time.

CHAPTER XI.

Agatha Dale was one of those women who have the strength to wait, as well as the wisdom to make, a discreet use of such opportunities as fall in their way. From her earliest girlhood she had loved her godmother's young brother, with a love that had grown into a part of herself. Unfortunately Miss Carroll in her affectionate desire to promote the happiness of both the young people under her care, had done her best to foster and stimulate the girl's misplaced fancy.

When Agatha had awakened to the bitter reality of her position she had at first suffered acutely both in her pride and in her heart, it was only after some years of hard and determined schooling of her thoughts that she imagined herself to be cured; and it was then that she had met Lord Netherville, and in a moment of impulse accepted the offer which he had made to her. On the night, however, that Rupert was brought home wounded and half dead, she recoiled all at once in dismay from what she had done, and broke off her brief engagement to Lord Netherville as quickly as she had entered into it.

Then came the long weeks of Rupert's illness and convalescence. Little by little, as the weeks and months went by, Agatha's heart began to beat once more with renewed hope. The loss of his memory was all in her favor. She knew, by that unerring instinct that women have in such matters, that those months of oblivion included a something that was very near to Rupert's heart. That something, she was quite sure, was a woman!

Well, Agatha did not wish to wrong any woman, or to come between a man and the girl he loved—she would have cut off her right hand sooner than be guilty of such baseness; but was it her fault if fate had stepped in and severed him from a rival? Could she help him back to his memory of her, by anything on earth that she could do?

After that fruitless expedition to Chatswell, Carroll seemed to become more resigned. Openly he was calmer, and although he had lost his once buoyant spirits, and was often plunged into the deepest fits of depression, still he made a strenuous and not altogether unsuccessful effort to resume his ordinary cheerfulness of manner.

Oddly enough, he took no steps to return to his town life. He was now perfectly well in health, but the quiet of Harvington seemed to suit him. No business claims called him back to London. Carroll was an idle man, whose income, although by no means large, was sufficient for all his needs, without any additional labor on his part. As he had told Irene, he was neither a rich man nor yet a pauper—he had a competence.

Cause and Effect.

"I want to exchange the hat I bought of you last week for another," said the lady, as she entered the milliner shop. "Everybody says it doesn't look good on me."

"I'm not at all surprised—if you wear it as you are doing now," rejoined the milliner. "You have it on upside down."

Generous.

"How nicely you have ironed these things, Jane," said the mistress admiringly to her maid. Then, glancing at the glossy linen, she continued in a tone of surprise: "Oh, but I see they are all your own."

"Yes," replied Jane, "and I'd do yours just like that if I had time."

No Resemblance.

Mrs. Newlywed—Ah! Some say he looks like me, and some say he looks like Fred.

Jack Bachelor—Nonsense! He don't look a bit like either of you.

Getting Back.

"Captain, what time does the boat start?"

"It starts, madam, when I give the word."

"Then I've always had the wrong idea. I thought it started when the engineer pulled the lever. Thank you ever so much."

An Explanation.

He—People like the old jokes best.

She—I suppose that is why the humorists are always at a woman's age.—Baltimore American.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Louis Ludwig, a wealthy farmer living near Hammond, was killed by the kick of a horse.

The dog fanciers at Huntington are agitating the question of holding a dog show in that city to be included in the circuit of the American Kennel Association.

A deposit of bones, both of humans and of lower animals, was discovered by workmen excavating on the property of Philip Lordier, 225 Douglas avenue, in the heart of the residence district of Fort Wayne.

Henry Hockman, aged 48 years, a well-known Spiritualist of Evansville, tired of life, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head. He is survived by a widow and several children. It is said Hockman's mind was unbalanced by Spiritualism.

In an automobile accident that occurred six miles south of Terre Haute, I. D. Andrews, of Terre Haute, was seriously injured. The other two occupants of the machine, F. Carmackle, of Paris, Ill., and R. V. Newton, of Terre Haute, received painful bruises.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Barmes, of Hope, are the parents of twin boys, the combined weight of the two being slightly more than twenty pounds. Mrs. Barmes is but 16 years old and her husband will not reach his twenty-first birthday until next month. Barmes is foreman of the Hope Journal office.

A. R. Gentry, Sr., of Rockport, has an English walnut tree in his yard which bore thirty-three walnuts this year. Seventeen years ago Mr. Gentry planted three English walnut trees and two of them grew. The tree has borne twice before. It is about twenty-five feet high and fifteen inches in circumference.

John Rupp and his son-in-law, John Ropp, both of Bloomington, Ill., endowed Goshen College to the extent of $10,000 in cash. The sum is to be paid January 1, 1910, with the proviso that it shall be invested in real estate and that another $10,000 shall be raised for the investment fund. The donors are members of the Mennonite church.

"I am going to Alaska to make my fortune; when it has been made I will send for you and we will get married," were the parting words of Guy Wing, of Hanna, twelve years ago to his fiancee, Miss Martha Keil. Miss Keil has just started for Alaska, where she will be married to Wing. The long expected message, breaking the silence of the twelve years, came with the intelligence that Wing had "struck it rich," had a home in readiness, and the clergyman engaged.

Appropriations amounting to $99,000, made by the last session of the State Legislature for the Southern Indiana Insane Hospital in Evansville, became available a few days ago, and according to Superintendent Laughlin no plans have yet been made to expend the money. The appropriations include $60,000 for a hospital for the sick, $30,000 for lands and a dairy, and $9,000 for wells and pumps. Offers of land suitable for dairy purposes have been made the trustees.

The three brothers, Louis, Harry and Julius Johnson, of Terre Haute, who have built record-making motor boats on the Wabash, are building a monoplane airship in secret and will soon make a secret trial of its sailing quality. The engine is patterned on the one used in their motor boats, with two cylinders at right angles and with fifty horse power. It is said the engine will weigh but 150 pounds. The brothers have built boats whose speed was phenomenal, and if run on waters where more publicity would result they would have attracted wide attention.

A wall of stone and concrete has been constructed around the monument commemorating the Pigeon Roost massacre, five miles south of Scottsburg. The wall is eighty feet long and four feet high. Several sassafrass trees were planted in the inclosure to take the place of the tree that has marked the spot for a century. The old tree is still living, although fast falling into decay. The tree was the sole marking place of the massacre for seventy years, and is now nearly four feet in diameter, being one of the largest in the southern portion of the State.

Scott County can not boast of a tree on its courthouse roof, but it can well be proud of something infinitely better. At the south entrance of the county building in Scottsburg some one dropped a watermelon seed in the grass last fall, and this spring a thriving melon vine was the result. The vine at this time contains eleven green watermelons and is rich in blossoms. Some of the melons are of good size, and the main vine is more than twenty feet long. The numerous branches of the vine almost fill up the twelve foot space between the building and the walk for quite a distance.

Judge Allen Zollars, of Fort Wayne, one of the most eminent jurists in Northern Indiana, recently underwent his third operation for kidney trouble. The physicians hold out hopes of recovery.

The acreage planted in sorghum cane in the vicinity of Lyons was large, and the manufacture of molasses has been going on for some time. Two cents a gallon is the price paid to the mills by the growers. The finished product sells for 60 cents a gallon.

The City Hospital at Wabash will be closed for lack of funds to maintain the institution.

It is claimed that 10,000 hogs are shipped yearly from Huntington to the eastern markets.

South Whitley has lowered her tax levy 25 cents on the $100 for the coming year from what it was in 1909.

The tracks of the new Bluffton, Geneva and Celina trolley line have been connected with those of the Marion, Bluffton and Eastern at Bluffton.

C. E. Kinney, formerly of Goshen and Elkhart, has accepted the position of assistant warden at the Illinois Reformatory for Boys at St. Charles, Ill.

Thomas Deniston and William Hitechew, who live at South Mud Lake, ate toadstools, thinking they were mushrooms, and had a close call from death.

Milo Bingham, a young man in Clay Township, Lagrange County, fell twenty-five feet from a tree which he had climbed in coon-hunting and fractured his leg.

The last service in the old Christian church at Angola was held last Sunday and the building will be razed to make way for the new church to be erected.

The Goshen gravel pit west of Osian was opened last week. The two pits on the Goshorn farm are now running in full blast getting out gravel for two roads.

St. Bernard's Catholic church at Wabash will establish a parochial school in the basement of the church building, which will be used until a building can be erected.

Grover Huber, of Marion, 17 years old, inaugurated the hunting season by the accidental discharge of his gun and the loss of two fingers and the thumb from his left hand.

Postmasters appointed: Hoagland, Allen County, William L. Waltemath, vice J. A. Schannep, resigned; Ontario, Lagrange County, Hallie V. Schindler, vice F. A. Mann, removed.

The Hagenbeck-Wallace shows, which winter at Peru, will close this season at New Orleans November 10, and will arrive home the next week. This has been an exceedingly profitable season for the circus.

Rev. Loyd Douglas, son of Rev. A. J. Douglas, of Columbia City, has been called to the pastorate of Lutheran Place Memorial church at Washington, D. C. The young man has recently been stationed at Lancaster, Ohio.

Horace Dickinson, of Birmingham, Ala., aged 20 years, is under arrest at Evansville and has confessed that he deserted from the battleship Ohio on which he was a seaman. He says he left the ship in order to keep from marching in the big Fulton-Hudson naval parade at New York.

An abundance of quails is reported in the counties of the First District this year. The season has been favorable for developing the young birds and they are said to be in unusually fine condition, and November 10, the date of the opening of the hunting season, will find many hunters in the field.

The Peru Canning Company, of Peru, is almost begging for help in order to save the tomato crop which is a large one. The factory is working twenty-four hours a day and has seven hundred men and women peeling tomatoes. The company has appealed to the missionary societies of the various churches for assistance.

As a result of brutal hazing by four schoolmates, Albert Whitticker, aged 11, of South Bend, is in a serious condition. Whitticker was stripped of his clothing, tied to a tree and so terribly beaten with clubs that he fainted. When the hazers realized what they had done they ran in fear, but later one of the boys returned and released the victim. Young Whitticker says he refused to keep off forbidden "nutting ground" and was punished.

George W. McAninck, a Putnam County farmer, whose neck was broken several weeks ago, died at St. Vincent's Hospital in Indianapolis. McAninck had a habit for years of ducking his head whenever he drove into his barn. He had successfully dodged a heavy beam above the door hundreds of times. On the last trip he failed to duck far enough, and the beam pushed his head back so far that his spine snapped. He was 47 years old.

Many gathered at the old court house in Jasper as the wreckers approached the corner stone of the landmark to see what it contained. When the cap of the corner stone was lifted the opening was found empty. A few old citizens say they were present at the time the corner stone of the court house was laid and that several gold pieces were placed in it, together with many papers and books. It is supposed some one robbed the corner stone of the contents.

Burglars entered the study of the M. E. church at Shoals and robbed the birthday box of the infant class of $2 in pennies. The box was being filled with pennies representing the ages of the children of the church.

Burglars entered the office of the Richmond Dairy Company, and after forcing open a safe got away with $100. The police believe the work was that of boys that have been causing much trouble recently. Several arrests have been made.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The weekly review of trade made by R. G. Dun & Co. said: "Fall operations in both production and distribution have started out under most encouraging conditions. Not only does the accumulation of forward work in the leading industries compare favorably with the best times, but new demand is yet well sustained, and heavy undertakings announced indicate a remarkable extension of enterprise in manufacturing and transportation.

"Payments through the banks evidence active exchanges, the aggregates for September and this week being largely in excess of the corresponding periods last year. Money finds an ample outlet in commercial circles and the banks are enabled to secure more profitable returns. The demands for accommodations reflect extending enterprise in leading channels, although there are also indications of speculative tendencies in the markets for securities and grain. Farm advices show seasonable progress in seeding and the crop growth satisfactorily advanced.

"Bank clearings, $268,505,536, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 18.8 per cent, and compare with $263,309,200 in 1907.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 29, against 28 last week, 27 in 1908 and 25 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 11, against 11 last week, 6 in 1908 and 4 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

With the advent of cooler weather this week a bar to fullest trade development has been removed and final distribution has been enlarged. Railway traffic is expanding, and idle cars have almost disappeared as the crop, industrial and general merchandise movements have expanded. Industrial reports are still of expansion, and the trades allied to the iron and steel industries ae returning reports of full or extra time. In the textile trades there are evidences that buyers and sellers are still apart on the question of prices of manufactured cottons. High raw material—the highest, in fact, recorded for years at this period—renders manufacturers disinclined to book freely at existing quotations. It is true some buyers for next spring and summer are evincing a willingness to pay advanced prices, and quotations are certainly firmer or higher as a whole, but a good portion of the trade still hangs off.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Sept. 30 were 195, against 171 last week, 225 in the week of 1908, 177 in 1907, 136 in 1906 and 189 in 1905. Business failures in Canada for the week number 22, which compares with 37 for last week and 36 for the like week in 1908.

Headache
For Years

"I keep Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills on hand all the time, and would not think of taking a journey without them, no matter how short a distance I am going. I have a sister that has had terrible headaches for years and I coaxed her to try them and they helped her so much, she now keeps them by her all the time. From my own experience I cannot praise them enough."
MRS. LOU M. CHURCHILL
63 High st., Penacook, N. H.

Many persons have headaches after any little excitement or exertion. They cannot attend church, lectures, entertainments or ride on trains without suffering. Those who suffer in this way should try Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. They give almost instant relief without leaving any disagreeable after-effects, as they do not derange the stomach or bowels; just a pleasurable sense of relief follows their use. Get a package from your druggist. Take it according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

Right now is the time for parents to take notice of the work done by their children in the public schools. Every June several parents are surprised to find that the boy or girl has failed in examination, and hence has fallen behind the grade. At that time in the year nothing can be done but to let the child go back into the next lower grade. If the parents will begin to get interested right now, in October and keep up that interest every week, every day, till April a marked improvement will be apparent. Keep track of the standings, and have frequent conferences with the teacher. This encourages both teacher and pupil.

The Free Fall Exhibit at Auburn last week is over now and goes down on record as a very successful one. The displays were large and numerous and the attractions numerous. Large crowds attended each day. Several horses from this way were entered, the prizes awarded were worth looking after. The attendance was large from this vicinity.

October is called the dream month of the year. The promise of seedtime and harvest has been fulfilled, the fruits of field, garden and forest, gathered and garnered, and the husbandman feels that nature has repaid him for the long, hard months of toil that lie behind. Now come the still days, the golden sunshine, the hazy, smoke-tinged atmosphere, the balmy air scented with the pungent fragrance of ripened fruits and foliage. Falling leaves strew the pathways and choke the streams, while tree and shrub and vine are clothed in brilliancy of coloring no painter's brush can rival. The gorgeousness and glory of the sunrises and sunsets are wonderful, and neither brush, pen nor word can imprison their subtleties of tint and shade. Wood parties are now at their best, and the patter of the ripened nuts, the purple of the wild grapes and the late fruits that invite the frost touches for ripening, all invite the family to outings, the pleasures of which no other season of the year can rival. Truant Officer, Edmund Van Fleit is now spending his time visiting the schools of the county. So far he has completed calling on the districts in Smithfield, Richmond, Franklin, Keyser and a portion of Jackson townships, and expects to have made the rounds by the latter part of the month. The attendance in all schools visited, Mr. Van Fleit says, is unusually good this year.—Exchange. He will surely have several to trace up when he arrives here, as there are several youngsters who should be in school and are not. Parents should know the necessity of having an education and should have their childrens interests more at heart.

Many of our readers will remember that during the cold snap of last winter they wished they had done away with the old heater that will no longer do the work. Don't go through the chilly experience of last winter again. Enjoy the comforts of the new stove the whole season now.

Cole's Hot Blast, the Original, from Chicago, sold by us, never fails in an emergency. In the coldest weather it meets every requirement. It warms the rooms with a steady, even heat, and if attended to every 24 hours the fire will not go out all winter long. The stove can be shut up air tight and will hold fire from Saturday night until Monday morning. It holds fire over night and by simply opening a draft there will be enough fuel left from the evening before to heat the rooms one to three hours in the morning. Every user of Cole's Hot Blast heater has the genuine luxury of dressing in warm rooms and eating breakfast in a comfortable dining room without getting up in the cold to kindle a fire.

We have them on hand and will be glad to show them to you. The price runs from $12.00 up.

A WHOLE YEAR FOR $1.00

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1.00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. This is a good copy to start with. We'll save an extra one until Monday. Yes?

Country vs City.

It is a well known fact that city bred folks are prone to believe that they are far superior in knowledge and wisdom to the people of the rural districts. And it is generally accepted that the brain work is being done by the former class, the claim being made that their advantages for securing knowledge is far superior to their rural friends.

We have often wondered if this isn't a misconception, or perhaps an out-of-date idea which has been handed down from the times of Benjamin Franklin when there were but few schools and the printing business was in its infancy. The average city man is merely a piece of machinery, toiling from morning till night at one thing until it becomes second nature to him, thus his reasoning propensities become dwarfed because of laying dormant. The person who fills the position in the rural districts has something new before him all the time. The clerk in the country store must know how to keep books, make up the cash at the close of the day, write the ads for the local paper; he must know how to order goods, and often times is sent to the city to buy goods, and hence must know something about the quality and understand the styles and then use, his best judgment as to what would most likely sell in his territory.

The farmer has all opportunity to read and plenty of time to digest what he reads. He is not troubled with what the city folks are pleased to call "society." He has time to learn about his government and keeps posted on what the government is doing for him, and perhaps that accounts for the general high prices in all farm products. The farmer is the most intelligent voter today; he studies the issues carefully and knows what will benefit him and what will not. The average city employe votes the way his employer tells him, and thus he is saved from the trouble of studying up the matter for himself.

So the boy who leaves the country for the advantages of the city should remember that there are disadvantage also, and that if he does not want to become a piece of machinery his place is in the rural districts where people think for themselves.

WHAT OTHERS SAY OF THEM.

I take pleasure in saying that Miss Bessie May has a splendid voice of purity and power which combined with her interpretation and expression, together with fine enunciation and tone placement, win for her the admiration of all who have the pleasure of hearing her.—Elmer B Funk, Chorister M. E. church, Warsaw, Ind.

The violiniste, Miss Hadsell was a favorite from the first. She captivated her hearers by her perfectly natural manner and the grace and esse with which she played. Special mention should be made of Souvenir de Wieniawski.—Albion, Ind.

Of Miss Blackburn's playing much can be said and yet only one thing—it was superb. She played with grace and precision, such only as can result from thorough musical training and strong musicanly instincts and the enthusiasm she aroused was such as could not fail to delight the heart of any artist.—Hicksville News.

Miss Moon rendered her selections in a very gracious manner and brought forth hearty applause. Her first encore was Riley's Nothin' To Say.—Logansport Daily Tribune.

First English Woman Smoker.

Mary Frith, better known as Moll Cutpurse, was a notable figure in old-time London life. She had the reputation of being the first woman to smoke tobacco in England.

The length of her days is a disputed point, says the Milligate Monthly, but it seems certain in that she attained the age of over threescore years and ten. It is asserted that constant smoking prolonged her life. A portrait representing her in the act of smoking forms the frontispiece of Middleton's comedy of the "Roaring Girl." She also figures in other plays of the period.

Mary was the daughter of a shoemaker living in the Barbican, and Malone gives 1584 as the date of her birth. She early took to wicked ways and became a noted "highwayman." Among her familiar friends were the notorious Captain Hind and Richard Hannam. She was an expert swordswoman. Single handed she robbed on Hounslow Heath General Fairfax of 200 gold jacobuses, shooting him through the arm and killing two of his horses on which his servants were riding. For the offense she was committed to Newgate, but on paying the general £2,000 she obtained her liberty.

At one time Mary had £3,000 of her own, but by giving money to distressed cavaliers she died comparatively poor. Her death took place in July, 1569, and she was laid to rest in St. Bridget's.

FOOD QUESTION

Settled with Perfect Satisfaction by a Dyspeptic.

It's not an easy matter to satisfy all the members of the family at meal time as every housewife knows.

And when the husband has dyspepsia and can't eat the simplest ordinary food without causing trouble, the food question becomes doubly annoying.

An Illinois woman writes:

"My husband's health was poor, he had no appetite for anything I could get for him, it seemed.

"He was hardly able to work, was taking medicine continually, and as soon as he would feel better would go to work again only to give up in a few weeks. He suffered severely with stomach trouble.

"Tired of everything I had been able to get for him to eat, one day seeing an advertisement about Grape-Nuts, I got some and he tried it for breakfast the next morning.

"We all thought it was pretty good, although we had no idea of using it regularly. But when my husband came home at night he asked for Grape-Nuts.

"It was the same next day and I had to get it right along, because when we would get to the table the question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts?' was a regular thing. So I began to buy it by the dozen pkgs.

"My husband's health began to improve right along. I sometimes felt offended when I'd make something I thought he would like for a change, and still hear the same old question, "Have you any Grape-Nuts?"

"He got so well that for the last two years he has hardly lost a day from his work, and we are still using Grape-Nuts." Read the book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

By Rev. G. B. F. Hallock, D. D.

Let a man so account for us as of the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God. 1 Cor. iv.:1.

A steward is a housemaster. He is one who has charge of the affairs of a family or household, whose duty it is to provide for the family, to purchase provisions and the like, and is plainly an office of much trust and confidence. It is also an office affording great opportunity for dishonesty and waste and for ill-use of property. It is an office implying also strict accountability. We are, all of us, said the Apostle Paul, "stewards of the mysteries of God." That is, we are entrusted by God with many transcendent interests connected with the gospel of His Son and the mysteries of redemption.

We are to guard against thinking that the use of this term "mysteries" means secrets only for the initiated, for those who became members of their secret societies. On the contrary, the word as used here by the apostle is a very wide word, designating the mystery of the cross, the mystery of redemption, the universal gospel of Christ, of which His people are made stewards for the benefit of all the world. And the idea of stewardship is emphasized here to show how much depends upon each Christian proving faithful in his or her place to his or her trust.

This idea of Christian stewardship has application in many directions. There is the stewardship of personal gifts. This idea of our stewardship is given emphasis by the Apostle Peter, when he says: "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same to one another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." This simply presses upon us the fact that every power, every grace, every accomplishment, every property of qualification we have is something with which we are placed in trust by God and which we may use, and be responsible for using, to the furtherance of His kingdom.

This, we are glad to believe, is a conception of life that is growing among men. Increasing numbers of people are recognizing that their talents are possessions of trust, and that they are responsible for using them in the best possible way of God. It is a conception of life that has in it also infinite possibilities of joy and inspiration. It is a great thing when Christians, rich or poor, exalted or humble, begin to realise how much a life may mean, how large its possibilities. It is a conception of life, too, that has great room for becoming more widely prevalent, for there are yet untold measures of resources unused among those who profess to be Christ's followers.

Another phase of this stewardship we might mention is the stewardship of Christian institutions. The Christian steward is not only sent to use his personal powers and gifts, but he is one set in charge of something. Here is the Church of Christ. It is to be fostered and fed and all its interests conserved. There are colleges and seminaries and schools and hospitals and refuges and rescue missions and hundreds of kindred institutions both at home and in mission fields. They are a trust committed to Christian men and Christian women. They are to be preserved and guided and handed on to the coming generations. It is a happy fact that so many persons accept their stewardship in this direction, and so we see large gifts for building and endowments being made; we see people of large business interests and capacity giving their time and influence to the furtherance of such institutions, many willingly loading themselves with responsibilities and duties and cares under the compulsion of this worthy motive of being stewards of God under the trust of institutions. As trustees of colleges and mission boards, as those who endow institutions with their wealth, as those who work for and pray for and further such interests, increasing numbers of God's people are accepting responsibilities as stewards of Christian institutions.

Another phase of this stewardship is what we may term the stewardship of the truth. We are all "stewards of the mysteries of God," entrusted with the gospel, put in charge of the truth. We have this trust for the benefit of the world.

One of the cautions which each Christian may well regard is that he is only a steward. He is not the owner. The truth is given to him. It is not made by him. We are to use the truth as it is given to us, not to make it over into any form we please, or mix it with error, or with our vain imaginings and guesses. "We are stewards of the mysteries of God," and we are not released from responsibility for faithfulness because we happen to find some of the truth mysterious or beyond our ken. We are stewards of the mystery of the Incarnation, of the mystery of Christ's divine human person, of the mystery of His atoning sacrifices for sin, of the mystery of His cross, His resurrection, His reign, His mysterious indwelling in believers, His working in men's hearts and in the world through the presence of the Holy Spirit. These things are all mysteries, but they are put into our hands as facts, as truth to be used and taught and preached by us and brought home to the hearts of all men to the end of their salvation.

But with the caution there goes a command. We are to use only the truth; but we are to use it. Christ put it into our hands and then said: "Go teach all nations." "Preach the gospel to every creature." "As stewards of the mysteries of God" we are to be ever faithful.

WE SHOULD BE THANKFUL.

By Rev. Ernst A. Tappert.

Pay Me that thou owest.—Matt 18:28.

We are about to celebrate two important events in the history of our country, and especially of our city—the discovery of the Hudson river, which brought about the founding of New York, and the invention of the steamboat, which contributed largely to the upbuilding of our metropolis and the country.

The commission in charge of the celebration has, among other recommendations, very appropriately issued a call for a religious celebration. Why should we as Christians celebrate in our churches such events? Because we recognize in them the loving kindness of God and the extraordinary blessings which He has thereby bestowed upon us, and because we know that He wants us to be sensible of His benefits and mindful of what St. Paul says:

"Offer unto God thanksgivings and pay thy vows unto the Most High." Hence the demand of the Almighty which sounds into our joyous celebrations, "Pay Me that thou owest."

To the average Christian the thought scarcely ever occurs that he should be thankful for the common blessings of life. Who ever thanks for the air he breathes, for the water he drinks, for the sunshine he enjoys? And what applies to these common blessings is true of the special privileges we enjoy as a nation. Who is thankful for the good and fertile soil of America, which God blesses with more abundance than any other part of the globe? Who appreciates the liberties and opportunities which this country so liberally offers to all?

The half-starved immigrant generally does. Coming from a barren land, from under the severest oppression, America seems to him the Canaan of milk and honey, the land of glorious liberty. Our own people often remain unconscious of what we have, unthankful for their great privilege. We are a people of great self-respect; but where self-respect is not coupled with self-knowledge it breeds conceit, and truly there are many so self-conceited that they look with gratification upon the wonderful accomplishments of our country and say: "We are the people!" But they forget to give praise and honor to Him who of His loving kindness has so abundantly blessed our country and now demands in return, "Pay Me that thou owest!"

May, then, the retrospect of a glorious past inspire us to work for a more glorious future. May the just pride over our accomplishments not blind us to our shortcomings and may this great celebration present unto the Lord a grateful people, which, amid booming cannon and glittering fireworks, sound the praises of the Almighty. O, give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; for His mercy endureth forever.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

CORONATION.

By Edward Perronet.

[Edward Perronet (London, 1726-1792), an eccentric preacher associated with the Wesleys, would have been long ago forgotten but for his one great hymn. He wrote several other hymns, but they have all passed out of use, while this one has been given a place in the group of the four greatest Christian hymns. Its theme of the universal Lord ruling all nations has made it a favorite with congregations in "every kindred, every tribe," and gatherings in India, and in Africa, and in China sing it with the same emphasis as those at home. In the United States it is usually sung to the tune, "Coronation," while in other lands "Miles Lane" is used. The hymn has always been a favorite with soldiers, being sung frequently on the march, and in some instances its throbbing strains have put new life into dispirited regiments and swung them back into line, turning defeat into victory. The last verse of the hymn is said to have been added by John Rippon in 1787.]

All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all.

Crown him, ye morning stars of light,
Who fixed this floating ball;
Now hail the strength of Israel's might,
And crown him Lord of all.

Crown him, ye martyrs of our God,
Who from his altar call;
Extol the stem of Jesse's rod,
And crown him Lord of all.

Ye chosen seed of Israel's race,
Ye ransomed from the fall;
Hail him, who saves you by his grace,
And crown him Lord of all.

Sinners, whose love can ne'er forget
The wormwood and the gall;
Go, spread your trophies at his feet,
And crown him Lord of all.

Let every kindred, every tribe,
On this terrestrial ball,
To him all majesty ascribe,
And crown him Lord of all.

O! that with yonder sacred throng
We at his feet may fall;
We'll join the everlasting song,
And crown him Lord of all.

The Chevy Chase caddies are still chuckling over a story about President Taft. The President, one afternoon, played rather badly. He turned to his caddy, after he had foozled a drive, and said in his genial way:

"This isn't a pleasant spectacle for you. I'm as bad as a Scotch laird at St. Andrews. The St. Andrews caddies are all old men; and one day when this laird was in especially bad form, his caddie, after nine holes of missed shots and putts, shook his old grey head, surrendered the laird's bag of clubs to another caddie, and said:

"'Ye'll no mind, laird? I made but a poor breakfast this mornin' and I'm no in a condition to stand any mair o't.'"

Metallic Ribbons.

There is a process in use in England whereby a metallic ribbon a mile long can be turned out in about the same time that it takes a locomotive to travel a mile—that is, one minute. The molten metal is caused to flow through a nozzle in a thin stream upon the outside of a rapidly rotating water-cooled drum. The metal solidifies immediately and is thrown off from the surface of the drum in the form of a continuous and uniform ribbon. It is possible to obtain the metal ribbons as thin as one-thousandth of an inch. The metals used in the making of different ribbons are aluminum, lead, zinc, tin, copper, silver and gold.

Necessity of Beauty.

Schiller in his esthetical and philosophical essays wrote that "Beauty alone confers happiness on all," that under its influence men forget their limitations. Happiness is our being's end and aim. And without beauty even happiness in its perfect flowering is impossible.

"George Moore, the author of Esther Waters, likes to talk," said a magazine editor of New York, "about his own obscurity, very obscure. Lunching with me one day at Claridge's, he said he had recently met a young American girl whose warm praise had pleased him much.

"'We think a heap of your writings out Kansas way, Mr. Moore,' the young girl said.

"'How jolly!' cried the novelist 'And what story of mine do the good people of Kansas like best?'

"'Oh, Lalla Rookh, far and away!' said she."

BEES THAT WORK ALL YEAR.

Apiarist Keeps Them Busy By Sending Them South in Winter.

A quaint method of working the bees overtime was given by one of the enthusiasts, who claims that the bees really enjoy the "busy" life throughout the year, when they find themselves where honey producing blossoms are plentiful, the Indianapolis Star says.

"My bees now work overtime," he said. "No hibernating for them. In the spring I send them down south and they toil like blazes among the southern flowers. In summer I bring them here to the East, working them till the honeysuckle and the clover are quite gone. The autumn season finds them in Florida, where they make a peculiarly rich and aromatic honey from the Florida flowers. California gives them all they can do in the winter.

"It's a splendid idea. I got it from those hotel keepers of Europe, who have winter hotels on the Riviera and summer hotels in Dinard or Trouville. My traveling bees yield thrice as much honey as stay-at-home ones. Thank goodness, there are no labor unions among these insects."

The beekeepers, who, on the other hand, are content to have their bees remain in the same place throughout the year and work during the blossom time of fruits, flowers, the barley and clover and wayside flowers, were consulted as to the best methods of housing the bees during the winter.

Some experts are in favor of sheltering the colony by placing all the hives in a sort of open pen, snugly inclosed on the north and left open to the southern exposure. These inclosures are preferably long and narrow and but little higher than the hives, which are set close together in a straight line. Here the summer workers hibernate during the coldest winter weather, and so cosy and warm are their winter quarters that they are strong and hardy and ready for work at the first possible suggestion of early spring bloom.

His Dilemma.

Customer (nervously)—I want a beefsteak to take home to dinner. Unexpected guest, you know. Wife telephoned me to get the steak. Jane always buys the meat herself, you see, and she's awfly particular. What have you got?

The Butcher (encouragingly)—Well, wot do you say to a nice juicy porterhouse, cut thick; or maybe you'd prefer a couple o' cuts of tenderloin?

Customer (still more nervously)—Well, I'm blest if I know which. Say, you couldn't let me have a couple o' samples to take home an' show her, could you? It's only a half dozen blocks from here.

Facts For Sick Women

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or secured so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Almost every woman you meet has either been benefited by it, or knows some one who has.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing over one million one hundred thousand letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The reason why it is so successful is because it contains ingredients which act directly upon the female organism, restoring it to healthy and normal activity.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials such as the following prove the efficiency of this simple remedy.

Minneapolis, Minn.:—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women, I felt sure it would help me, and I must say it did help me wonderfully. Within three months I was a perfectly well woman.

"I want this letter made public to show the benefits to be derived from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. John G. Moldan, 2115 Second St. North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

Registration Dates, Oct. 4 to 23, inclusive.

The General Land Office at Washington has designated Le Beau and Aberdeen, So. Dak., on the Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. as registration points.

Le Beau, which is the Missouri River terminus of the Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R., is located on the Missouri River, opposite the Reservation, and is the nearest railroad station to three-fifths of the land.

Aberdeen, the other registration point, is the chief city in northern South Dakota.

There will be about 14,000 quarter sections allotted to settlers. The land lays well for farming over most of the reservation. The soil is a light loam and is very fertile. It is similar to that in the counties east of the River, where the land sells from $25.00 to $30.00 per acre. Lignite coal is found over a great part of the reservation.

Who May Secure a Homestead—Under the homestead laws of the United States, any person, male or female who is not the owner of more than 160 acres of land in any state or territory, who is a native born citizen of the United States, or has been naturalized, or declared his intention to become a naturalized citizen of the United States (i. e., one who has taken out his first papers of citizenship), who is over the age of 21 years or the head of a family, may make a homestead entry of not exceeding 160 acres of any of the unoccupied lands of the United States.

TAFT'S LIFE IN DANGER!

Heavily Armed Man Is Arrested by Police in Portland, Ore.

The assassination of President Taft, it is declared, was averted Saturday afternoon by the quick action of the police in Portland, Ore., when a heavily armed man, who had been endeavoring to gain a place of vantage near the President, was taken into custody. The suspect, who says his name is Arthur G. Wright, a man of means of Lowell, Mass., is being held on a temporary charge of carrying a concealed pistol, but the authorities will investigate his case thoroughly before bond is fixed. The attempt took place in front of the Portland Hotel, just as the President was preparing to enter his automobile to participate in the great military parade planned in his honor.

Captain Bailey of the Portland police and two local detectives were on duty near the hotel entrance. All three men were in plain clothes. Just as the President was emerging from the entrance to the hotel Wright was noticed. Apparently he was a simple camera fiend. He had a kodak in his hands and was struggling through the crowd in a seeming effort to get near the President to secure a snap shot. So eager was he, so repeated were his attempts and so excited was his demeanor that the officers determined to investigate his conduct.

He was seized from behind by one of the detectives, and immediately there was a sharp struggle. The man made frantic efforts to free himself, and the other officers had to come to the assistance of their comrade to prevent the man escaping into the crowd. On being searched a heavy caliber six shot revolver was found concealed in a holster under his coat, while in his pockets there was a large amount of loose ammunition. On the inside of the coat was found a police badge marked "Lowell." Despite the efforts of the police to hustle the man to the nearest station as quietly as possible, the crowd swarmed about them, and a number of threats were made as to the safety of the prisoner.

INDICTMENTS HURT RICH MEN.

Vanderbilt and Others Involved in Anti-Gambling Cases.

The indictments by the grand jury of the Coney Island and Brooklyn Jockey Clubs for violation of the anti-betting laws of New York State, which became public Monday, involve a number of the most prominent supporters of racing in the United States. W. K. Vanderbilt owns a controlling interest in the Coney Island Jockey Club, of which Schuyler L. Parsons is president; George Peabody Wetmore and Mr. Vanderbilt are vice presidents, F. R. Hitchcock, treasurer; V. E. Schaumberg, secretary, and Thomas H. Smith, racing secretary.

The board of governors includes J. Harry Alexander, F. Gray Griswold, Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., E. D. Morgan, Herbert C. Pell, F. K. Sturgis and J. W. Wadsworth. The president of the Brooklyn Jockey Club, which operates the Gravesend track, is Philip J. Dwyer. F. Rehberger is secretary.

It was the increase of "oral betting," conducted by the so-called "memory brokers," that resulted in this latest evidence of Gov. Hughes' continued activity and the indictments. For some time it was known that Gov. Hughes was dissatisfied with the apparent increase in oral betting. There is much gloomy speculation among followers of racing as to the probable effect of the new crusade against gambling.

TORTURE BANKER'S WIFE.

Masked Men Suspend Woman from a Rafter in Woodshed.

Posses are hunting the assailants of Mrs. W. B. Scott, wife of a banker, of Lansing, Mich., found in the woodshed of her home Sunday, gagged and suspended by the wrists from a rafter so her toes just touched the floor. The woman had been attacked by two masked men and had been tied up for four hours before her husband and a neighbor found her. She was utterly exhausted when cut down and has suffered severely from the shock.

According to the story told the police, Mrs. Scott, hearing a noise, entered the woodshed in her night clothes just after the men had opened the door and stepped into the shadows. They seized her and threw her to the floor. After procuring a clothes line from the yard they bound and gagged her and hung her to the rafter. They then entered the house and searched for money, but found none. Mrs. Scott says the men were masked, but one of them resembled a man who called at her house Friday and represented himself to be a detective. The house was for sale and on the pretext that he was looking for a house to buy he was shown through.

BANK BANDITS GET $10,000.

Hold Up Cashier, Take All Money in Sight and Gallop Away.

The Citizens' National Bank of Glenwood Springs, Col., was held up and robbed of $10,000 in cash by three unmasked but heavily armed men. The robbers escaped to the valley westward thirty minutes ahead of a sheriff's mounted posse. Two of the robbers held up Assistant Cashier E. E. Drach. Drach hesitated a moment, when one of the bandits told him to "hurry or be shot." Drach gave the men all the money in sight. As they rode away Deputy Sheriff Devidless appeared, but they escaped his bullets by dashing into the valley.

TOTAL LOSS OF HAIR

Seemed Imminent—Scalp Was Very Scaly and Hair Came Out by Handfuls—Scalp Now Clear and New Hair Grown by Cuticura.

"About two years ago I was troubled with my head being scaly. Shortly after that I had an attack of typhoid fever and I was out of the hospital possibly two months when I first noticed the loss of hair, my scalp being still scaly. I started to use dandruff cures to no effect whatever. I had actually lost hope of saving any hair at all. I could brush it off my coat by the handful. I was afraid to comb it. But after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and nearly a box of Cuticura Ointment, the change was surprising. My scalp is now clear and healthy as could be and my hair thicker than ever, whereas I had my mind made up to be bald. W. F. Steese, 5812 Broad St., Pittsburg, Pa., May 7 and 21, 1908."

Pronunciation.

Dr. Johnson would not have consented to pronounce "wind" differently in prose and in verse. He insisted upon making the "i" long always. The story goes that, in order to crush somebody who preferred the short "i" in ordinary conversation, Johnson, rhyming all three words with "tinned," remarked, "I cannot find it in my mind to call it wind, but"—rhyming all three words with "blind"—"I can find it in my mind to call it wind." But his adversary got the better of him. Johnson himself always pronounced "gold"' as "goold." "If I may be so boold," said the other, "I should like to be toold why you call it goold."

WISHED DEATH MIGHT COME

To Relieve the Awful Suffering of Advanced Kidney Disease.

William Gibson, Greenup, Ky., says: "Three months I was in bed, and would have died, I believe, but for Doan's Kidney Pills. My doctor said the case was hopeless. My back felt as if it were being seared with a red-hot iron. The kidney secretions were painful, irregular and full of sediment. There were puffy spots beneath my eyes and my head pained terribly. I was miserable in every way and often wished death might relieve me. When I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills my condition was so serious that they had little effect, but I persisted, getting gradually better, and it was not a great while before I was cured. The effect has been lasting."

When You Think

Of the pain which many women experience with every month it makes the gentleness and kindness always associated with womanhood seem to be almost a miracle. While in general no woman rebels against what she regards as a natural necessity there is no woman who would not gladly be free from this recurring period of pain.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well, and gives them freedom from pain. It establishes regularity, subdues inflammation, heals ulceration and cures female weakness.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Write without fear and without fee to World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y.

If you want a book that tells all about woman's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 21 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce to pay cost of mailing only, and he will send you a free copy of his great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser—revised, up-to-date edition, in paper covers. In handsome cloth-binding, 31 stamps.

We Startled a Good Many People with our Heater Offer Did You Read It?

We put some statements about heating stoves down in black and white that stove users never heard before. We want to repeat them!

Remember, we are backed up by one of the grandest stove manufacturing concerns in the world—yes, backed by a concern that makes and sells more soft coal heaters each year by three times than any other maker anywhere.

So there are millions of dollars behind what we have to say about heaters this year!

To us alone is given the right to make the most unusual guarantee ever made on a heating stove.

Cole's Hot Blast Guarantee

Here is our authority from the President of the Cole Manufacturing Co.—the strongest guarantee ever made on a heater:

"You are authorized to sell the Original Cole's Hot Blast Heater this year on the most rigid guarantee ever made by any stove manufacturer. Our guarantee to every customer of yours is—
"1—A saving of one-third in fuel over any lower draft stove of the same size, with soft coal, slack or lignite.
"2—That Cole's Hot Blast will use less hard coal for heating a given space than any base burner made with same size fire pot.
"3—That the rooms can be heated from one to two hours each morning with the soft coal or hard coal put in the stove the evening before.
"4—That the stove will hold fire with soft coal from Saturday night until Monday morning.
"5—A uniform heat day and night, with soft coal, hard coal or lignite.
"6—That every stove will remain absolutely air-tight as long as used.
"7—That the feed-door fits and will remain smoke and dust-proof.
"All we ask is that the stove shall be operated according to directions and set up with a good flue.

"(Signed) COLE MANUFACTURING CO."

The question of town election has been causing considerable discussion. One night last week the citizens gathered together and nominated a couple of tickets and it was found out later that one of the tickets was no good. On Saturday night another caucus was held and an independent ticket placed in the field. The prospects are for a warm fight here this election and considerable money will be put up no doubt. The tickets are excellent and will be published next week. While the matter is not political a good interest is being manifested.

Notice of Election.

Notice is hereby given to the legal voters of the incorporated town of St. Joe, Indiana, that on Tuesday, November 2nd., 1909, an election will be held for the purpose of electing a set of officers for said town as follows, to-wit: Three trustees, one from each district, one Clerk, one Treasurer and one Marshal.

Said election will be held between the hours of 8 A. M. and 4 P. M. of said day in the town of St. Joe.

The young people of the Christian church at Newville, will give a Hallow-een entertainment in the church the evening of October 20th. Entertainment to consist of Music, Recitations and Dialogues. Admission 10c.

Mr. Jacob Pfaummer, who lived one mile north of the old dutch church south-east of here, died on last Thursday, October 14. He was born in Boden, Germany, October 14 1812. He had lived to the ripe old age of 97 years, and the last three years of his life were unpleasant, having been entirely blind. The funeral was held last Sunday at the Scipio church and burial at Scipio cemetery. Rev. Mohler of Harlan officiating, Elza King funeral director.

STOLEN, a lot of underwear. Sol Barney got it. He sells it for 85 cents. See it.

Mrs. M. T. Bishop's Sunday School class gave her a farewell surprise visit at her home, Tuesday evening. The earlier part of the evening was spent in a social manner, after which supper was served. The class then departing for their homes wishing Mr. and Mrs. Bishop a safe journey and a speedy return.

Forrest Dermott of Coburntown, and Hazel Smurr of Mooresville, were united in marriage, last Saturday evening at the M. E. parsonage at Auburn, by Rev. W. B. Freeland. The young people are well and favorably known in their community. They expect to live with the groom's mother until spring, when they will erect a new house on their farm near Newville Center school house. Many useful presents were received Sunday by them.

The following pupils were neither tardy nor absent during the first month of school at Saylor's Corners, Marguerite Milliman, Ethel Lyons, Alva Collins, Garcia Krabill, Roy Collins, Harvey Hull, Fred Saylor, Alta Hull, Belle Church, James Gloy, Carl Carpenter, Paul Carpenter and Darrel Carpenter. The school boasts of its record for the first month, there having been out two cases of absence and none of tardiness. Can another school in the township do as well?

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

A Dash for Cash.

A fashionably dressed bandit, who robbed the savings bank of D. M. Erskine & Co., in Highland Park, Ill., a village north of Chicago, committed suicide by shooting himself in the mouth when driven to bay by an officer and a posse of citizens. A companion of the robber who had driven him to the bank in an automobile was captured immediately following the robbery, which forced the principal actor in the crime to flee on foot. He then engaged in a running duel with Town Marshal John Sheehan, and failing to drive back his pursuer ran into a shed. When he saw Sheehan enter the shed with his revolver leveled at his head, the fugitive put the muzzle of his own revolver n his mouth and fired, death ensuing almost immediately. The man arrested refused to discuss the robbery or to disclose his or his companion's identity. The robbery was conducted in a deliberate and spectacular manner, the bandit securing $500 in gold and bills after he had forced John C. Duffy, cashier of the bank, Miss Nellie Fitzgerald, the bookkeeper, and Joseph F. Richards, the receiving teller, into the cashier's cage just after the closing of business for the day.

Trolley Car Struck By Train.

A fast train on the Calumet railway struck a Lake Shore interurban car at a street crossing in East Chicago, Ind., throwing it from the rails and turning it on its side, but no one was killed. Two women passengers were severely injured and several of the passengers were badly bruised. The interurban car was going east and the train was speeding northward, both at a high speed. The engine hit the interurban almost in the middle, throwing it in the air and when it landed it was on its side. The car was full of passengers and in an instant the air was rent with shrieks. The people in the streets who saw the accident supposed that every one was killed and doctors and ambulances were summoned from Hammond, Gary and Indiana Harbor. It took some time to get the passengers out. The East Chicago police force and fire department assisted in the rescue work. Those who saw the accident say the escape of the passengers was remarkable.

She's the Richest Woman.

The New York Evening World says that E. H. Harriman left an estate of $267,000,000 to his widow, making her the richest woman in the world. The World declares this information comes from an intimate friend of the family, and is authoritative. According to this friend, Harriman was, until a short time before his death, worth $300,000,000, but he gave $6,000,000 to each of his five children and $3,000,000 to other relatives, leaving $267,000,000 to his widow. It is said Mrs. Harriman knew every business move of her husband, and will follow out his plans and policies to the letter in the handling of the vast estate.

Six Lives Lost in Lake.

In the wreck of the steamer George Stone, of Cleveland, Ohio, on Point Pelee, Ontario, upper Lake Erie added a gruesome chapter to the history of marine disasters on the Great Lakes. Six lives were lost, twelve were saved and the tail end of the recent gale is lashing a hopelessly broken vessel that was not insured and belonged to M. A. Bradley.

Fire Loss a Million.

"Canonchet," the home of former Governor William Sprague at Narragansett Pier, and one of the most beautiful estates in Rhode Island, was destroyed by fire, with all its contents. The loss is estimated at about $1,000,000, with no insurance. Nobody was injured.

Train Went Through Burning Bridge.

Fireman O. J. Sutton was killed and eight persons were injured when an engine and two cars of the Austin & Northwestern railway plunged into a burning bridge over Watters creek, near McNeil, Texas.

Major-General Bates Stricken.

Farmer Gored to Death by Bull.

Hiram Bement, aged 76 years, a wealthy farmer of Laporte County, Indiana, while in the barnyard, was attacked by a mad bull and gored to death.

CRANE IS FORCED TO RESIGN UNDER FIRE

Minister to China Notified by Secretary Knox That His Resignation Is Wanted.

CAUSED TROUBLE BY TALKING

Chicago Man Held Indiscreet and and Usefulness in Diplomatic Service Ruined by Action.

Secretary of State Knox on Tuesday sent a letter to Charls R. Crane, of Chicago, who was in Washington, notifying him that his resignation as minister of the United States to China would be accepted. Mr. Crane already had advised the Secretary that he was prepared to resign if the recent developments had made his further service in that position embarrassing to the department. Mr. Knox has advised President Taft of his action. Mr. Crane's resignation will be addressed, not to the State Department, but to the President, who appointed him.

Cause of Crane's Dismissal.

While the deepest secrecy guarded the nature of the complaint against Mr. Crane, it was well understood that he was accused of revealing confidential information and talking altogether too much about the intimate affairs of the State Department.

Appointed by President Taft after Stuyvesant Fish and other well-known men had declined the China post, Mr. Crane had received final instructions and engaged state rooms on a steamer sailing from San Francisco last Wednesday. Just before sailing he received a telegram ordering him to report to Secretary Knox in Washington.

Mr. Crane arrived in Washington Sunday. During the trip east he declared that his public statements about Chinese affairs had been made with the sanction of President Taft. Immediately on arriving in Washington he was closeted with Secretary Knox an hour, and learned the secret of his recall, which he declined to divulge. President Taft received a long telegram Monday from Secretary Knox. On his decision further action in Mr. Crane's case was understood to depend.

Through unofficial sources the State Department allowed it to be known that one cause of complaint against Mr. Crane was an article of a Chicago newspaper of Sept. 27, evidencing a somewhat minute acquaintance with affairs supposed to be known only by officials in the State Department and presumably by Mr. Crane, relative to the attitude of the United States government toward the two treaties recently concluded between China and Japan. That publication was highly objectionable to the Department of State in that it disclosed the possibility of protest on the part of the United States against the consummation of these treaties. Secretary Knox and his associates in the department held Minister Crane responsible for those disclosures.

ROBS CAPTOR AND CASHIER.

Youth Forces Deputy Sheriff to Wait While He Loots Bank.

Scores of armed citizens are searching for Earl Bullock, 18 years old, who robbed the State Bank of Eudora, Kan., and later perhaps fatally wounded Policeman Wilson Pringle, who attempted to arrest him. Bullock was arrested in Eudora by Deputy Sheriff E. Woods on a charge of robbing a store in Lawrence. Desiring to talk with E. E. Wilson, cashier of the State Bank in Eudora, the deputy took the boy to the bank with him. While Woods and Wilson were talking Bullock drew two revolvers and ordered them to throw up their hands. Then he marched them into a vault and locked the door. Snatching $1,000, he fled. Policeman Pringle traced the boy to his mother's home and went there to capture him. Bullock shot down the policeman and escaped.

ROLAND REED'S KIN STARVE.

Famed Comedian's Sisters, Living in Miserable Hovel, Fed by Police.

Victims of the traditional improvidence of the stage, two sisters of the famous comedian, the late Roland Reed, are living in Philadelphia in abject poverty. Laura and Florence Reed have for several years been leading a vagabond existence. The hardship has told so sadly upon Florence that she is virtualy a charge upon Laura, who is past 60 years old. They are living in a miserable brick shack on a back alley and are often so weak from lack of food that they have to be fed by the police.

Oleomargarine Case Compromised on Agreement to Pay.

The case against the Cudahy Packing Company for violation of the internal revenue laws by failing to place stamps of proper denomination on oleomargarine was compromised in Leavenworth, Kan. The packing company was fined $5,000 and agreed to pay a back stamp tax of $82,777.50 and a special tax of $10,000 for agencies, making a total of $97,777.50 to be paid to the government.

TIME TO GET UP.

BALLINGER FOR SAVING OF LAND

Address at Sacramento, Cal., Outlines Interior Secretary's Policy.

"The Sacramento valley contains tremendous possibilities of development. Irrigation properly applied will add millions of dollars to your wealth. It is my desire so far as the laws will permit to enforce the saving and the right use of the public domain." So said Secretary Ballinger at a banquet in Sacramento, Cal., Thursday night, following his visit to the Orlando irrigation project. "Absorbing certain lands and sequestering them does not accomplish the most desirable results, but when it is put to practical use all the people will be the real beneficiaries. The work should go forward, and that is what the administration will do to the best of its ability in following the policy of Mr. Roosevelt of trying to do everything possible to assist the western country. And when we find that our work is obstructed by the laws we will ask for further authority."

HUSBAND KILLS WIFE AND SELF

Awakens Woman, Tells Her of Intended Crime and Fires Shots.

Fred E. Link of the Link Manufacturing Company of Erie, Pa., aroused his wife from her slumber and a quarrel ensued, during which, it is said, Link announced that he had decided to end both his own life and that of his wife. He shot the woman four times, one bullet penetrating her heart. Link fired the remaining bullet through his head, dying instantly. Link had suffered serious business reverses.

Livonia easily won the Willow handicap at Gravesend, N. Y.

Horsemen are much interested in the fact that Dan Patch does not seem to recover from his recent lameness.

Livonia, an added starter, won the Great Eastern handicap at Sheepshead Bay, N. Y. The stake is valued at $2,000.

Barney Oldfield, the reckless auto driver, set a new record at Lowell, Mass., when he made a mile in 51 1-3 seconds with a standing start.

In Pennsylvania, Sureno, 2:08½, the guideless trotter, established a record for the Point Breeze track by trotting an exhibition mile alone in 2:13½.

James H. Campbell, a well known horseman, was stricken with acute indigestion while driving in a trotting race at Yonkers, N. Y. He fell from his sulky and died while being taken to the hospital.

At Sioux City, Iowa, Dan Patch proved the falseness of the report that his racing days were over. In an exhibition with Minor Heir he paced a mile in 2:10½, in the teeth of a veritable gale and over a bumpy track.

STORM HITS NORTHWEST.

Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan Get a Foretaste of Real Winter.

The first cold storm of the season blew Monday and Tuesday at the head of the lakes. A cutting wind, driving in from Lake Superior, with constant flurries of snow, ice-covered pavements and heavy fur garments worn by many citizens, contributed to the December appearance of the storm at Duluth. Much delay was experienced by shipping on the lake. Big freighters out in the open water did not attampt to pass in to the bay, fearing collision with the concrete piers at the government channel. No accidents, however, have been reported. On the range the storm has been general with reports of a foot and more of snow at various places. The sudden change in temperature is causing suffering there to those caught without coal. Live stock is also suffering from the cold. School attendance has been cut to half. Three inches of snow fell at La Crosse, Wis. Lower Michigan received its first installment of real winter Monday. With the temperature hovering between 30 and 40 degrees, snow fell intermittently over almost all of the lower part of the State. A thirty-mile-an-hour wind prevailed and made the snow flurries resemble winter blizzards in many places. A temperature of 28 degrees above zero prevailed over all of Kansas, the western half of Missouri, northern Oklahoma and the Texas pan-handle. A killing frost was experienced in the southwest.

MORSE GOES BACK TO JAIL.

High Federal Court Approves Sentence—Will Ask for Pardon.

Charles W. Morse, ice king and shipping trust builder, spent Monday night in the Tombs, New York, facing the near probability of spending the next fifteen years in a still more irksome place, the federal prison at Atlanta.

The little man who found it so easy to juggle millions that he was able to pay back $7,500,000 of his $8,000,000 liabilities while actually under sentence and free only on bail, again learned that there was one institution which was his master—the law. A unanimous decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the decision rendered by a lower court eleven months ago—that Morse was guilty of violating the laws governing national banks.

And from this latest decision there is only one appeal—to the Supreme Court of the United States. This appeal was taken. Judges Lacombe, Coxe and Noyes granting a writ of certiorari to Martin W. Littleton, the convicted financier's lawyer. Morse's chief hope is that President Taft, moved by the great work of restitution done during the little magnate's brief term of liberty, may pardon him. In fact, the Circuit Court practically pointed out in its decision that towards the President alone Morse should look.

Morse, always a gambler, took the blow without a quiver. It was upon his faithful wife, who has given up all her luxuries and has worked day and night to help him, that the setback came with full force, but after her first outburst of tears, she, too, displayed wonderful pluck.

WIRELESS FEAT IN ALASKA.

Station Communicates with Steamer Thirteen Hundred Miles Away.

More evidence of the successful working of the military wireless telegraph stations in Alaska is shown in a report from First Lieut. E. A. Jeaunet, Fifteenth Infantry, Fort Gibson. On the night of Sept. 23 the station of Nome worked well both ways with the steamer Minnesota, en route to Japan, about 200 miles south of Mimak pass, and about 1,300 miles from the wireless station. The Minnesota also reported hearing messages from Fort Gibson strong and loud. More than 500 miles of the distance traveled by the messages from Fort Gibson was overland, and the station at that place also picked up messages from the steamer at Mimak.

GIRL'S LEGS FOUND IN GRIP.

Murder Revealed in Rhode Island Town—Rest of Body Sought.

The finding of a girl's legs in a suitcase among bushes in an outlying section of Tiverton, R. I., brought to light a murder. The discovery of a New Bedford newspaper of Sunday's date with the limbs is regarded as the most important clew thus far obtained. A search for the other portions of the body is being made in the woods nearby. Bulgermarsh road, on which the suitcase was found, runs from Newport to New Bedford, passing through the outskirts of Fall River, and is much used by automobile parties, especially on Sundays.

The new compulsory education law of Minnesota is strict and parents who ignore its provisions are liable to fine or imprisonment.

A deficit of $25,000 to $40,000 has been discovered in the Methodist centenary endowment fund of Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa.

This year's registration at the State University of Minnesota bids fair to surpass that of any previous year in the history of the institution.

Booker T. Washington in a recent address dealt entirely on the subject of the negro and his future. He said the sole salvation of the negro lay in practical education.

Dr. Oskar Eckstein, research assistant in chemistry at the University of Chicago, has been called to the scientific department of the Imperial University of Pekin, China.

Commander Peary, in his report of his journey to the north pole, tells of the death by drowning of Prof. Ross G. Marvin, of Cornell University, who was a member of the expedition. He was drowned April 10.

At Iowa City, Iowa, occurred the death from typhoid fever of Prof. H. E. Gordon, one of the founders of the debating league of the Middle West universities, including Illinois, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota. He was 54 years of age.

At Pittsburg, Pa., in view of thousands, Cecelia Rhoades, a 17-year-old high school girl, was swept to death over the twenty-five foot dam of the Monongahela River after she had saved the lives of ten children who were in a boat with her.

PEARY MAKES PUBLIC CHARGES AGAINST COOK

SUMMARY OF HIS EVIDENCE.

Commander Robert E. Peary on Tuesday made public the evidence upon which he bases his charge that Dr. Frederick A. Cook did not discover the north pole on April 21, 1908, as he claims.

This evidence consists of a statement signed by himself, Robert A. Bartlett, master of the steamer Roosevelt; D. B. McMillan, George Borup and Mathew A. Hensen. These men were all members of Commander Peary's party. They are familiar with polar travel. They are witneses whose credibility cannot successfully be attacked, and there can be no question that they believe to be true every word of the statement to which they have set their names. Their testimony will be read with interest and given great weight by scientists.

Report of Examination.

The statement of the five men embodies a report of an examination that was made of the two Eskimos who, Dr. Cook says, accompanied him in his dash across the polar sea and of the father of one of them who personally was familiar with the first and last thirds of Dr. Cook's journey.

It is accompanied by a map of Dr. Cook's trip, marked out by the Eskimos. In procuring the statements of Dr. Cook's companions, the statement points out, especial pains were taken to leave no ground for the charge that the Eskimos were either coached or coerced by Commander Peary or any member of his party. Every effort was made to have the statement of each Eskimo made independently of the others.

Summary of the Evidence.

That Dr. Cook's explorations north never took him beyond the eighty-second parallel.

That his companions, two Eskimo boys, the oldest only 19, and his outfit, twenty dogs and two sleds, were utterly insufficient to cope with the dangers and hardships of the dash across the polar sea from Cape Thomas Hubbard to the pole.

That before he left Cape Thomas Hubbard Dr. Cook cached food and that when he returned from his so-called dash his sleds were still so heavily laden that only a small amount of provisions was taken from this cache.

Charges as to Route.

That after one day's journey north from Cape Thomas Hubbard Cook and the two Eskimo marched south until they returned to land and that they then moved southweat across Prince Gustave Sea until they reached a small island.

That from this island they proceeded to Amund Ringness Land, where they killed deer, south in a zig-zag path through Norwegian Bay, where they killed some of their dogs, south through Hellgate, where they abandoned a sledge and thence through Jones Sound, where they hunted walrus, to Baffin Bay, over the ice of which they proceeded back to Anoratok.

OKLAHOMA BANK TO PAY ALL.

New Organization Will Take Place of Failed Concern.

At 12 o'clock Saturday night announcement was made of a complete new organization, which will take the place of the Columbia Bank and Trust Company of Oklahoma City, now in course of liquidation by the State banking board. The new organization is capitalized at $200,000 and the bank will be known as the Central State Bank of Oklahoma City. C. J. Webster of Sulphur, Okla., is president and R. M. Estes of Cement vice president. The Columbia Bank and Trust Company will be fully liquidated now by the banking board, and President W. L. Norton declares that every dollar of the bank's indebtedness will be made good.

GIRL WORKS 3 YEARS AS BOY.

Cleveland Young Woman Employed in Livery Stable and by Grocer.

After masquerading as a boy for three years, playing boys' games, working in a livery stable, driving a grocer's team and handling heavy boxes and express packages, "Harry Roberts" has confessed to the Cleveland police "he" is Lillian Hoffman, stepdaughter of Gottlieb Meiers. In 1906 the girl, then only 17, became tired of her home. She ran away, donned boy's clothing and went into the world to work as a man. Her identity became known a short time ago, when she was arrested while employed by D. Martin, a grocer, on a minor charge. Now her stepfather has brought her girl's clothes. The parent ascribes the child's conduct to a love for horses.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued.)

Towards the end of the first week in December a very hard frost set in suddenly, with every prospect of lasting. There was a wide sheet of water in the grounds of Lameny Hall, some two and a half miles distant from Harvington, and to this sheet of water instantly repaired all the skating population of the surrounding country.

Lameny Hall belonged to Sir Joseph Goodford, and he was the most popular and hospitable man on all that side of the county. Everybody liked—nay, loved—"Sir Joe," as he was called—his jovial, round face and laughing blue eyes and genial manners were well known to everyone. He was a widower, with one son, who was seldom at home, and a quartette of grown-up daughters — four buxom, blue-eyed, fair-haired girls, with their father's loud, jolly laugh, and hearty way of making everybody feel welcome at their house.

As soon as the ice could bear invitation notes were flying about to all the houses in the neighborhood, from Laura, and Flora, and Nora and Cora Goodford, begging everybody to make the most of the frost, and some over in force to Lameny Lake.

Of course Miss Carroll and her brother, and Agatha Dale, were among the invited. Miss Carroll did not skate, but she walked about with Sir Joe and other fathers and mothers, along the side of the frozen water, watching the pretty scene, and her own particular "children" among the rest, and waited for them afterwards in the house, drinking her tea, and chatting to her friends indoors when she had had enough of it out of doors.

Agatha did not skate very well, and Rupert took it upon himself to teach her. Agatha found it very delightful to be helped along by the young man's strong arm—that was ready to support her if she tottered, or to catch her if she fell. Flushed with the keen air and exercise, and her eyes shining with a new glow of tenderness and happiness, the girl developed daily fresh and unsuspected charms. She looked radiant; her talk was full of spontaneous delight; her laughter rang out clear as a bell across the ice. It was not only Agatha's skating that improved under Rupert's tuition.

He began to wonder why he had never found out before how charming she could be, and he was angry with himself because he still retained that same sisterly feeling towards her, which precluded all idea of sentiment. And perhaps to the end of the chapter he would never have altered this attitude with regard to her, had not something been opportunely said to him that opened his eyes to the truth.

It was the fourth day of the frost, and there was to be an impromptu dance got up at a day's notice, in the evening. All the skaters were invited to stay and partake of a kind of picnic meal and to dance afterwards in the great entrance hall, that, with its oak polished floor, could be very quickly prepared for terpsichorean pleasures.

Miss Carroll, with most of the elders, went home early, soon after tea; she said that she was too old to dance, and that, at her age, she hated to be kept out of her bed, whilst others did so. She told Rupert to take care of Agatha, and to bring her home safely, and she drove away in the brougham, promising to send it back for them at a later hour.

Carroll naturally did not sit near Agatha at dinner; the tables, for there were two of them, were very long, and occupied the whole length of the room, and Aggie's place happened to be far away from his, at the furthest extremity of the table at which he sat. He made himself agreeable to Miss Cora Goodford, who was seated next to him.

"Now do tell me, Mr. Carroll, are we not to have a wedding in Harvington Church soon?" she asked.

"I am sure I do not know, Miss Cora," replied Rupert.

"Oh, that is all very well to pretend not to understand!" rejoined the young lady. "As if you did not know perfectly well whom I am thinking about!—that naughty girl disappointed us all so horribly before!"

"Are you talking of Agatha?" inquired Carroll, with some surprise.

"Am I? Oh! really, that is too funny! Now confess at once, if you please, that you know as well as I do why that affair came to nothing!"

"You have the advantage of me, Miss Cora," replied the young man, very stiffly. "I know nothing whatever about Agatha's engagement, nor why it was broken off."

"Oh! oh! oh!" cried out the playful damsel laughingly, floundering deeper and deeper into the mire. "How sly you men are! As if you didn't know that she threw poor Lord Netherville over: 'All for the sake o' somebody,' as the poet, Burns, said!"

Carroll reddened. It was impossible now to mistake her meaning; the knowing look she gave him, the way she nodded her head, even the little gesture of her uplifted finger all informed him with perfect directness that Miss Cora considered him to be the "somebody," for whose sake Agatha had broken off her engagement.

He turned hot and cold all over at the magnitude of the discovery—a responsibility of a most serious nature seemed to have suddenly fallen upon him; for, what right had he to spoil the life of a girl he esteemed and liked so much, and who must indeed love him with the most unselfish devotion?

For some time after they started homewards they sat side by side in silence, then all at once without any preamble Rupert turned towards Agatha and said:

"Aggie, did you throw over Netherville because you cared for someone else?"

"Yes, Rupert," she answered in a low voice, her heart suddenly beginning to beat tumultuously.

"Was it—was it me that you cared for, Aggie?"

"I have always cared about you, Rupert—all my life," she answered, simply and earnestly.

"Don't you think that we had better get married, Aggie?" he said presently, prosaically enough—and then, he knew not why—he sighed.

CHAPTER XII.

It was at Mentone that Lady Garland and her niece had settled down for the winter. The girl, however, thoroughly enjoyed the beautiful scenery and the still more beautiful climate of the Riviera. The mountains that rose in irregular beauty, one behind the other, reflected the sunrise and the sunset in crimson and violet upon their rugged sides—the wind-blown silver sheen of the olive woods, the tall clumps of waving palms, and of dark-leaved, India-rubber trees, the profusion of flowers on every side, and as a background to it all, the deep dark blue of the tideless Mediterranean—all seemed to soothe her pain as much as they charmed her senses.

Irene was not perfectly convinced that Rupert Carroll was dead. Her aunt still persisted that she had seen and spoken to him and that he had denied all knowledge or remembrance of her, but that must have been because someone had turned his heart against her.

Irene learnt from her aunt for the first time a secret which her mother had never revealed to her. Lady Garland told her that her father, when she herself was quite an infant, had deserted his wife and child, and that it was only when he was on his deathbed that he had sent for her mother, who had gone to him at once, and with Christian charity had nursed him to the end, and had forgiven him at the last.

She believed that it was on account of this, of which someone must have told him, that Rupert Carroll had thought it his duty to repudiate her. But he might have written!—at least he might have written!

It was a fortnight after Lady Garland's supposed meeting with him, that she had seen that vision of him in the night, that his eyes had seemed to look at her yearningly—that his voice had rung in her ears. Well, there was but one possible interpretation to it. Rupert must be dead, and in his dying moments, his spirit, filled with love and compunction, had appeared to her for one brief moment, ere it had quitted this world forever.

A little variety began to creep into the lives of the two ladies. Lady Garland adored society. Gossip and afternoon visits were the joy of her existence, and she began to fret after the frivolities of life. It was she who first proposed that they should go over occasionally to listen to the world-famed orchestral concerts in the rooms at Monte Carlo.

The ladies took the short journey of twenty minutes by train two or three times a week; and whilst Irene sat listening to the music, Lady Garland would slink away into the gambling rooms at the other side of the spacious building, and risk her five-franc pieces with varying success upon the roulette tables.

One day Irene was left by herself in a secluded corner of the concert room. The music came to an end, the musicians rose noisily in their places; it was the end of the first part, and there was an interval of ten minutes. A group of persons stood talking and laughing a few rows in front of her. A pretty, but rather over-dressed woman standing amongst some other ladies, first attracted her attention. She had golden hair, much too golden in fact, and more than a suspicion of rouge on her cheeks, but she was pretty and very animated in manner. She reached over the backs of two rows of the stalls before her, and tapped a gentleman who was sitting down on the shoulder with her fan.

"Come!" she cried, "take me out for a little walk, please, and get me a cup of tea. I am famishing for tea—come along at once."

The gentleman addressed stood up and turned round. The beautiful concert-room with its massive gilding, and its domed frescoed ceiling, suddenly swam and danced before Irene's eyes. She uttered a faint, smothered cry, and half rose in her place. It was Rupert Carroll.

Her breath came quick and fast, her heart was beating wildly, a crimson flush flooded her pale, sensitive face from brow to chin. He came sauntering along. His face was turned towards the lady by his side—she was talking volubly to him. When he came quite close, he raised his head, and his eyes met Irene's fully. There was not a vestige of recognition in them! She tried to speak, but it was as though she was choking, her lips refused to frame a word. It was her betrothed, the man who had taught her to love, who had asked her to be his wife, whose parting kisses in the moonlight were still graven in her heart, whose parting words of love still rang in her ears, and yet—he passed her by without seeming to see her!

Wildly she thrust forth one hand as though to stop him; if she could have spoken she would have called his name aloud, but her throat was dry and parched and she could not utter a sound. She heard the woman who was with him say as they went on together.

"Who is that girl? She stared at you very oddly—do you know her?"

She did not hear the answer. They passed on together, all of them, out of the concert room, and presently among the few people who were left, there arose a little commotion, for a young lady in black had suddenly fallen down.

Lady Garland coming back opportunely to look after her niece, was horrified to find her stretched in the narrow passage in a dead faint, supported in the arms of a charitable lady who was a perfect stranger, whilst another kneeling on the floor beside her was holding a salts bottle to her nose.

"It is so hot in here," said one of them, as Lady Garland bustled up and claimed the unconscious girl as her niece. "I really don't wonder at anybody fainting, the atmosphere is simply awful; they never air these rooms properly."

She revived a little at last, and Lady Garland sent for a carriage, and they drove all the way back to Mentone instead of returning by train. The air revived her, but she did not speak during the drive at all, save to thank her aunt for her kindness. She was pale as death, and there was a look in her eyes that Lady Garland had never seen in them before. It half frightened her. It was the look of a desperate woman.

Late that evening Irene came into her aunt's room. Her color had come back a little, her lips shone with an unnatural brilliancy, and her lips were set and hard.

"I have come to tell you something, Aunt Anna," said Irene, not noticing the remark about her health, and in the middle of the room grasping the back of a chair with both hands. "I want to tell you why I fainted to-day. It was because I met Rupert Carroll face to face—and he cut me dead."

There was a silence. Lady Garland in charity would not look at the girl; she turned her head away and played with the ornaments on the table. She pitied Irene sincerely but she was not at all sorry for what had happened.

"I hope, my dear child," she said, presently, "that this will show you how right I was about him, and that you will now put this wretched men who has treated you so shamefully, entirely out of your mind. There are other men in the world, Irene——"

"I have no doubt that they are all much the same—cruel and heartless and wicked. I—I—had thought that he was dead, but he is quite well and apparently perfectly happy. I shall find it very easy to forget him. Dear Aunt Anna, it is a terrible mistake for a girl to fall in love with any man; girls who look out for rich husbands are much more sensible! That is what I'm going to do."

"Oh, well; we won't exactly put it in that way, Irene dear."

"No. We won't put it in words, will we? We will only do it." And Irene laughed hardly and bitterly.

Availability.

A nobleman was once showing a friend a rare collection of precious stones which he had gathered at a great expense and enormous amount of labor. "And yet," he said, "they yield me no income."

His friend replied, "Come with me, and I will show you two stones which cost me but five pounds each, yet they yield me a considerable income." He took the owner of the gems to his grist mill and pointed to two gray millstones, which were always busy grinding out grist.—Success Magazine.

No Romance.

"Some golden-haired princess made this butter," declared the romantic man, as he held up a beautiful blonde tress.

"That's artificial butter," explained the prosaic man.

The Fateful Book.

Dorothy—Fred Sweet pulled the petals of a daisy for Grace Chance, and it came out "she loves me."

Marion—And did she pluck a daisy for him?

Dorothy—Not exactly. She turned the leaves of Bradstreet's and it came out "I love him not."

Natural Deduction.

"Mildred," called her father from the head of the stairs, "is that young man an auctioneer?"

"Why, no, father."

"He talks like one. He's been putting up that 'going' bluff for 46 minutes, and has only got as far as the door."

Interesting the Girl.

"But what made you irritate her father?"

"I had to do it. I wasn't any too popular with the girl until her father forbade me the house."

The Worm Will Turn.

Barber—Your hair's very thin, sir.

Long Sufferer—And you've got a bump on your nose, and one of your eyes squints.—Life.

Going Up.

"What do they mean by the rising generation, pa?"

"Oh, the people who can afford to have airships, sonny."

Very Rough.

Young Lawyer—This is but a rough draft of my brief.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Frightened at the sight of a mouse, Grace Field, aged 14 years, living in Evansville, jumped on a chair. In her excitement the chair fell over and the girl broke her arm.

William Long, 6 years old, son of J. A. Long, a drug clerk of Bluffton, was attacked and bitten by a stray dog. One hand was lacerated and bled profusely. The child was hurried to a doctor. A case of hydrophobia north of the city two weeks ago causes alarm of the parents of the Long boy.

When Marion Wallace, living near Owensville, looked into his mail box he found a female flying squirrel with nine little ones huddled in one corner of the box. The lid of the mail box had not been closed and the squirrel flew into it from a nearby tree. Flying squirrels are seldom seen in that locality.

Walter Ryf, 16 years of age, son of Ferdinand Ryf, living a few miles north of Berne, lost his right hand in a cane mill, where he was employed. He was feeding the mill when a loose leather glove which he wore was caught between the heavy rollers, pulling his hand into the mill and crushing it to a pulp, almost.

Auburn is to be provided with a more efficient sewerage system, according to a movement started at a recent meeting of the City Council, and later in the fall the City Engineer will prepare specifications and the City Clerk will call for bids on the big contract. It is estimated that the cost of construction will reach $75,000.

Bushels of domestic grapes have been gathered in the woods along the Kankakee river near Morocco this season, the crop being the heaviest in years. These vineyards, it is claimed, were planted by early French explorers, and were yielding fruit when the first settlers came to that region. The grapes are of two varieties, red and white, and are of a most delicious flavor.

Work has again been begun on filling up the big sink hole on the Brimfield road, northwest of Kendallville. The intention is to fill it up with timbers and then smooth it all over with stones and dirt. The work is being done under the direction of the County Commissioners, who have appropriated $1,500 and Wayne Township $200. The work is to be completed by January 1.

In drilling an oil well on the Alfred Hurt farm, east of Oakland City, the drill passed through three veins of coal. The first vein was found at 64 feet, and was six feet in thickness; the second at 160 feet, and was nine feet thick, while the third was a seven-foot vein and was 250 feet down. No water was encountered in the well until the third vein of coal was passed.

Many fishermen attended the draining of Mills Lake, east of Muncie, when several thousand fish were caught. The prize bass, obtained by Martin Meeks, of Muncie, weighed nearly eight pounds. The lake was drained in order that it might be restocked with selected varieties of fish and that all carp might be eliminated from the water. The lake is a small body of water and is owned by John Mills, who has a summer home near Farmland.

A gas well was completed by the Monroe Gas and Oil Company in the field near Oakland City that is estimated at 8,000,000 cubic feet a day. The heavy flow of gas was encountered in a second sand that has hitherto been untouched in this field. Another feature of the development work there was the drilling in of the Murphy well on the Mason farm, which is showing for an oil production of 300 barrels. Field work is generally delayed by a scarcity of water.

Mayor Bookwalter, of Indianapolis, has just made one appointment that is approved generally. He named George W. Larimore as an inspector of the City Engineer's Department, and promised to try to hold the job for him through the next administration. Larimore is a young laboring man who recently lost both hands in an accident at a factory. By public subscription nearly $10,000 was raised for him. A home was erected and a permanent endowment fund created.

Silas Wilder, a resident of Seymour, has in his possession an old arithmetic, which was used in 1803 by his father, Ethan Wilder, in Sterling, Mass. It is interesting because it is so different from the text-books now in use in public schools. The old book, which is written on heavy paper, is about 12x7 inches. It contains a statement of the various arithmetical rules, which are immediately followed by illustrations that are solved in full. The arithmetic, although over one hundred years old, is well preserved and the written matter is very legible.

Miss Edythe N. Leeke, daughter of Mrs. Bashie Leeke, living near Ward, died from peritonitis, resulting from an attack of appendicitis. Miss Leeke was to have been married last week to Carl Spickelmeir, of Indianapolis.

The Rev. Ubaldus Webersinke, an aged Catholic priest, well known in Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky, died at St. Elisabeth's Hospital, in Lafayette. He was a noted linguist and was known as one of the leading priests in this part of the country at one time.

While investigating what she thought was chicken thieves, robbing her hen roost, at Bryant, Mrs. James Lewis accidentally shot herself through the right foot.

Because his wife, he alleges, smokes cigarettes and awakens him of a morning by blowing the smoke in his face, George Kiler, of Evansville, has entered suit against her for divorce.

The body of an unidentified boy about 18 years old was found beside the Big Four track at Lawrenceburg Junction a few days ago. He had black hair, brown eyes, 5 feet 7 inches tall, wore green coat, plaid trousers, had souvenir postal card of Toledo, Ohio, in his pocket, addressed to Walter Watts, 316 Liberty street, Fremont, Ohio, and was signed Harmon.

Mrs. Mary Ewing, of Clinton, daughter of the late Governor Matthews, was struck by a truck while waiting in front of the interurban station in Terre Haute, and is in a critical condition. At the time of the accident she did not know that she was seriously hurt and boarded the car for home. Later she had two sinking spells and the doctors fear dangerous internal injuries.

First aid to the injured lessons, given to the pupils in the Crown Point High School, recently saved the life of Raymond Zuvers, of Merrillville, a 16-year-old pupil. In opening a glass door Zuvers drove his fist through it accidentally and severed several arteries. He would have bled to death had not his young friends made a tourniquet for his arm. A number of girls fainted at the sight of the blood.

Hog cholera is epidemic in nearly every part of Johnson County. Cholera preventives have been resorted to with various results, and many of the county's best hog breeders have sold their entire herds at a sacrifice. Hundreds of hogs have died and many pens of Durocs, Poland Chinas and other strains have been entirely wiped out. The disease was never known to be as general and as severe in Johnson County before.

Foelle Huffman, aged 9, died a few days ago at Linton. The child had been to school the day before and while there she ate some of the paints and dyes used in drawing work. The little girl returned home and complained of feeling ill. A physician was called, but he could do nothing for the child. After intense suffering, the child died five hours later. The paints contained a poison which caused the child's death, it is said.

The custom of opening a sale with prayer and song is becoming popular in Wells County. The second one opened in this manner was that of the estate of William Lambert, near Poneto. When the time came for the sale Rev. Cranes led in prayer, followed by a song service, which was led by Rev. Hornady, of Poneto. The sale was then started off in its usual manner after the services, and from the way the bidding went there is a probability that prayer and song service will be more popular than ever.

A boy famine—that is, a shortage of boys that are not in school and who wish to work—has struck Indianapolis. For several weeks there has been a shortage of men to take positions, but not until the last two weeks has it been discovered that there is a real shortage in boys. The boys wanted are those from 14 to 21 years of age who do not attend school. Until recently they have been plentiful. Factories, offices and even farmers are now searching the city for boys, and are offering wages of from $3.50 to $9 a week.

A stray pig was responsible for the courtship and wedding of E. U. Bert, a business man of Tipton, and Mrs. Flo Gipson, of the eastern part of the county. The animal went astray a few months ago from Bert's home, and was taken up at the farm home of Mrs. Gipson's parents. Bert advertised for the pig, and she answered. The letter was a witty one, and he became interested. Other letters, a meeting, a proposal of marriage, its acceptance and a visit to Anderson followed. The pig that brought about the romance will be a pet at the home of the newly married couple.

A bachelor farmer who lives in Clay County, on receiving a draft in payment for live stock which he sold off his farm, went to Clay City to have it cashed. When he was told the exchange would cost him 15 cents he declined to pay the amount saying that he could have it done at Brazil for 10 cents. He immediately put out on foot for that place, eighteen miles distant. Hearing at Brazil that the bank at Terre Haute charged only 5 cents for the service, he started at once for the Prairie City, walking another sixteen miles, where he paid the fee exacted of him for the exchange, and the farmer then walked fifteen miles to his home.

Of ten bids submitted at Lebanon for the construction of the new Boone County court house Caldwell & Drake, of Columbus, Ind., were the lowest bidders at $215,940 for the building and $9,400 for the heating plant.

The Tribe of Ben Hur will erect a $70,000 home in Terre Haute. The Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias already have homes there and the Masons are planning to build a new temple. The Y. M. C. A. has started a movement for a new building.

CHICAGO.

The Weekly Review of Chicago Trade, compiled by R. G. Dun & Co., says: Operations in the leading activities have become so expanded it is not surprising that the volume of payments through the banks are now seen to be averaging almost $50,000,000 each business day. Conditions generally exhibit remarkable strength throughout the leading industries and there is no exhaustion in the commitments adding to the assured accumulation of forward work in manufacturing. Increasing demands for money and more extended movements of breadstuffs, provisions, factory outputs, raw materials and general merchandise emphasize the underlying strength and confidence felt in the future.

Fall transactions make a notable comparison with the best previous years in production and distribution. Lake traffic includes tonnages reaching new records, while the earnings of Chicago steam roads also furnish favorable comparisons. Despite the installation of new equipment it is found more difficult to obtain an adequate car service in the central West, and reports indicate that deliveries of heavy materials fall behind the dates promised, owing to the unexpected demands upon available facilities. Transactions in the wholesale branches of staple merchandise present more numerous reservations for distant needs.

Bank clearings, $293,915,369, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 23.8 per cent, and compare with $249,645,775 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 24, against 29 last week, 25 in 1908, and 24 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 11 last week, 5 in 1908, and 9 in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Favorable reports are the rule in nearly all lines of trade and industry, with conservatism, bred by high prices of raw and manufactured products, and full order books of manufacturers the only apparent bars to an even wider distribution in most wholesale lines. Wholesale trade in staple lines is good beyond question, even the South, which faces a short yield of cotton, showing a better and more cheerful tone because of the high price offered for its leading staple at a period of nearly record crop movement. On the other hand, cotton manufacturers here, at the South and abroad are discussing curtailment of output in an effort to readjust prices of goods, which are strong and tending upward to the advanced cost of the raw material, which is 50 per cent higher than a year ago. Shortages of cars in special lines are more in evidence in transportation than for two years past.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Oct. 7 were 203, against 195 last week, 256 in the like week of 1908, 192 in 1907, 192 in 1906 and 183 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 36, as compared with 22 last week and 31 last year.—Bradstreet's.

No Rest
Day or Night

"I would lay awake for hours without any apparent cause, or dream terrible dreams which would bring on extreme spells of nervousness. After taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and Tonic for awhile I could sleep well, and the nervous spells have left me." MISS ALMA HUG, R. R, No. 4, Canal Dover, Ohio.

Without sleep the nervous system soon becomes a wreck, and the healthful activity of all the organs obstructed. Restful, body-building sleep accompanies the use of Dr. Miles' Nervine because it soothes the irritable nerves, and restores nervous energy. When taken a few days according to directions, the most restless sufferer will find sleep natural and healthful. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

Mrs. Pearl Rehm and babe of Holt, Mich., and sister, Miss Hazel Abel of Auburn, are visiting their grandfather Henry Abel.

John Knight, wife and daughter Evelyn and Miss Mary Flint, were entertained to Sunday dinner at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Sheffer.

Fred Meese and Harry Shuff made a nice haul Saturday, catching two muskrats, a mink and a coon in traps along the river. Several are trapping now but the season is a little early for good hides.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. McDannell of Bryan, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. David Burns of West Unity, Ohio, and Mrs. Wm. Kgontz of Butler, Ind., visited over Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Simon Wineland and other relatives. The three ladies being sisters of Mr. Wineland.

The World's Championship in the base ball held was won Saturday by Pittsburg. The series have been interesting to the fans and up to the last day Detroit and Pittsburg were a tie, each having three games. The result of Saturday's game was a complete surprise, 8 to 0 in the favor of Pittsburg.

The pleasant purgative effect experienced by all who use Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, and the health condition of the body and mind which they create, makes one feel joyful. Sold by H. M. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Isaac Weiredge, an ex-saloon keeper at Garrett, will attempt to secure a license to re-establish his saloon on Randolph street in that city, at the November session of the county commissioners. Just why the ex-saloon men over there should continue to hamper the remonstrance people is a mystery. It is a fact that they have lived in high hopes of winning out in the end but they have not been contented to wait until the remonstrances expired or until a local option election was held. Only in September did Sam Bevier ask for a license and pressed his demands into a contest before the commissioners until the second day's hearing when he dismissed his application. It may be that Mr. Whirledge thinks he will be on the "ground floor" should the local option be in favor of the saloon people. But that does not satisfy the anti-saloon forces as to why several men, thrown out of business by the remonstrances, have continued to press their claims before the commissioners in the circuit court and up the supreme case, in some cases.—Ex.

Young Girls

Just entering into womanhood, often suffer much pain and misery during the change of their physical organization. Many women will tell you their female trouble started during that trying period, and has clung to them ever since.

Cardui is a friend to young girls, as well as to women of all ages. It has been found to help women during their trying periods by relieving pain and restoring disordered organs to health.

Take CARDUI

Mrs Mary Hudson, Eastman, Miss., writes: "While staying with me and going to school, my young sister was in terrible misery. I got her to take a few doses of CARDUI and it helped her at once.

"I have taken Cardui myself and believe I would have been under the clay had it not been for that wonderful medicine."

Try Cardui. It will help you. For sale everywhere.

According to statistics compiled by the geological survey, 5,618,829 tons of sand and gravel were marketed in Indiana last year, and sold for $807,518. Of building sand, 727,069 tons were used; of glass sand, 30,600 tons; of molding sand, 110,432 tons; of engine sand, 142,806 tons; and of all other sands 3,593,777 tons were used. The gravel marketed aggregated 1,438,462 tons.

J. M. Carlier in their office at Fort Wayne have sold sixty-eight new Auburn automobiles this year. They have also disposed of a number of second hand ones taken in exchange as part payment on new machines making the total sales since spring near the one hundred mark. Their first years business in the sale of auto's will reach a $100,000. When Berry, as we know him best here, goes into business he puts all his energy in it and makes it a winner. If he can't it is no use for the other fellow to try.—Dispatch.

$175,000.00 Fire No Insurance

Fortunately this great loss is divided among many owners, the greatest loss may not exceed $5,000. Many men fought bravely for hours to conquer the flames, but they did not succeed until hundreds of acres of woods, meadows, fields and hundreds of rod fence were burned. This is a brief and conservative statement of the annual loss to Indiana farmers, caused by forest fires, most of which could have been avoided. The State Board of Forestry is active in trying to stay this loss. They have had printed on muslin the Indiana Forest Fire law, which provides that one may be fined not less than $5.00 nor more than $50.00 for setting fire to woods, besides being liable for all damages done. These signs are 12 x 18 inches and are to be tacked up at prominent cross-roads, etc. They are free for the asking, address "State Board of Forestry, Indianapolis," stating how many you will tack up.

First English Woman Smoker.

Mary Frith, better known as Moll Cutpurse, was a notable figure in old time London life. She had the reputation of being the first woman to smoke tobacco in England.

The length of her days is a disputed point, says the Milligate Monthly, but it seems certain in that she attained the age of over threescore years and ten. It is asserted that constant smoking prolonged her life. A portrait representing her in the act of smoking forms the frontispiece of Middleton's comedy of the "Roaring Girl." She also figures in other plays of the period.

Mary was the daughter of a shoemaker living in the Barbican, and Malone gives 1584 as the date of her birth. She early took to wicked ways and became a noted "highwayman." Among her familiar friends were the notorious Captain Hind and Richard Hannam. She was an expert swordswoman. Single handed she robbed on Hounslow Heath General Fairfax of 200 gold jacobuses, shooting him through the arm and killing two of his horses on which his servants were riding. For the offense she was committed to Newgate, but on paying the general £2,000 she obtained her liberty.

At one time Mary had £3,000 of her own, but by giving money to distressed cavaliers she died comparatively poor. Her death took place in July, 1569, and she was laid to rest in St. Bridget's.

FOOD QUESTION

Settled with Perfect Satisfaction by a Dyspeptic.

It's not an easy matter to satisfy all the members of the family at meal time as every housewife knows.

And when the husband has dyspepsia and can't eat the simplest ordinary food without causing trouble, the food question becomes doubly annoying.

An Illinois woman writes:

"My husband's health was poor, he had no appetite for anything I could get for him, it seemed.

"He was hardly able to work, was taking medicine continually, and as soon as he would feel better would go to work again only to give up in a few weeks. He suffered severely with stomach trouble.

"Tired of everything I had been able to get for him to eat, one day seeing an advertisement about Grape-Nuts, I got some and he tried it for breakfast the next morning.

"We all thought it was pretty good, although we had no idea of using it regularly. But when my husband came home at night he asked for Grape-Nuts.

"It was the same next day and I had to get it right along, because when we would get to the table the question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts?' was a regular thing. So I began to buy it by the dozen pkgs.

"My husband's health began to improve right along. I sometimes felt offended when I'd make something I thought he would like for a change, and still hear the same old question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts?'

"He got so well that for the last two years he has hardly lost a day from his work, and we are still using Grape-Nuts." Read the book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

FREEDOM IN SERVICE.

By Henry F. Cope.

"By love serve one another."—Gal. v., 13.

One of the wisest of the ancient Greeks declared that the free man was he who existed for himself and not, like a slave, for the sake of another. How sharply this contrasts with the essential teaching of the world's greatest religious leader, and they who find the full and free life must learn to live, not for themselves, but for others.

We have been for centuries burying the simple teachings of the prophet of Nazareth under survivals of ancient superstitions and masses of philosophical subtlety and speculation. Now when his real message is spoken it sounds so strange we call it a new religion. The doctrine that the greatest need of the universe is, that men should love one another and live for one another, has been neglected so long that it appears to be wholly new.

Your historians point to this and your philosophers to that as the essential article of Christian faith, but it is neither in historical records nor in theological formulas. The one thing that marks and makes the true man in religion is that he has learned that life is just the chance to love and to give life away. His faith is right who is right with his fellows.

The most important hour in any life is that in which it becomes conscious of the fact of other lives pressing on it, constituting society about it, and making imperative demands upon it. The hour of real conversion is when one turns from living inward to living outward, from selfishness to social living, when the life begins to take the law of love as its guiding star.

Some lives never go through that change; they mantain to death the selfishness with which they were born, which is perfectly normal in the child, the selfishness of the life unconscious of the duties it owes to all other lives. They may pass through emotional religious ecstasies, but their souls, their best selves, remain bound in the bondage of self.

Every man begins a new life when he becomes conscious of the fact of social living, when he is touched with a feeling of the unity of all living, when some measure of a passion of humanity begins to move him. Life takes on new significances. In that hour the poet's vision and the youth's ambition glow and burn within.

To live for others is to widen the bounds of life. Our sympathies make the measure of our souls. No man is any bigger than his heart. You are great, not according to the number of servants you have, but according to the number whom you freely serve in love.

Your hold on life depends on your self-investment in it. Your roots in society, in the universe, strike deep as you are investing yourself in it. So many lives have no root because they are afraid to strike down out of sight, to lose themselves. Sinking nothing in sacrifice, they soon dry up and are blown away.

Our modern problems of individual and social suffering, wrong and injustice, are marks of an age that has not learned to live by this law of self-giving. We still believe, whatever creeds our lips may utter, that every man must look out for himself; we reject the law that reigns universal through all the rest of nature that only in sacrifice and service is fullness and perpetuity of life found.

This is the faith most of all needed by our faith, faith so fully to believe in the law of love, of service, of sacrifice, that we will seek first of all the good of others, bear one another's burdens, live to make lives sweeter, happier, to serve rather than to be served, to find the sweet joy of kindness and count it more than any other gain.

This is the law of all life. All nature is ever giving, losing, sacrificing. The world's ideal life is symbolized by a cross of self-sacrifice, love's consummation. What higher, wider, deeper faith do we need than this, just to go our simple ways, in home, on street, in store and shop, in family and human fellowship, taking life as the chance to find fullness of living so as to have the more life, the richer and more efficient life, with which to serve one another, giving life in the common things of living, in the kindly word, the sympathetic act, the courteous deed, the Christly spirit?

HUDSON AND FULTON.

By Rev. A. W. Snyder.

Herein is that saying true, One soweth and another reapeth; other man labored and ye are entered into their labors. St. John 4:37, 38.

In thinking of Hudson and Fulton and of what they did for us we may well say "herein is that saying true, one soweth and another reapeth; other men labored and ye are entered into their labors."

However different their work, Hudson and Fulton had one characteristic in common, without which they could not have done what they did for us. It was the gift of insight. There is a wonderful difference between looking and seeing.

Long before Hudson sailed the sea in his little Half Moon other white men had looked at our great North river, but in looking at it Hudson saw it. That is, he saw its significance, and so he explored it and told men all about it. Long before Columbus discovered America some of the old vikings may have landed on the New England coast, but they never intelligently saw the new world that Columbus discovered.

As in the case of Hudson, so also in the work of Fulton we see the great difference between looking and seeing. Before Fulton began the patient experiments that ended in making him the "Father of Steamboating" many men knew that a boat could be propelled by steam power, but when Fulton saw it he knew what it meant. He saw that it would revolutionize the methods of navigation and vastly enrich the world. When he was building the Clermont men called it "Fulton's Folly." But when it went bravely up the Hudson men began to see what Fulton had long seen.

It was, then, by a happy suggestion that these anniversary observances should associate the work that Hudson and Fulton did for men in their day, and in so doing contributed so much to the making of this great city and this Empire State. Let us gladly acknowledge our debt of gratitude to these great men. Through them the Lord brought blessing to us and to all human kind.

Let us then praise famous men, for the Lord hath wrought great glory by them through His power.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

JUST AS I AM.

By Charlotte Elliott.

[Charlotte Elliott (Brighton, England March 18, 1789—Brighton, Sept. 22, 1871) judged by the quality of her work and by its general popularity, is the greatest of British female hymn writers, having to her credit, in all, 150 hymns, the greater number of which are recognized as standard. Yet she was all her life almost an invalid, spending her days in quiet literary work in the south of England and on the continent. In 1834 she issued "The Invalid's Hymn Book," having written 115 of the pieces therein. "Just as I Am," written in 1822, is a record of her personal experience when, shortly before this, the simple suggestion, "Come just as you are," solved many of her religious difficulties. It first appeared in the Yearly Remembrancer in the year in which she became its editor, 1836. Without question this is the greatest of all the special evangelistic hymns. The stories told of its power over the mind and heart are innumerable. It is sung in all lands and especially at all times of revival.]

Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bidd'st me come to thee,
O Lamb of God, I come!

Just as I am, and waiting not
To rid my soul of one dark blot,
To thee, whose blood can cleanse each spot,
O Lamb of God, I come!

Just as I am, though tossed about
With many a conflict, many a doubt,
Fightings within, and fears without,
O Lamb of God, I come!

Just as I am, poor, wretched, blind;
Sight, riches, healing of the mind,
Yea, all I need, in thee I find,
O Lamb of God, I come!

Just as I am thou wilt receive,
Wilt welcome, pardon, cleanse, relieve;
Because thy promise I believe,
O Lamb of God, I come! I come!

Just as I am—thy love unknown
Hath broken every barrier down;
Now, to be thine, yea, thine alone,
O Lamb of God, I come! I come!

Nostril Tests for Cigars.

"Gee, that's a good cigar!" said the tobacco store loiterer, holding up to view a half-consumed "perfecto," according to the Kansas City Star. "See how the ash clings to it."

"Great Scott, is that old notion still floating around?" the cigar dealer asked. "I thought that had perished with the man who blew out the gas. Don't you know that some of the worst 'ropes' ever made will hold the ash until you almost have to knock it off with a stick? There's absolutely nothing to the ash theory as a test of a good cigar."

"But see how evenly this cigar burns," insisted the smoker. "You can't deny that that shows good tobacco."

"Nonsense!" returned the dealer. "The finest cigar ever rolled might burn unevenly. Sometimes the top row of cigars in a box may be dried out on the upper, exposed side and moist on the under side. Such a cigar is sure to burn unevenly, the moist side more slowly than the dry.

"There's only one way to test the quality of a cigar," the dealer concluded. "Light it and blow the smoke through your nose. If you're any judge of tobacco you'll know mighty quick whether that particular weed is made of choice Havana or alfalfa culls."

Norwegians Are Cautious.

A good story of motoring in Norway is going the rounds. In many parts of this land of the Midnight Sun motor cars are unknown and thanks to the mountains, are likely to remain so.

In the district in question a rumor went forth that a car was coming, and the authorities actually went to the trouble of issuing notices, which were posted about far and wide, warning all and sundry that such was the case. Not only were the people cautioned to give the car a wide berth, but they were told to remove their animals into safe quarters.

It so happened that the car was driven through a desolate land, much to the amusement or wonder, one fancies, of its owner. All the people were inside their houses, and all the cattle had been driven into safe quarters for the occasion.

PARADISE FOR BIRDS.

Barren Puffin Island Off the West Coast of Great Britain.

Gaunt and bare Puffin island rises boldly from the sea at the most easterly point of Anglesey. Its sides, torn and discolored by the waves, offer scant welcome to the explorer, but there are several places at which a landing may be made from a small boat.

Naturalists will not object to the forbidding appearance of this half mile length of rock at which the timid look askance, the London Evening Standard says. Neglected of man, it is the chosen home of thousands and thousands of birds who share its solitude with a few sheep and scores of rabbits. Puffin island has more than one name. The Welsh call it Ynys Seiriol, or the Island of St. Seiriol, who had a hermitage here far away in the sixth century, and it is also known as Priestholme (the priest's island).

Perched in the center of the isle are the ruins of a tower, built in the seventh century. But this scanty spot upon the waters should be named the home of the birds. In myriads they seek it to breed. The keepers of the lighthouse are almost the only human beings they see; they can live their happy lives without the shadow of man to frighten them.

Most in numbers is the puffin—being in the majority, it has given its name to the place. This curious looking bird, so ungainly on land, rides on the waves wonderfully and dives as surely no other bird can. Come upon it suddenly—it plunges deep into the water and your boat has gone a long distance ahead before it comes to the surface again. In some places the puffin is called the sea parrot and in appearance it is not unlike pretty poll.

Stormy petrels find a resting place in this grim retreat; gulls are common; razor bills, cormorants, curlews and divers add to the population. Gannets have been met with and the peregrine falcon. Among these rare specimens the pigeon excites no remark.

Exceedingly curious is the clamor made by these creatures during the breeding time. One might imagine one's self in the House of Commons during a "scene" in which wild words and incoherent sentences are hurled about. Only there is no speaker to quell the tumult and restore order.

Facts For Sick Women

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or secured so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Almost every woman you meet has either been benefited by it, or knows some one who has.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing over one million one hundred thousand letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The reason why it is so successful is because it contains ingredients which act directly upon the female organism, restoring it to healthy and normal activity.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials such as the following prove the efficiency of this simple remedy.

Minneapolis, Minn.:—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women, I felt sure it would help me, and I must say it did help me wonderfully. Within three months I was a perfectly well woman.

"I want this letter made public to show the benefits to be derived from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. John G. Moldan, 2115 Second St. North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

Registration Dates, Oct. 4 to 23, inclusive.

The General Land Office at Washington has designated Le Beau and Aberdeen, So. Dak., on the Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. as registration points.

Le Beau, which is the Missouri River terminus of the Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R., is located on the Missouri River, opposite the Reservation, and is the nearest railroad station to three-fifths of the land.

Aberdeen, the other registration point, is the chief city in northern South Dakota.

There will be about 14,000 quarter sections allotted to settlers. The land lays well for farming over most of the reservation. The soil is a light loam and is very fertile. It is similar to that in the counties east of the River, where the land sells from $25.00 to $30.00 per acre. Lignite coal is found over a great part of the reservation.

Who May Secure a Homestead—Under the homestead laws of the United States, any person, male or female who is not the owner of more than 160 acres of land in any state or territory, who is a native born citizen of the United States, or has been naturalized, or declared his intention to become a naturalized citizen of the United States (i. e., one who has taken out his first papers of citizenship), who is over the age of 21 years or the head of a family, may make a homestead entry of not exceeding 160 acres of any of the unoccupied lands of the United States.

HURRICANE IN SOUTH CAUSES GREAT DAMAGE

Florida and Cuba Storm Swept—$2,000,000 Damage Done at Key West.

CITY IS UNDER MARTIAL LAW

Nine Cigar Factories Destroyed—Plundering Begins as Soon as Wind Slackens.

As a result of the hurricane which struck the southern coast of Florida Monday morning Key West is a mass of wreckage and the damage to property is estimated at $2,000,000. Martial law was proclaimed by the mayor, and the Key West guards are patrolling the city. The United States government has been asked to dispatch troops there without delay to assist in patrolling the storm swept area. Conditions are chaotic and few persons remain in their homes, hundreds of which either have been totally wrecked or damaged. It is thought that many lives have been claimed along the coast.

The storm reached its height at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, when the wind had an estimated velocity of 100 miles an hour. There was a hard, steady blow from 8 a. m. to 3 p. m., when the wind began to die down, and by 4 o'clock the center of the hurricane had passed.

Besides the several score of residences either wrecked or blown from their foundations, nine factories were partly destroyed, including the Havana-American, Martinez, Nichols, Ruy Lopez, Manuel Lopez, Fleitas Toreys, Cortez, and Wolf cigar manufactories. Two of the city fire engine departments were destroyed and the firemen narrowly escaped. The top of the First National Bank was blown off, the postoffice damaged, and two running gears of the government coaling station were wrecked.

As soon as the wind had subsided, plundering began. The city police force was unable to cope with the situation, and the mayor decided to take stringent measures to suppress the looting, his proclamation of martial law resulting. Almost every nationality is represented among the city's population of more than $20,000, about one-half of whom are employed in the cigar manufactories, sponge fisheries, and salvage companies.

LOVE LEADS TO PENITENTIARY.

Woman, Convicted of Stepdaughter's Murder, Accuses Husband.

On behalf of Mrs. Rae Krauss, of Hartford City, Ind., now serving a life sentence in the woman's prison for the murder of her stepdaughter, Crystal Krauss, Attorney J. A. Hindmann has filed a cross complaint in the divorce proceedings brought by William R. Krauss. In the complaint Mrs. Krauss says her husband murdered his own daughter and they agreed that she should be punished for it because the court would be more lenient with a woman and because Krauss, who is wealthy and prominent, could use his influence to get a pardon for his wife.

The complaint alleges that she was "cajoled, threatened and coerced" by her husband into signing a confession which she wrote, and that he has not lived up to his part of the agreement made at that time, namely, to get a pardon for her. She said that she assumed the role of murderess out of her love for her husband.

The death of Crystal Krauss was one of the greatest mysteries in Indiana. The girl was 13 years old and was popular. Her stepmother seemed fond of her and the two were inseparable. Her death was caused by strychnine poisoning, the most damaging evidence being given by a milkman's boy, who said Mrs. Krauss sent him to a drug store to get ten cents worth of strychnine. The next morning Crystal Krauss was dead.

TOTAL LOSS OF HAIR

Seemed Imminent—Scalp Was Very Scaly and Hair Came Out by Handfuls—Scalp Now Clear and New Hair Grown by Cuticura.

"About two years ago I was troubled with my head being scaly. Shortly after that I had an attack of typhoid fever and I was out of the hospital possibly two months when I first noticed the loss of hair, my scalp being still scaly. I started to use dandruff cures to no effect whatever. I had actually lost hope of saving any hair at all. I could brush it off my coat by the handful. I was afraid to comb it. But after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and nearly a box of Cuticura Ointment, the change was surprising. My scalp is now clear and healthy as could be and my hair thicker than ever, whereas I had my mind made up to be bald. W. F. Steese, 5812 Broad St., Pittsburg, Pa., May 7 and 21, 1908."

Pronunciation.

Dr. Johnson would not have consented to pronounce "wind" differently in prose and in verse. He insisted upon making the "i" long always. The story goes that, in order to crush somebody who preferred the short "i" in ordinary conversation, Johnson, rhyming all three words with "tinned," remarked, "I cannot find it in my mind to call it wind, but"—rhyming all three words with "blind"—"I can find it in my mind to call it wind." But his adversary got the better of him. Johnson himself always pronounced "gold'" as "goold." "If I may be so boold," said the other, "I should like to be toold why you call it goold."

WISHED DEATH MIGHT COME

To Relieve the Awful Suffering of Advanced Kidney Disease.

William Gibson, Greenup, Ky., says: "Three months I was in bed, and would have died, I believe, but for Doan's Kidney Pills. My doctor said the case was hopeless. My back felt as if it were being seared with a red-hot iron. The kidney secretions were painful, irregular and full of sediment. There were puffy spots beneath my eyes and my head pained terribly. I was miserable in every way and often wished death might relieve me. When I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills my condition was so serious that they had little effect, but I persisted, getting gradually better, and it was not a great while before I was cured. The effect has been lasting."

This coat gives a good idea of the season's tendency toward the Moyen Age style—low waist line and pleated skirt. A dark blue diagonal cloth is used here, matching the one-piece dress worn with it.

Callous the bowels with harsh cathartics, and you'll need physic always. Help them gently, with candy Cascarets, and you'll need them rarely. Once learn the difference and you'll never take a harsher laxative than these. 858

This $1000.00 Cup for an ear of Corn

Made by Tiffany. Nearly 3 ft. high—in solid gold and silver. Actual contract price $1,000. To be awarded at the

National Corn Exposition, Omaha December 6 to 18, 1909

to the man, woman or child producing the best ear of corn grown this year in the United States.

Open to everybody belonging to the Association—Nothing to buy or sell.

The purpose of the donor of this trophy—W. K. Kellogg—is to improve the quality of the millions of bushels of corn used in making Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes.

Many people think the perfection of corn flavor has been reached in Toasted Corn Flakes. Perhaps it has. If you don't know how good Kellogg's—the genuine Toasted Corn Flakes—is, try it. Then you'll see how hard a task we are giving ourselves to improve it, and the only way we can improve it is by the betterment of the corn itself.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., Dec. 6th to 18th, 1909. Two simple rules will govern the plan, and they are—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909, and that you are a member of the National Corn Association—full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time.

The contest will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for improving the quality of corn used in making KELLOGG'S TOASTED CORN FLAKES. If you haven't tried this delicious cereal, begin your education in "good things to eat" today. All grocers have it.

Oliver Morton Foote

Died October 11, 1909 at His Home Near Harlan. For a Number of Years he run the Meat Market at this place. Was an Honest man. A Friend to Everybody.

Oliver Morton Foote was born to John and Catharine Foote, 2½ miles northeast of Maysville, October 6th., 1862, here he grew to manhood on the farm and developed a beautiful and powerful physike At about the age of thirty he went to St. Joe, Indiana, where he engaged in the meat market and the buying and selling of stock, he remained here in business six or seven years. Here he became acquainted with Miss Lulu Widney whom he made his bride, June 2nd., 1899. Soon after his marriage they moved to Butler, Ind., where he was also engaged in the butcher trade until his health began to show signs of failure when he moved to the home of his youth, having come in pos ession of the old homestead he began to remodel and build up to suit his ideas of "home life on the farm". His home life was b autiful, his best interest centered in his home for which he labored and planned to the end. He was a success as a business man, made friends by the score every where he went, he was industrious and economic as is shown in the beautiful home he leaves to his family.

Of the four children born to them two a son and daughter died in early life, the daughter and son yet remain with the bereaved wife to cheer and comfort her in these her darkest and sadest days.

His last year was one of severe suffering, while he was unable to speak aloud, yet he was so patient and forbearing that it was noticeable and commented on by his friends and neighbors. When his niece would play on the piano he would hum the songs he loved so well. He said to a dear friend, "I pray much, much more than any of you think I believe I am saved and have no apprehensions of death.

He had always been a quiet, kind, accomodating constant friend and brother, he will be greatly missed by his own family, his brothers and sisters and neighbors.

He went to sleep October 11th., 1909, being 47 years and 6 days old. His end was as peaceful and quiet as the setting of the sun on a beautiful June day, so softly and so quietly did he pass away that his friends scarcly knew when he had gone.

The funeral services were held at the home where he was born, in Springfield township, Allen county, Indiana, on Thursday, October 14th., 1909, at 5:00 P. M., conducted by Rev. J. B. Cook in the presence of a large company of relatives and friends, and the body was gently laid to repose in the beautiful cemetery at Harlan. E. C. Carrington as funeral director.

You Who Spend Twice for Fuel What You Should

We'll save you a third or half your fuel bill this season if you will listen to reason. If it was $30.00 last winter, how would $15.00 sound for this year?
Remember, we guarantee to save a third the fuel—proper use will save at least half. And just stop to think—the amount saved in fuel will pay the cost of the stove—Cole's Hot Blast saves its cost and over. Will we guarantee this? Yes! We guarantee:

Cole's Hot Blast $12 up

1—A saving of one-third in fuel over any lower draft stove of the same size, with soft coal, slack or lignite.
2—That Cole's Hot Blast will use less hard coal for heating a given space than any base burner made with same size fire pot.
3—That the rooms can be heated one to two hours each morning with the soft coal or hard coal put in the stove the evening before.
4—That the stove will hold fire with soft coal from Saturday night until Monday morning.
5—A uniform heat day and night, with soft coal, hard coal or lignite.
6—That every stove will remain absolutely air-tight as long as used.
7—That the feed-door is and will remain smoke and dust-proof.
All we ask is that the stove shall be operated according to directions and set up with a good flue.

KEEP PLANTS ALL WINTER

To Do So You Must Have an Even Temperature in Your House and That Is Easy If You Have a Cole's Hot Blast Stove.

Every winter we hear of some reader who has lost a highly prized plant because during a cold snap the fire went out at night, or the family went away for a day and forgot all about the plants.

This never happens where people use a Cole's Hot Blast Stove because this famous heater holds fire from Saturday night until Monday morning. In some cases it has been known to hold fire four days and nights without attention, but it assures the user an even temperature all the time and a hat full of coal at the cost of a cent will keep a fire over night easily. Instead of building a new fire in the morning you simply open the draft and the stove will heat for an hour or two with the fuel put in the night before.

This is the stove sold under a positive guarantee by us, and one of the features of the iron clad guarantee is that the stove will save a third in fuel over any lower draft stove of the same size with soft coal, slack or lignite. This handsome cleanly stove is now being shown by us and every reader should see them before finally deciding on what heater will be bought.

On Wednesday while attending to business at the DeKalb Mortgage & Loan office, he suffered a severe stroke of paralysis and was removed to his home west of Concord, in the Dilgard ambulance, accompanied by Dr. Souder. On Saturday and Sunday he suffered two more strokes and died Sunday morning Mr. Smith is well known to most of our readers. The funeral was held Tuesday at the home at 10:00 o'clock.

A special session of the town dads was held Monday evening at their office with all members present. The purpose of the meeting was to make the necessary arrangements for the town election to be held on Tuesday, November 2nd. The following election board was chosen:. Inspector, Jacob Sechler; Judges, Frank J. White Frank Benninghoff; Clerks, Frank Baker, Edwin Berry; Sheriff, Emanuel D. Hendricks. The board further instructed the town marshal to prepare the Zeigler harness shop for the election room. Adjournment was made for next Monday night.

The young people of the Christian church at Newville, will give a Hallow-een entertainment in the church the evening of October 30th. Entertainment to consist of Music, Recitations and Dialogues. Admission 10c.

On last Thursday evening the ladies of the town met and formed an organization to help with the work of county Local Option. Mrs. Stewart and Mrs. Jones of Garrett, the county presidents, did the work. Mrs. Jones gave a very nice talk explaining the need of the work and Mrs. Stewart conducted the business. A meeting will be held every Thursday afternoon in one of the churches for prayer and discussion of the work until the election is held. Next Thursday at 2 P. M. in the Methodist church will be the first meeting. All the ladies of the township and any others who care to attend are invited and urged to come. Help defeat King Alcohol, it is your duty.

The post office at Auburn Junction in the general store of Henry Harris was entered by yeggman at two o'clock Friday morning, the safe blown at between $175 and $200 was stolen. Sheriff Thomas was called to the Junction at daylight and spent the forenoon in a futile effort to find a clue. The robbers cut out a window in the rear of the store and this admitted to the back room, pried open a door connecting with the main room using a heavy iron crow bar stolen from a nearby handcar house. The noise of the explosion was plainly heard by members of the family of Tom Cole, living above the store, but, as Mr. Cole was not at home, no investigation was made. The manner in which the safe was blown showed the work to be that of professionals.—Press.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Wright's Motor Stopped in Midair.

"Motor troubles" at College Park, Md., proved to be a plague to aviators. While the government aeroplane was flying twenty feet above the earth, with Lieut. Frank P. Lahm operating the levers, the motor suddenly stopped. The cool-headed Wilbur Wright grasped the levers and brought the machine safely to earth. Lieutenant Foulois has given Mr. Wright the government's check for $20,000 as a part payment for the machine which was purchased from the Wright brothers for the Signal Corps. Another $10,000, making the total contract price of $30,000, will be paid when the two army officers who have been receiving instructions are pronounced accomplished aviators.

Boat Leaked; Woman Drowned.

Mrs. Henrietta Dresden, wife of Hunter S. Dresden, contractor of South Bend, Ind., was drowned at Hudson Lake, ten miles from there. Dresden and wife were crossing the lake in a rowboat when it sprung a leak. Dresden tried to save his wife, who weighed nearly 200 pounds, and almost lost his life. A boy on the bank saw the accident and put out just in time to rescue Dresden, who was nearly exhausted.

Frank Herring's Wife Gets Divorce.

Florence D. Herring was granted a divorce and $10,000 alimony from Frank D. Herring, of South Bend, Ind., supreme president of the Order of Eagles. Mrs. Herring charged cruelty and desertion, and Herring, though represented in court by an attorney, did not contest. Herring was a candidate for the nomination of lieutenant governor before the last State Democratic convention.

Depot Will Cost $25,000,000.

James McCrea, president of the Pennsylvania railroad, has announced plans for the erection of a new union passenger station and terminal in Chicago, Ill., to cost not less than $25,000,000. With the Pennsylvania in the project are to be joined the Chicago & Alton, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul.

Germany Gets Into Murder Mystery.

The German government has been asked to take a hand in solving the mystery which has occupied the attention of the Islip (L. I.) authorities since the finding in the woodland of the skeleton of a young woman surrounded by remnants of clothing and tarnished jewelry. The woman evidently had been killed by a pistol shot.

Mr. McCarren Will Recover.

State Senator Patrick H. McCarren, the Democratic leader of Brooklyn, N. Y., whose fight for life has supplied the principal element of human interest in the municipal campaign, has rallied to such an extent that his physicians predict that the crisis is past.

Bank Robbers Make a Haul.

The Bank of Minocqua, at Minocqua, Wis., was robbed by four masked men. The robbers blew all the vaults and escaped with several thousand dollars. A posse is said to have the robbers surrounded in the woods between Haselhurst and Minocqua.

Two Killed in Auto Smash.

Clarence E. Hunt, a well-known automobile manufacturer, and Dr. Edward Grove, of San Diego, Cal., were killed when the automobile in which they were riding turned turtle on a grade while they were speeding from Ramona to San Diego.

Four Cremated in Incendiary Blaze.

Four men were burned to death and one man was fatally burned in a feed yard fire at Wichita, Kas. The men were asleep in a barn which was destroyed. Thirty horses were burned to death.

Prof. Bell's Mother-in-Law Killed.

Mrs. Gardner Hubbard, mother of Mrs. Alexander Graham Bell, was killed in Washington, Ind., when her automobile collided with a street car.

Quebec Fire Cost a Million Dollars.

The loss from the fire which swept Quebec's water front will exceed $1,000,000. All the burned buildings were full of grain and goods awaiting shipment on ocean-going vessels.

Well-Known Circus Man Dies.

Martin J. Downs, a well-known show man, owner of Cole Brothers' circus, died in Canadian General Hospital, Toronto, as the result of blood poisoning and amputation of a leg.

TAFT AND DIAZ MEET AMID GREAT SPLENDOR

Great Pomp and Ceremony Mark Exchange of Courtesies on Both Sides of Border.

THEY CONVERSE IN PRIVATE

Each Ruler Is Host to Accompaniment of Booming Guns and Clanking of Sabers.

Pomp and pageantry, the boom of cannon, the blare of trumpets, the clanking of sabers, the glitter of dazzling uniforms—these formed the setting Saturday for the long-awaited meeting between President Taft and President Porfirio Diaz of Mexico, the executive heads of America's two greatest republics.

It was a dramatic moment in the history of the two countries. In outward splendor it suggested the Field of the Cloth of Gold, the greatest pageant of all history, when in 1520 Henry VIII., the much-married monarch of England, met Francis I. of France in the Valley of Audrey.

In the actual handclasp of the two executives, however, and in the exchange of greetings—in the actual expressions of the good will and friendship between the two nations, for which the outward glitter and glamour was but the frame—simple but cordial informality reigned.

Two cities on the border, the long bridge across the Rio Grande and El Chamizal, a strip of neutral territory, formed the scene of this international spectacle. The action alternated between El Paso, famous in the days of the old Santa Fe trail, and the quaint little City of Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.

It was the second time that a President of the United States had gone outside his country during his term of office. Theodore Roosevelt having set the precedent when he stepped on the soil of the Republic of Panama. It was the first time that President Diaz ever left the boundaries of his country, and to do it special sanction had to be granted by the Mexican Congress. A special train was built to convey the Mexican President to the border, and for the time being Ciudad Juarez became the Mexican capital.

In El Paso President Diaz, after driving up to the international border in an enormous gilt carriage of state with solid gold hubs and trimmings, was welcomed by American bands, which played "La Paloma," the Mexican national anthem, to the rattle of castanets by the trap drummers. In Ciudad Juarez President Taft on his two trips across the Rio Grande rode through banks of cheering and shouting Mexicans, who sang "America."

The actual meeting between the two Presidents was witnessed by fewer than a score of persons—only the personal staffs of the two principals. After greetings were over, President Taft and President Diaz withdrew into an inner room of the chamber of commerce of El Paso, where the historic meeting occurred, and in a long conference were attended only by Governor Creel of the State of Chihuahua, former ambassador to the United States, who acted as interpreter.

At 5:30 o'clock President Taft crossed the Rio Grande to Juarez for the second time, and was guest of honor at a banquet which for splendor of appointment was probably the most notable state feast ever served on the American continent.

FLAG GOES TO PITTSBURG.

Champion Baseball Club of World by Defeating Detroit.

Pittsburg, four times winner of the National League pennant, became the champion baseball team of the world Saturday afternoon, when its husky athletes routed Detroit by the score of 8 to 0, in the seventh and deciding contest of the series. This victory keeps the big flag in the parent league for the third year, Detroit having thrice failed to wrest the biggest honor that goes with baseball from the National League pennant winners. Fred Clarke's fighting band of pirates put up the game of their life, and their reward is that they have become monarchs of the diamond. The wildness of the opposing pitchers, Donovan and Mullin, coupled with terrific drives, won the hard-earned victory.

ECKELS ESTATE IS INSOLVENT.

Financier's Debts Exceed $1,000,000 —Value of Property Only Half.

Presentation to Judge Cutting in the Probate Court in Chicago of more than $250,00 worth of claims against the estate of the late James H. Eckels revealed the insolvency of the estate of the former Comptroller of the Currency, who, at the time of his death was president of the Commercial National Bank and one of the foremost financiers of the nation.

Claims totaling more than $750,000 had already been allowed against this estate, and the prospect of carrying this total over the $1,000,000 mark seemed completely to wipe out the approximate total of $500,000 worth of assets shown by the inventory in the estate. The original petition for the appointment of administrators placed the value of the estate at only $150,000. By far the largest portion of the claims which have been filed in the probate court is for money advanced to the dead banker as personal loans, and many of them recite in detail stock and bond transactions in which he was involved.

THE GLAD HAND ON THE MEXICAN BORDER.

DIPLOMAT DIES IN LONDON.

W. I. Buchanan, Formerly Minister to Panama, Found Senseless.

W. I. Buchanan, formerly United States Minister to Panama, was discovered in an unconscious condition at midnight Saturday in Park Lane, London, and removed to St. George's Hotel, where he died shortly afterward. He was in evening dress, and it is believed his death was due to an apoplectic stroke. Mr. Buchanan arrived in London from Paris the previous Thursday, and called at the American Embassy. He then seemed in good health and spirits, and at no time showed any symptoms of apoplexy.

Mr. Buchanan is credited with being responsible for the continuation of the anti-Castro regime in Venezuela. He was in London to assist in floating bonds for Governor Gomes. Mr. Buchanan has appeared in most every important issue between the United States and Mexican and South American republics for the last fifteen years. He was the first United States Minister to Panama, Minister to Argentine, Brazil, special commissioner to Venezuela, arbitrator between Chile and Argentina, and performed a half dozen other diplomatic functions. He cooperated with Secretary Root in the latter's mission to the South American States. Mr. Buchanan came into notice more than twenty years ago as the builder of the corn palace at the Sioux City exposition.

When Castro's government was tottering Mr. Buchanan was selected to prop up the Gomes government. He succeeded and also in bringing to a settlement and arbitration the five great claims of United States citizens against Venezuela. Mr. Buchanan was also prominently connected with the preliminary negotiations among the Southern republics which led to the peace conference of 1907 at Washington.

SOUTH BEND WOMAN FREED.

Mrs. Lena B. Mason Quickly Cleared in Attempted Murder Case.

Mrs. Leona B. Mason was found not guilty in South Bend, Ind., of attempting to murder John W. Talbot, Supreme President of the Order of Owls, last March. The jury was ready to report in sixteen minutes. In anticipation of a quick verdict the crowd which packed the courtroom during the closing arguments refused to leave and every inch of space was occupied when the jury announced that it had agreed upon a verdict. The defendant and her sisters smiled when they heard the verdict, but there was no demonstration either by them or by the spectators.

Opinion is general that the story told by Mrs. Mason on the stand, in which she charged Talbot with persecution for six years, won the sympathy of the jury. The defense was emotional insanity. Charles A. Davey in closing for the defense delivered a two hour arraignment of Talbot and his associates. He asked the jury for an unqualified acquittal on the first ballot, declaring that by so doing it would place the stamp of disapproval on such men as he asserted Talbot to be.

Boat Sinks and Two Drown.

Sixteen dock laborers, anxious to get across the slip at the foot of 11th avenue in Duluth, to work, piled into a fourteen-foot flat boat. When the overladen craft was a few feet from the dock it sank. Two men lost their their lives.

CASHIER IS A SUICIDE.

Official of Wrecked Wisconsin Bank Ends Life Brooding Over Crash.

F. E. Hanscom, cashier of the wrecked First National Bank of Mineral Point, Wis., shot and killed himself at 10 o'clock Sunday night. Hanscom's body was immediately removed to the home of his mother-in-law, Mrs. John Gray. At sight of the lifeless body Mrs. Gray dropped dead. Since the failure of the bank Hanscom has been working night and day and was despondent over his troubles. Mr. Hanscom was a brother-in-law of Phil Allen, Jr., vice president of the bank, for the alleged misuse of whose funds Allen was arrested Friday.

The bank, for a generation regarded as one of the strongest in southwestern Wisconsin, was closed a few days ago after a week's investigation of the books by Bank Examiner Goodhart. An attempt was made to keep the institution on its feet by the sale of mining property in which Allen was interested, but the deal fell through. It was alleged that the bank had been looted of $200,000 by means of notes forged by Allen.

Allen's chief aid in running the bank was Hanscom. The vice president became seriously ill when the bank was closed, and Hanscom devoted every minute of his time in assisting Examiner Goodhart in straightening out the books. When Receiver Schofield took charge Thursday rumors, which could not be confirmed, had it that the loss to depositors would run greatly over $200,000 and that arrests in addition to that of Allen were to be expected.

Nicaragua Has Revolution.

A revolution broke out the other day and Juan J. Estrada has been elected the provisional president of Nicaragua. The revolutionists had evidently long been preparing for the blow that was struck against President Zelaya. They claim that they have the majority of voters with them in their fight.

The Sporting World

N. J. Cartmell, the University of Pennsylvania runner, has announced his intention to turn professional.

Jake de Risier, the world's champion, broke the five-mile motor cycle record at the Clifton stadium at Passaic, N. J.

Des Moines won the Western League pennant by a margin of two points, the closest pennant race in the history of the Western League.

Walter Demars, of San Francisco, won the six-day eight-hour bicycle race at Kansas City. He rode a total of 969 miles and two laps.

Affliction, a 15 to 1 chance, won the Occidental Handicap, defeating Sam Hildreth's Fitzherbert by a length. The filly was in the lead all of the way.

Sam Hildreth, the owner of a classy string of racers, has been among the most popular turfmen this season. Many of the big stakes have been won by his steeds and it is generally believed that he will clean up $80,000 this season.

GYPSY SMITH STORMS FORTS OF CHICAGO SIN

Twelve Thousand Christians, Singing, March Before Darkened Houses and Big Crowd.

INVADE "MODERN BETHESDA"

Denizens of the Levee District Watch the Demonstration from Darkened Windows.

Heading an army of at least 20,000 enthusiastic and excited men and women, Gypsy Smith, evangelist, Monday evening led the most dramatic religious demonstration against the South Side levee in Chicago that that city—or any other, for that matter—ever has seen.

The parade in the streets followed a meeting in the Seventh Regiment Armory, in which at least 10,000 people took part, and was followed by two other big meetings, and several overflow meetings, in which the attendance more than doubled this early gathering. Beginning in tense excitement, caused by the opposition to the parade, and increased by the religious fervor under which the worshipers worked, the gypsy evangelist held the great mass of people in check, and finally, in the Alhambra Theater meeting, showed his perfect control over an audience collected, as was this one, from the most notorious dives in the levee district.

The red light district did not take the invasion seriously. Never before, perhaps, in the annals of the district were so many persons grouped in the houses at one time. But the men and women who marched and sang through the ill-paved streets did not know that, and their voices rose in a fervor of religious enthusiasm, as though they would convert the whole district by the earnestness of their singing. And behind the drawn blinds, up at which the marchers gazed with wonder and sorrow and a certain curiosity, the followers of the life of joy laughed and smoked and drank and scoffed.

BANK GUARANTY LAW INVALID.

Nebraska Measure Fatally Hit by Supreme Bench Decision.

The Nebraska bank guaranty law, enacted by the last Legislature, is invalid, the federal court deciding Saturday. Judges Vendeventer and T. C. Munger at Lincoln handed down a decision affirming the decision of the lower court and making permanent the temporary injunction granted by the district court preventing the law from going into operation.

"I shall not say whether I will call an extra session for the enactment of another law or not until I have read the decision," said Gov. Shallenberger when told of the decision. "If the decision points out the weak points of the law, and they appear to be fatal I may call an extra session." Some weeks ago the Governor said emphatically if the decision was against the law he would reconvene the Legislature to enact a new law.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

Hogs have been selling for $8.71 per hundred weight at Paola, Kan., the highest price they have brought for years. The prices were due to competition of hog buyers in that part of the State.

Control of the United Railways Company and the Ruth Trust Company, of Portland, Ore., was purchased by J. H. Hulbert, of Fontanelle, Iowa, and C. L. Dunbar, of Vancouver, B. C. The purchase price was close to $5,000,000.

The Senate committee, which has been touring the Northwest for the purpose of visiting the irrigation projects, are thoroughly pleased with the work of reclamation and are in favor of extending the service along this line.

The extensive development of iron ores in Ashland County, Wisconsin, is reviving and is pressed to the front by the projection of a railroad spur into the low grade beds comprising the Guest and Penokee mines, recently abandoned.

At a special election held in Northfield, Minn., the Northfield Telephone Company, which is composed entirely of neighboring farmer stockholders, won a franchise by a vote of 308 to 175. The victory is the culmination of a four years' effort.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XIII.

Agatha's wedding day was fixed for the 10th of January. The weeks of her short engagement had sped with lightning rapidity, and now it only wanted two days more to complete her happiness. She had lived in a fools' paradise ever since the day that Rupert had asked her to marry him. After the faithful love of years, she had won him at last!—she had gained her reward for the patient devotion with which half her lifetime her heart had worshipped him in silence. She was exuberantly happy.

Louise Carroll was secretly uneasy. She had at first been overjoyed with the news of their engagement, for was it not her own pet scheme for their happiness—planned and conceived long ago, and only laid aside with regret at a time when it had no longer seemed practicable? But as the days went on, she saw that although Agatha was perfectly satisfied, and in fact almost too radiantly happy—her brother was by no means so filled with joy and content, as might have been expected of him. Louise watched him narrowly, and with an ever-increasing anxiety.

The 10th of January fell on a Tuesday, and on the previous Saturday Carroll came down to stay at The Lodge till over Sunday—on the Monday night it was arranged that he was to sleep at the clergyman's house in the village in order to conform to an ancient superstition that a bridegroom and his bride shall not stay under the same roof on the eve of their wedding.

When Rupert arrived by an afternoon train he was moody and abstracted—he kissed Agatha carelessly and flung himself down upon the sofa with a gesture almost of misery, complaining that he was tired, that his head ached. Louise turned to him and said seriously:

"My dearest Rupert, surely there is something wrong with you? You look—well—almost unhappy! Has anything happened?"

"Nothing—nothing! that is the worst of it!" he replied, despondingly. "I cannot put a name to it—but it weighs upon me like lead—it is an intangible something, a black shadow that seems to envelop me—yet the only distinct thing I can put my finger upon is that my head aches as if it would split—all this week it has ached more or less—but now it seems to increase every hour; the pain is simply awful."

"My poor dear boy. You ought to go and lie down in a darkened room—of course such a headache as that is enough to account for all your other sensations. No doubt the excitement of your wedding is too much for you. When it is over, and you are married and at rest after all this commotion, you will settle down and become perfectly well and happy again."

"No, no, no!" he cried, emphatically, "it is just that, that is making me ill! I know that I ought not to marry Agatha, there is something day and night that calls out to me to stop—not to do it—something that seems to drag me back—and yet for the life of me I do not know what it is, or why I should not marry her!"

"My dear Rupert, this is very dreadful! Do you not love Agatha?"

"I believe I do love her in a way—at any rate I am very fond of her—I always was, you know—only——"

"Oh, my darling boy, if you are not quite sure of your feelings, pause before it is too late—at whatever cost to yourself and to dear Agie, tell her the truth and break it off!"

"I cannot!" he said, at length. "How is a man to behave like a blackguard to a good girl who loves him and trusts him? I could give her no reason for such conduct either—none—none! I don't know why I feel as I do—but, Louise," he said, suddenly stopping short in front of his sister, and looking at her earnestly and solemnly, "I swear to you that if anything on earth should arise, even at the last moment, to break off this marriage, I should fall on my knees, and thank heaven from the very bottom of my heart. Only I cannot move a finger myself to stop it. It is impossible!"

When he rose on his wedding morning, it seemed to be rather late, and yet the oppressive weight upon his mind, of which he had spoken to his sister, lay heavier than ever upon him. It was a bitterly cold day, the ground was frozen hard, and thin flakes of snow drifted now and again one by one from the grey and gloomy clouds.

There would probably be a heavy fall before night—there was every appearance of it; although for the present the snow was not enough to necessitate an umbrella. But, for certain, no sunshine would fall on the bride' head to-day. Carroll shivered as he looked out of his bedroom window at the Vicarage. It seemed to him that the weather was typical of his own condition; the hard frost was in his heart, the chilling snowflakes were harbingers of trouble ahead, the lowering skies were not blacker than that black shadow that brooded over his fate.

The little church was gay with flowers that morning, and crowded to overflowing with friends and neighbors. Everybody turned round in a flutter of excitement as Agatha came up the nave, on the arm of a distant Dale cousin. The bride had never looked so well; her fine figure showed to advantage in her white satin dress, and she held up her head as she went by, with a glad light in her eyes and a flush upon her cheeks.

Nobody had looked much at the bridegroom, as he waited for her at the chancel, or it might have been seen that he was deadly pale. The service began. The bride answered the responses well; the bridegroom was inaudible.

A little contretemps took place; the ring dropped on to the stone pavement, with a little clanging noise, just as Rupert was about to place it upon Agatha's finger. The clergyman picked it up quickly, and the ceremony proceeded.

Presently the service came to an end; Rupert and Agatha were pronounced to be man and wife. The bridal pair went into the vestry, and immediately Miss Carroll went in after them, followed by as many intimate friends as could possibly crowd in through the doorway after her. All over the church the rest of the company experienced a sense of freedom and relief from a tiresome and trying ordeal, that was satisfactorily got over; and everybody began talking, and laughing, and walking about from pew to pew exactly as if they were, not in a church, but in their own drawing-rooms.

Presently a hush of expectancy fell upon them. It was time for the newmarried couple to come out of the vestry. Everybody hustled quickly back into the pews, and the organist was on the point of striking the first chord of the wedding march.

Just at that moment a curious commotion seemed to arise about the open door of the vestry; several persons ran out together; there was a confused sound of voices; a little crowd that seemed to be blocking the way; whilst in the midst of them was suddenly seen the dark head of the bride in its coronet of orange blossoms.

Surely something was wrong! A questioning murmur went through the crowd. A few left their seats; the country doctor, who happened to be present, stood up in his place.

Then, all at once, Agatha burst from the restraining hands that were trying to get her back, and to the astonishment and dismay of everyone came running quickly down the nave—alone!

She seemed distracted; her face was white as death, her eyes wild and panic-stricken; her lace veil, flung back from her head, floated wildly behind her. No one could stop her; till, half way down the church, her flying feet becoming entangled in her long satin draperies, she fell heavily forward, with outstretched arms, without making an effort to save herself, and lay face downwards upon the tesselated pavement.

CHAPTER XIV.

By nightfall Agatha was lying in her darkened bedroom, in the house from which she had sallied in the morning in all the bravery of her wedding garments, with a hospital nurse by her bedside—tossing to and fro upon her tumbled pillows in the delirium of high fever. The story of what had happened in the vestry soon spread like wild-fire, and the deepest compassion was felt, both for her and for the unfortunate man who was the cause of the catastrophe.

It appeared that on first entering the vestry, nothing unusual had taken place. Miss Carroll was the first to kiss her brother and his new wife, then others followed quickly with their good wishes and congratulations. Then Agatha sat down quite gaily to write her maiden name for the last time. Then it was Miss Carroll's turn, but just as she was stooping down over the table to affix her signature below theirs, some one standing behind her caught her by the arm and whispered to her, with agitation:

"Look at your brother, Miss Carroll—for heaven's sake look at him!"

She dropped the pen and turned quickly. Rupert was deadly pale; he stood motionless, clutching his head between his hands, and staring down blankly and wildly at the written names in the register on the table.

"It is wrong! all wrong!" he cried, "that is not the right name; there is some dreadful mistake here. Release me!" he cried, turning fiercely round upon the startled Vicar. "Set me free; undo this horrible mockery of marriage, to which I will never consent. It cannot be too late; I remember everything; I am engaged to be married; the woman to whom I am engaged is waiting for me to come to her—let me go—set me free; this marriage is nothing but a sham and a mockery—Agatha Dale cannot be my wife!"

Then Agatha had turned away speechless and pale, appalled by the hideous horror of these dreadful words, and breaking through the many kindly and compassionate arms that would have held her back, she fled like a mad woman down the church, with no consciousness of the crowd on either side of her, and no thought save a wild craving to escape and to hide herself somewhere—anywhere, out of the world, till at last she had mercifully fallen insensible amongst those who surrounded her, ere she reached the church door.

As for Rupert Barrett, who was perfectly convinced that he had gone out of his mind, got him away quietly by the door of the vestry, and hurried him back to the Vicarage. But he was not in the least mad, only frantic with despair. After a while he became calmer, and expressed the deepest penitence and regret for the pain and shock he must have given to Agatha; but when Mr. Barrett assured him solemnly that his marriage was an accomplished fact, that Agatha was his legal wife and that nothing on earth could now annul or cancel his union to her, he became stricken with a perfect paroxysm of grief, both on her account and on his own, and burst into a passion of tears most painful and heartrending to witness.

Then, when he grew calmer, he described to the Vicar exactly what had happened to him. The pains in his head, he said, had continued to increase in intensity for some days past, but on the morning of the wedding there had come a little respite, only to be followed when the service actually began, by a fiercer renewal of the agony. He confessed that he had been scarcely conscious of what was going on in the church, nor of the presence of his bride by his side. He had dropped the ring literally because he did not know whether he held it or no.

When he got into the vestry, he felt convinced that some terrible thing was about to happen to him almost immediately—he said that he believed that he should drop dead. Suddenly he seemed to hear a clap of thunder; it might have been just before he signed his name, or immediately afterwards, he could not tell. But the moment he heard it, the blackness and the pain all rolled away, he looked at the white-robed figure by his side, expecting to see, not the face of Agatha Dale, but that of another woman to whom he was engaged and whom he loved—he looked down at the book and saw not her name, but Agatha's! Then remembrance came fully back to him, and that page of his past that had been blotted out of his memory, was made clear and distinct to him once more.

"Last summer I met her, the woman I love, and shall always love," he said, to the distressed but sympathetic Vicar. "Then, you know, I had that blow on my head, and my long illness afterwards, and every trace of her vanished out of my mind! I forgot her utterly, I knew I had forgotten something, I was always trying to remember what, but I could not grope my way through the thick darkness. Once I had a gleam, I recollected the place she used to live in, and Louise and I started off there together, but when I got to it, the house was no longer as I remembered it; she must have left it, for there was an auction going on, and I became bewildered and everything faded away again in my mind. I could not remember her in the least. Latterly, since I have been engaged to Aggie, I have suffered from the most intolerable depression. I have felt all along that I ought not to marry her and yet I could not for the life of me tell why. But what must Irene have thought of me? She must think I have deserted her; and where can she be now? Where can I find her—how can I ever make her believe in my unhappy story?"

"My dear Mr. Carroll," said Mr. Barrett, very seriously, "I deeply sympathize with your misfortune. I pity you, in fact, from the bottom of my heart, but I am compelled to speak to you plainly. What you must think about now, is not the young lady to whom you were once engaged, and from whom an unfortunate chain of circumstances has separated you, but of the lady who is now your wife."

"I must see her," he muttered, "I must explain everything to her. What a curse there must be upon me, that I should have wrecked the lives of two women in such a terrible manner!"

Mr. Barrett helped him across the garden and down the road to his sister's house. All the wedding-party had vanished; a few groups of awe-struck villagers alone remained standing curiously about the gate, and these, when they saw the Vicar supporting a pale, haggard wretch, who looked more dead than alive, and in whom they almost failed to recognize the handsome bridegroom of the morning, dispersed quietly to their homes with pitying looks and whispers.

A Slight Jolt.

Brown had just finished a narrative that was tedious and long drawn out.

"Say, Brown," exclaimed one of his audience, "you'd make a good bank cashier."

"Why do you think so?" queried Brown.

"Because," answered the other, "you are never short in your accounts."

Grasping the Details.

"Can't you get a better grasp on the details of the business?" asked the senior partner.

"This is a very large business," explained the new clerk.

"I know, but you seem to be able to keep up with the baseball batting averages without a card index."—Kansas City Journal.

A New Danger.

"I was fined a hundred dollars and costs this morning," said the owner of the aeroplane, sadly.

"What for?" queried his friend.

"My chauffeur lost control of the machine and it bumped into and smashed some fellow's air castle," answered the high flyer.

Used to It.

Downe—Yes, I went to a 5 o'clock tea with my wife yesterday.

Towne—Gracious! Didn't it almost drive you crazy?

Downe—Oh, no; I didn't mind it. I own a boiler shop, you know.

Tiring.

"Huh! You think you are smart, don't you?"

"Sometimes I do, and then I happen to look at what I married and I am ready to confess that I am not."—Houston Post.

Why She Grieves.

"Why is it that Rosamond appears so unhappy? Did she not marry a count?"

"Yes; but he turned out to be no count!"—Harvard Lampoon.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The Pierceton ministers seem to favor the plan to unite all churches in that town into one.

Mrs. I. N. Wright, of near New Lisbon, is suffering with a broken collarbone as the result of a runaway accident.

Because her husband scolded her, Mrs. Alice Ellis, aged 18 years, wife of James Ellis of Evansville, took an overdose of laudanum and may die. Ellis is employed at the new filtration plant.

Albert Kouk cut off the right ear of Charles Geritzke in a duel with shovels at the Western glucose works at Roby. The assault occurred as a result of a quarrel, and the men could not be separated until after Geritzke fell. Kouk is under arrest.

The Kendallville fair did not make any money this year. The receipts were $5,982.10 and the expenses $6,052.44, a net loss of $70.34. As the association had a balance of $910.23 on hand from last year, it still has $839.89 to go on and will greatly enlarge and improve next year's fair.

Two Whiting children are dead, the result of eating medicine tablets. Annie, the 2-year-old daughter of Andrew Cengel, climbed on a dresser in her mother's absence and was found in spasms. William, the 3-year-old son of George Roe, found a bottle of mercurial tablets and ate them.

One of the weights of the clock in the Wells County Courthouse broke loose a few days ago from the wire cable to which it was suspended, and fell through a floor forty feet below the tower. The weight consisted of a wagonload of rocks. As a result Bluffton was temporarily without an official timepiece.

In a justice's court at Kokomo, John Rollin, a tenant, was fined one cent and costs, $10 in all, for having retained the key to the residence he vacated twenty-four hours after leaving it. The law makes it an offense for a tenant after surrendering property to retain the keys from the landlord over twenty-four hours.

A double wedding took place last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Lowe in Noblesville. Their daughter Florence became the bride of Vernon L. Harrison and Miss Grace the bride of George Fisher. Both ceremonies were performed at the same time by the Rev. Tobias Thomas, of Danville, Ill. Two hundred guests were present.

Robert Curkendoll, colored, aged 80 years, one of two surviving ex-slaves in Wabash, was found dead at the County Infirmary. He lived on a Kentucky plantation until 40 years old, always spoke well of his former master and said his happiest days were spent in slavery. Several years ago he became blind and spent the entire time singing old plantation songs.

Simon Aschelman, a farmer living east of Bluffton, tried to separate two fighting hogs by leaping into a pen to drive them apart, and one of the animals turned upon him. Before he could escape a long tusk had ripped open a gash six inches long to the bone, and he escaped worse injuries by leaping over the fence to a place of safety beyond the reach of the enraged beasts. A doctor dressed his injured leg carefully. There are fears of blood poison.

Deputy Sheriff William C. Smith, of Columbus, often gets his mail mixed, because there are so many William Smiths in that vicinity. Recently he received a letter that had more writing on the envelope than he found on the inside. The address was as follows: Not Tankhouse Bill Smith, not Cement Contractor Bill Smith, not Brickyard Bill Smith, not Farmer Bill Smith and not Bill Smith who recently died, but Long Green Bill Smith, sometimes known as Bill Capacity Smith."

died a few days ago in a hospital at Indianapolis, where he underwent an operation, was one of the most prominent men of Richmond. He was a member of the Wayne County bar, though for the last few years he had not been engaged in the active practice of law. He probably was the best authority on Masonic law and on matters concerning the rituals of the order in Eastern Indiana. He had made the subject of Masonry a study for many years and was a past master of Richmond lodge.

Burglars who visited the Muncie Produce Company's plant recently brought a wagon with them to carry away the spoils. They gained entrance to the place by cutting a pane of glass out of a rear window and then opening the door. Thousands of dollars worth of produce is kept in storage at the place and it is impossible to say just how much was taken, but it is known that several crates of dressed poultry and eggs were obtained. The only way in which the goods could have been taken away was by means of a wagon.

A strange woman narrowly escaped death on a north-bound Monon train at Rossville. A bullet was fired through a coach window by Will Sheffler, a taxidermist, who had aimed at a bird.

The wheat fields north of Morocco are attracting large numbers of geese and cranes, the birds appearing morning and evening to feed on the green wheat. Brants, which have been scarce in the last ten years, are appearing in considerable numbers.

On the Moses Skinner farm, four miles east of Oakland City, the Rogers Oil Company has completed an oil well estimated to produce six hundred barrels a day. The well has created a sensation in the oil field.

Elijah Clark, believed to be the oldest man in Indiana, died of general debility at his home, near Coal Bluff. Had he lived until next January he would have been 102 years old. Until a few days ago he was hale and hearty and enjoyed the use of all his faculties.

Postmasters have been appointed in Indiana as follows: Pittsburg, Carroll County, William C. Smith, vice Grace Swatts, resigned; Teegarden, Marshall County, Jesse F. Beldon, vice W. C. Divine, removed. Rural carriers appointed: Fowler, route 6, Elmore Arter, carrier; no substitute. Vincennes, route 7, Harvey E. Daines, carrier; no substitute.

A convert at a revvial meeting in the West Side Mission in Evansville went into a trance at a recent meeting, and throwing his hand high in the air knocked down a hanging coal oil lamp, and a fire was immediately started, causing women and children to rush panic-stricken to the doors. The fire was finally extinguished and the convert revived.

George Edward Spray, aged 50 years, a carpenter, met instant death at Crawfordsville when he fell from the roof of a house that he was shingling. The scaffold on which he was working slipped, throwing the man to the ground, a distance of 25 feet. In his rapid descent Spray struck his head on the corner of the cement foundation of the porch, breaking his neck. Spray leaves a widow and five children.

Mrs. Sam Pass, aged 60 years, living ten miles northeast of Francesville, is dead from hydrophobia. The woman was bitten by a rabid dog in August, but the first symptoms of this dread disease did not appear until last week. The same dog afterward attacked Mr. and Mrs. William Luzinby, living in the neighborhood, and they killed the animal. They are now in Chicago taking the Pasteur treatment.

Edible puffballs are being found in great numbers in the vicinity of Logansport. And this year they are remarkable in size. Puffballs weighing eight and ten pounds are common, and several have been found that were much heavier. The flavor is excellent and the quantity so great that puffball socials are being held. Several of the lodges have held stag parties, at which deliciously fried puffball was the featured article on the menu.

Lloyd Maddux, a workman employed in the construction of a smokestack 250 feet high at the Muncie electric lighting plant, fell a distance of fifty feet, and although his condition is serious, physicians believe he will recover. This is the first accident connected with the erection of the monster stack and it was caused by the breaking of a scaffold. The stack is made of reinforced concrete, and has attracted engineers in all parts of the country.

Dr. Bud Wilkins Neely, a dentist of Franklin, was greatly excited when he went to the County Clerk to get his marriage license. In filling out the application for the license he gave his date of birth as April 26, 1909, making him almost six months of age. In filling out the blank for the bride, Miss Mary Esther Bassett, a teacher of Morristown, it was filled out to the effect that Bud Wilkins Neely was to marry Mary Esther Neely. Both are prominent young people and their first meeting was while they were students at Franklin College.

Zaharako Brothers, Greek candy makers of Columbus, are increasing their list of domestic animals that understand Greek. They began with a horse that was driven to an ice cream wagon. A Greek who could speak no English was started out as driver, and in a short time he had the horse educated so it understands all commands in Greek. Now the brothers have a cat, three rabbits and a hunting dog, all of which understand Greek. The dog is perhaps the most remarkable of the animals, as it understands more Greek than the average college student who has been studying the language a year or two.

Laughlin Bros., of Nappannee, have eighty-six acres of land planted in cabbages this year. The rows are three feet apart, the cabbages being eighteen inches apart. These figures have given rise to interesting speculations as to how much cabbage, in pounds and tons, will be raised on these eighty-six acres. It is estimated that, not considering blighted heads, there will be 3,680 heads to the acre. If each head weighs four pounds, this will be 38,730 pounds to the acre. On the eighty-six acres there would be 3,329,980 pounds. This would be 1,936 tons to the acre, which would be 166,496 tons for the entire tract. And all this cabbage is to be made into sauerkraut.

Dr. D. A. Reeder, of Laporte, is planning to erect a $100,000 building in that city as headquarters for the Home Health Club. It will have a twofold purpose, serving as a sanitarium and a home for aged persons.

Charles Harditimes, of Hartford, Ky., was arrested in Evansville charged with striking Wesley Walker, a negro, over the head with an ax. Both men are employed on the steamer Hartford. Walker's skull was crushed and he will die.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Dun's Review, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says:

"Trading defaults exhibit some increase above the normal, but a high daily average of payments through the banks is in evidence and the industrial conditions testify to sustained progress in production and distribution.

"New demands form a notably large aggregate for iron and steel, with prices for foundry supplies firmer for distant deliveries. Rolling mills have ample contracts for steady day and night work until next spring. Contracts for structural materials and involving rather large tonnages are under negotiation.

"Stormy weather and the Columbus holiday interrupted movements of commodities, factory outputs, grain and flour, and the markets for breadstuffs were quieter than in previous weeks, but live stock arrivals gained moderately and there were larger shipments of corn and provisions. The approaching close of lake navigation causes more rush for vessels to move mine and forest products, and the freight rate for grain to Buffalo rose to the highest this season.

"Earnings of the Chicago steam roads sustain favorable comparison with former high gross, and there is much installation of new rolling stock and planning for track extensions and other improved facilities to meet expanding demands of transportation.

"Lower temperatures stimulated wider activity in general merchandise here and throughout the interior. Stocks undergo seasonable reduction in the leading retail lines, especially of heavy clothing, blankets, woolens, housewares and food products.

"Bank clearings, $266,353,148, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 9.5 per cent, and compare with $269,577,109 in 1907.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 36, against 24 last week, 21 in 1908 and 18 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 7 last week, 2 in 1908 and 5 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

Improvement is the order of the day in trade, collections and industry. Freezing temperature, light snows, or killing frosts, coupled with freer crop movement, have helped retail trade and collections at the West and Northwest, while lower temperatures and high prices and free marketing of cotton have helped distribution at the south. Jobbing trade has been coincidently benefited by reordering to fill broken stocks, and the distributive trade side accordingly presents a favorable appearance.

Trade at first hands feels the stimulus in more confident buying for spring, though the unsettlement in the goods trade, due to high cost of material and talk of curtailment, still retards trade in this line. However, the tendency of cotton goods is undeniably upward, and buying appears slightly more confident at the higher prices asked. From industrial lines the same story of full order books and of longer hours now comes, payrolls are expanding, and available skilled labor is reported closely employed, with less idleness noted than for two years past.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Oct. 11, were 222, against 203 last week; 244 in the same week of 1908; 207 in 1907; 170 in 1906, and 178 in 1905.—Bradstreet's.

Local Option Privileges of the Citizens

(A. B. W.)

Before 1910 salutes us, the voters of DeKalb county are to decide at the polls the pending saloon question. The present and growing agitation leads on and up to a decisive answer. Shall the saloon come back and stay? or shall the public conscience of our twentieth century civilization cancel its rule and abolish its presence? "That's the question" for American citizenship to meet and settle, before many weeks, in the battle of ballots.

The issue is before us whether desired or not, and it cannot be avoided. It must be met. There's no dodging it and not to face it is to act the coward. It is one of the conflicts of peace that is as good a test of patriotism as the battle of bullets.

The fact is obvious that the coming contest in elective franchise indicates two sides. The lining up is going on daily, the ranks are being counted, and it becomes imperative to take sides. It is a day, when indifference is a crime against conscience, a wrong to the state, an index of unfitness for civil rights, and a dishonor to any man with political responsibilities.

If a voter is worthy the name of American citizen, he is free, under our flag to decide by his vote, one way or the other.

That is his inalienable right as an American. That is one thing that America means, and that involves a great fundamental principle of civil liberty. We have the right of petition and we have the right of decision. It is a civic prerogative, inseparable from our citizenship.

It is just here that Local Option asserts itself. The people have a right to act in Local Option, because this is America, the land of free schools, a free press, free speech and civil rights. So the Local Option movement, concerning the saloon is perfectly in harmony with the principles of our national, our state, and our local government.

It is common sense, therefore, to recognize this right of the people to say what they think and want concerning the saloon. The Declaration of Independence reads "We the people" The people rule. The majority vote decides all matters of interest and necessity.

The coming election, therefore, is but the right of the people to speak out.

Why then is the saloon so fully and utterly opposed to the people's exercise of this right of Local Option? Why not encourage rather than oppose? Why not stand up for "a square deal," as Roosevelt put it? If the saloon is a patriotic institution, why not be "delighted," to have the majority enjoy the political right? Or is the organized saloon power ready to admit its ambition to boss the political situation? Or, as a licensed "business" is it willing to confess its purpose for a class legislation of its own, or a favored monopoly no other business dare maintain?

Present day facts point that way, and facts are stubborn things.

Let us all be good for awhile, any way. Let us be fair. Let us all cheerfully declare that this "fight to a finish" is perfectly legitimate, and that the fellow who does not want any saloon in town or county has a perfect right to carry out his conviction. "Local Option" is a right of the people.—Twelfth District Press.

A great many of our young people were surprised upon learning of the marriage of Miss Nellie May Bair of Findley, Ohio, to Mr. Verne H. O'Harra of that place, on last Wednesday. Miss Nellie is the daughter of D. A. Bair and wife formerly of this community.

Sunday the entire community southeast of here was aroused by the appearance of a deer. It was first discovered on the Platt Squires farm and a posse of men was formed but it managed to keep out of the reach of their guns. Some sixty of the neighbors were out to see the animal. While it is almost impossible for the animal to have come a very great distance, no one has heard of the escape. It was thought to have been one from the Bash farm near Wayne. The animal made its appearance east of St. Joe also Sunday, we are told. The law would deal harshly with a person for killing it.

The Most Remarkable Guarantee Ever Made on a Heating Stove

We have received a letter from the President of the Cole Manufacturing Company which specifically states that they can guarantee Cole's Original Hot Blast Stove to save a third in fuel over any lower draft stove of the same size with soft coal, slack or lignite; it is guaranteed to hold fire from Saturday night until Monday morning; guaranteed to have a smoke-proof feed door; guaranteed to remain air-tight as long as used; guaranteed to give a uniform heat day and night with soft coal, hard coal or lignite; guaranteed to use less hard coal for heating a given space than any base burner with the same size fire pot, and guaranteed to heat the rooms from one to three hours in the morning with the fuel put in the day before (which does away with kindling or rebuilding the fire each morning).

When you analyze this guarantee and see how they state in black and white just what it will do in comparison with other soft coal stoves, and even with hard coal base burners, it is safe to say that the majority of stoves bought this season for heating purposes will be the famous Cole's Hot Blast, for which we are the exclusive selling agents for this town. We have these stoves on our floor and will be pleased to show them to every one interested. Come soon.

Irish Legal Wits.

The mots of the celebrated wits—Harry Deane Grady, Lysaght and Keller—of the Irish bar early in the last century are now in large measure forgotten. Some few are, however, on record. Harry Deane Grady, a leader of the Munster bar, voted in the Irish house of commons to support the union against the wishes of his constituents, one of whom remonstrated indignantly with him on his intended course of action. "What, do you mean to sell your country?" "Yes," was the cool reply, "and very happy I am to have a country to sell."

Ned Lysaght, a celebrated wit and poetaster of the period, in very embarrassed circumstances, applied to Mr. La Touche, the well known banker, for a place in his establishment. "What situation, my dear Lysaght, could possibly suit you?" said his friend, who felt himself in a difficulty. "Not only one, but two," was the reply. "Pray, what are they?" "If you will only, my dear La Touche, make me cashier for one day I'll become runner the next."—London Law Notes.

That is to say, have you told anybody whether or not you believe the defendant guilty of the crime charged against him, or have you said to anybody that you believe him to be innocent?"

"Course not, judge," answered the venireman; "it ain't necessary fur me to 'xpress no opinion about him. I've knowed him fur thirty years, an' I know blame well he stole the cow——"

THE POPULAR PULPIT

USE OF THINGS IN HAND.

By Rev. Chas. A. S. Dwight.

And the Lord said unto him, What is that in thine hand? And he said, A rod.—Exodus iv.: 2.

"What is that in thine hand?" was the question of the Lord to Moses in the land of Midian. The answer was a rod, which, when thrown on the ground, performed wonders, through the symbolism of a miraculous quickening. What is that in thine hand? is a question which God puts to every man to-day, though he may not live and move in a desert, but in a crowded mart, or in the quick-paced circles of modern society. There is no one who has not at least as much as a stick in his hand, and just a rod may do wonders when it is consecrated to the divine service. The rod in Moses' hand stands for the faculty, native or cultivated, which one possesses. If it be a rough stick hewn from the brush, it symbolizes native endowments; if it be a jeweled hand, or a sharp-pointed javelin, it may connote the attritions of culture or the powers of dynamic learning—but whatever it may be it must be a consecrated value, a possession cast down in proffered surrender to Jehovah.

Religion demands the proper use of the things in one's hand. No one can use what is merely theoretic or dreamful or imaginary, nor work with another's powers. There is no doing duty by proxy; there is no hiring of a substitute to go to Zion's war. Each man must be present for duty, each must answer to the roll call, each man must wear his own armor, fend with his own shield, and strike with his own sword. Let every man then look well to his armor and equipment, for his comrade's spear will not win him laureis, nor his fellow's shield perhaps avail to protect him in the hour of warfare.

When Moses found himself circumscribed in his activities in the land of Midian the Lord sent him in due time a commission for wider service, but Moses had first to be taught, by an object lesson, that the power or effective service was from God, not from man, while yet it employs the powers of men. By his own rod from the brush Moses could not strike a blow at Pharaoh which would hurl him from his throne, while yet he was to learn that God might take the staff in his hand to be as an irresistible sceptre of sovereignty. To-day God works for us while He works through us. The basis of His working, so to speak, is in the human faculty, though it is far more than that faculty. While magnifying the divine force due degard should be paid to the human factor. To every good man God supplies certain powers on trust, from which He will demand a return. God is "austere" or strict, requiring an accounting. What is that in thine hand? What are you going to do with it? Are you using it faithfully and effectively, until you get a better thing to handle? These are pressing questions, for which a sufficient answer must be returned to the Lord of all spirits.

The use of the things in one's hand, if intelligently pursued, will in the end lead to the acquisition of greater powers of action. When God sees that a man is making a good use of a rough rod He may give after a while a polished staff, and later still perhaps a sceptre. Muscles strengthen by exercise, and powers grow by use; practice makes perfect, as industry gives expertness. To him that hath shall be given, and he who is faithful in that which is least shall be honored by grander opportunities which grow out of the much and the many. God is a strict accountant, but not a hard taskmaster, and, while He demands the unsparing, unfailing use of the things in the hand, will multiply in due time the faculties which are actuated by faith, and the blessings which are now a hope.

THE EARTHLY, THE HEAVENLY.

Rev. Geo. Shipman Payson.

"As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."—I. Cor. 15:49.

The glory of a sunset cloud is not in its radiance alone, but in its radiance contrasted with its gloom. The brightness of the Christian's hope is partly due to the background of experience. The infirmities and blunders and sins of earthly life the best of men—if we except the Saviour only—cannot forget. But the Apostle Paul uses them to cheer and encourage when he says: "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

It is a depressing truth that human life everywhere is marked by error, weakness, folly, sin, decay and death. These are alleviated, but cannot be removed, by faith in Christ. Every human soul bears the image of the earthy. For every soul is temptable. Many are burdened with grief. Some are burdened with sin, and the best and purest of human beings are most conscious of their sinfulness. Sorrow and suffering appear in childhood, and linger with us through youth, maturity and age. For the earthy is feeble. Those who inherit from Adam the self-indulgence and love of earthly pleasures through which he sinned inherit also the consequences of those sins. And sorrow is universal here on earth.

But for those who believe in Christ the apostle paints a radiant future, made all the more radiant by contrast with the somber background of experience. As surely as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. If we have been like Adam, we shall be like Christ. The weakness, error, folly, sin and sufferings which mark our earthly experience shall assuredly give place to the glory, the strength, the perfection, the purity and the bliss of the redeemed. There is no doubt about his words. They do not affirm that we may, or we might, or that under certain conditions it is possible that we will, bear the image of the heavenly. But they declare that we shall. They point to the immutable facts of our experience, and draw from them the assurance of the promise. Because there can be no doubt that we have borne the image of the earthy, so there can be no doubt that we shall bear the image of the heavenly.

Since memory and conscience and fear and even hope itself are tinged through and through with the colors of the earthy, and every reference to experience assures us that we are of the earth, earthy, and must be till the end of life below, our whole spiritual experience becomes the groundwork of an assured outlook upon exalted joy and heavenly bliss beyond the grave. For the promise derives its inspiration from the dark and doleful dreariness of sin's experience. "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

The Christian who accepts the doctrine of the crucified and risen Christ may look back upon his life, and let both memory and conscience faithfully record each proof of weakness, folly, sin or shame through which the unwilling heart is forced to trace the tests and trials it has met; and out of every downfall the penitent believer can lift a monument of praise, and out of every reminiscence of infirmity or weakness bring forth a psalm of faith and hope—yes, even out of every sin for which tears of contrition have fallen he can lift up the promise of the Saviour's grace. For each and all of these sad proofs of inherited weakness, and native depravity, and personal indulgence and disobedience, are just so many demonstrations and assurances of purity and bliss and godlikeness at last. Each Christian life has borne the image of the earthy; there can be no manner of doubt about that. And this very certainty, this deep bedrock of experience, affords the apostle standing room for his assertion. You shall bear the image of the heavenly. It is God's word, not man's. It is the inspired statement of a holy apostle of our Lord, who spake as he was moved by the Holy Ghost, being inbreathed of God. And, being thus inspired, it is profitable for doctrine and instruction, and for an assured hope. The somberness of sad experience affords a foil for the radiance of glory with which the light of love divine brightens and gladdens the Christian's hope. And the sunset of a believer's life is like the dawn of a day of beauty such as earth never saw.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

ONWARD, CHRISTIAN SOLDIERS

By Sabine Baring-Gould.

[Sabine Baring-Gould (Exeter, England, Jan. 28, 1834), an English clergyman, novelist, antiquarian and the writer of a number of well-known hymns, was a Cambridge man, graduating from Clare College in 1856. Besides his works on mediæval lore his name is familiar to the English people as the author of "Richard Cable," "John Herring" and other novels. In the comparatively short time since this hymn was written, in 1865, it has become world-famous, and to-day it would rank, in frequency of use, with the greatest of the hymns. Its popularity is probably due, in part, to the fact that it is one of the few martial songs suitable to church worship; also to its expression of religious unity, and, in no small degree, to the ringing tune which Sir Arthur Sullivan composed for it in 1872. It is a favorite with all congregations, especially with young people. English soldiers often sing it on the march, whole regiments taking up the strains, and it has been translated into many foreign tongues.]

Onward, Christian soldiers,
Marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus,
Going on before.
Christ, the royal Master,
Leads against the foe;
Forward into battle,
See, his banners go.

Refrain—
Onward, Christian soldiers,
Marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus,
Going on before.

Like a mighty army,
Moves the church of God;
Brothers, we are treading,
Where the saints have trod;
We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity.

Crowns and thrones may perish,
Kingdoms rise and wane,
But the church of Jesus
Constant will remain;
Gates of hell can never
'Gainst that church prevail;
We have Christ's own promise,
And that cannot fail.

Onward, then, ye people,
Join our happy throng,
Blend with ours your voices
In the triumph song;
Glory, laud, and honor,
Unto Christ the King;
This through countless ages,
Men and angels sing.

Unexpected Prize.

With a deftness acquired by long and patient practice the pickpocket extracted an old but well-filled purse from the hip pocket of the unsuspecting old gentleman with the beaming countenance against whom he had carelessly brushed when leaving the Tube station, and on reaching a secluded place he opened it.

The contents had been wrapped with great care in numerous thicknesses of blank paper. Removing the wrappings one by one he found in the center of the package a card with this inscription on it:

Young man, give up your career of crime! Nothing in it!—Tit Bits.

A NURSE'S EXPERIENCE

A nurse has to know just what to do for common ailments, and those who suffer backache, languor and other common signs of kidney trouble, should heed the example of Mrs. Judson Ellis, 414 Francis St., Jackson, Mich., known for many years prior to her marriage as "Nurse Baker."

"My back ached a good deal and was lame and weak, so that I had difficulty in straightening up or turning in bed," said she. "Doan's Kidney Pills benefited me wonderfully, and since using them I have been able to do my own work again."

Teaching Cyama to Shoot.

"Twenty-five years ago I was an experienced rifle shot," writes Horace Fletcher in the World's Work, "and could hit a moving object every time. The 22-caliber rifle and machine-made cartridge, which came into general use in the '70s, made extensive rifle practice possible. I wrote and published at the time a pamphlet on how to shoot with a rifle. It happened that copies of the pamphlet reached Japan, where I passed some time soon after. Japan had just begun to make a military organization on the most modern lines and Marquis Oyama was minister of war. He invited me to visit him in his home at Tokyo and showed great interest in the method of learning to shoot at a moving object with a rifle. He had already seen the pamphlet.

"I had a number of American rifles and ample ammunition with me in Japan and Marquis Oyama and the then Colonel Murata (inventor of the Japanese military rifle) joined me several afternoons at target practice. They entered enthusiastically into the spirit, Oyama in particular showing the enthusiasm of a boy. I shall never forget his keen joy the first time he hit a moving object with a bullet. It was a teapot thrown in the air, I believe, and when it came down in the dust and pieces he capered about and screamed in his delight like an excited schoolboy.

Complete Returns.

"Harold," she said, "I asked you to return the lock of my hair I foolishly gave you once. By mistake you have brought back two. One of them is a pale blonde. Who gave you that?"

"You did, Maudie," sighed Harold. "They are both yours."—Chicago Tribune.

A BANKER'S NERVE

Broken by Coffee and Restored by Postum.

A banker needs perfect control of the nerves and a clear, quick, accurate brain. A prominent banker of Chattanooga tells how he keeps himself in condition:

"Up to 17 years of age I was not allowed to drink coffee, but as soon as I got out into the world I began to use it and grew very fond of it. For some years I noticed no bad effects from its use, but in time it began to affect me unfavorably. My hands trembled, the muscles of my face twitched, my mental processes seemed slow and in other ways my system got out of order. These conditions grew so bad at last that I had to give up coffee altogether.

"My attention having been drawn to Postum, I began its use on leaving off the coffee, and it gives me pleasure to testify to its value. I find it a delicious beverage; like it just as well as I did coffee, and during the year that I have used Postum I have been free from the distressing symptoms that accompanied the use of coffee. The nervousness has entirely disappeared, and and I am as steady of hand as a boy of 25, though I am more than 93 years old. I owe all this to Postum." "There's a Reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. Grocers sell.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The wine storage houses in France are now using cement tanks lined with glass instead of old wooden ones. The glass lining is used for two reasons—the acids in the liquor decompose the cement, while the cement absorbs the bouquet of the wine. A tank in Havre has a capacity of 290,000 gallons.

Milton Washburn is having trouble with his well, which at first was giving a big supply of water. It began to blow a regular hurricane of wind up the hole at first, then it changed and blew down, after which the water gave out. Mr. Washburn will go down another hundred feet if necessary to get a sufficient supply of water.—Condon (Ore.) Times.

As a South Jersey county physician was driving through a village he saw a man amusing a crowd with the antics of his trick dog. The doctor pulled up and said: "My dear man, how do you manage to train your dog in that way? I can't teach mine a single trick." The man looked up, with a simple rustic look, and replied: "Well, you see, it's this way; you have to know more'n the dog, or you can't learn him nothin'."

In Halmstad, Sweden, Pontas Holmstrom is about to start a spinning mill for making yarn out of paper. Such mills already exist in Germany and France. So far, the manufacture of rugs and carpets seems to be the best practical use of this new paper yarn. It is stated that people in Sweden, especially in the province of Ostergotland, are already making carpets with paper welt. Narrow rolls of paper tape are used, but this, of course, is not spun.

There was a Democratic Congressman who failed to show up for a vote on the tariff bill. He was not paired, and his absence was unaccountable. He leisurely strolled into the House the next week and was at once hauled over the coals for his dereliction. "Why, I couldn't come," said he; "my health was givin' way. I had three doctors t'umpin' me chist at wanst, and they united in sayin' that me condition was alarmin', and that me whole system was reekin' with insomnia."

The tiresome vibratory effect so often seen when bioscope or kimetograph pictures are thrown on the screen is not due to the passage of the film itself across the front of the lantern, but to the shutter, which cuts off the light at rapidly repeated intervals during the motion of the film. By simply increasing the frequency of interposition of this shutter from fourteen to fifty-six times a second, that is, by using a motor working at four times the usual speed, this painful vibratory sensation is completely suppressed.

This is one of the many queer stories from Italy: A remarkable case attributed to telepathy is reported from Capua. A woman woke a few nights ago in a state of delirium. Calling together her friends and neighbors, she told them she had just seen an apparition of her husband, who, for two years had been absent in New York. He appeared to her to be lying in a hospital with one hand covering his breast, and he told her that he had been gravely wounded. The day after she received a cablegram from America informing her that her husband was dying, having been stabbed by an emissary of the Black Hand.

Mrs. Emma Garrett Boyd, of Atlanta, Ga., has been active in getting signatures to the petition from the women of Georgia to the legislature demanding better education for the children of the State. More than five thousand names have been secured to the petition, and the leading workers will march with it into the hall of the House of Representatives. The signers also demand that the children of Georgia be relieved from work in the factories. The petition has the solid support of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and every other body of representative Georgia women.

ANOTHER WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Gardiner, Maine.—"I have been a great sufferer from organic troubles and a severe female weakness. The doctor said I would have to go to the hospital for an operation, but I could not bear to think of it. I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash—and was entirely cured after three months' use of them."—Mrs. S. A. WILLIAMS, R. F. D. No. 14, Box 39, Gardiner, Me.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made exclusively from roots and herbs, a fair trial.

This famous medicine for women has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and renewer of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cures female ills, and creates radiant, buoyant female health. If you are ill, for your own sake as well as those you love, give it a trial.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Defrauded the Government.

Franking privileges were greatly abused in days gone by. The government employe's friends shared in his opportunities. In a letter written by Wordsworth in 1815 the poet said: "By means of a friend in London I can have my letters free. His name is Lamb, and if you add an 'e' to his name he will not open the letters. Direct as below without anything further—'Mr. Lambe, India House, London.'" Coleridge, too, saw that a postage saved was a postage gained, and made use of the Mr. Lamb of the India House—Charles Lamb.

Registration Dates, Oct. 4 to 23, inclusive.

The General Land Office at Washington has designated Le Beau and Aberdeen, So. Dak., on the Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. as registration points.

Le Beau, which is the Missouri River terminus of the Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R., is located on the Missouri River, opposite the Reservation, and is the nearest railroad station to three-fifths of the land.

Aberdeen, the other registration point, is the chief city in northern South Dakota.

There will be about 14,000 quarter sections allotted to settlers. The land lays well for farming over most of the reservation. The soil is a light loam and is very fertile. It is similar to that in the counties east of the River, where the land sells from $25.00 to $30.00 per acre. Lignite coal is found over a great part of the reservation.

Who May Secure a Homestead—Under the homestead laws of the United States, any person, male or female who is not the owner of more than 160 acres of land in any state or territory, who is a native born citizen of the United States, or has been naturalized, or declared his intention to become a naturalized citizen of the United States (i. e., one who has taken out his first papers of citizenship), who is over the age of 21 years or the head of a family, may make a homestead entry of not exceeding 160 acres of any of the unoccupied lands of the United States.

Have Heat Brought To You

When your bed-room, bath-room or dining room is chilly, you may have heat brought to you in just the degree you desire. It is easy when you have a

PERFECTION Oil Heater

(Equipped with Smokeless Device)

available. Place the heater where the cold is most annoying, strike a match.

No fuss—no flurry—no smell—and, above all, no smoke, even though you turn the wick as high as it will go.

The temperature runs up quickly. In ten minutes the average sized room glows with cheer and comfort that genial heat brings—the heat that is smokeless and odorless.

Automatic Smokeless Device

which automatically locks and absolutely prevents smoke, by keeping the wick out of the smoke zone, is on the Perfection only.

The solid brass font holds four quarts, which gives a full-head flame for nine hours.

Flame burns from side of wick instead of from the top. The brass wick carrier does not rust and clog the wick. Damper top, cool handle.

BABY'S WATERY ECZEMA

Itched and Scratched Until Blood Ran—$50 Spent on Useless Treatments—Disease Seemed Incurable—Cured by Cuticura for $1.50.

"When my little boy was two and a half months old he broke out on both cheeks with eczema. It was the itchy, watery kind and we had to keep his little hands wrapped up all the time, and if he would happen to get them uncovered he would claw his face till the blood streamed down on his clothing. We called in a physician at once, but he gave an ointment which was so severe that my babe would scream when it was put on. We changed doctors and medicines until we had spent fifty dollars or more and baby was getting worse. I was so worn out watching and caring for him night and day that I almost felt sure the disease was incurable. But finally reading of the good results of the Cuticura Remedies, I determined to try them. I can truthfully say I was more than surprised, for I bought only a dollar and a half's worth of the Cuticura Remedies (Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills), and they did more good than all my doctors' medicines I had tried, and in fact entirely cured him. His face is perfectly clear of the least spot or scar of anything. Mrs. W. M. Comerer, Burnt Cabins, Pa., Sept. 15, 1908."

An Infallible Record.

A way of deciding dates of certain important events is suggested by the following anecdote from Lippincott's. The parents of a college son were disputing as to the date of their last letter to their "hopeful," from whom, somewhat to the distress of the mother, they had not heard for some time.

"Are you sure, Thomas," asked the mother, unconvinced, "that it was on the 12th that you last wrote to Dick?"

"Absolutely!" was the father's decisive response. "I looked it up in my check book this morning."

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten-fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Aids Nature

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "just as good," It is probably better FOR HIM—it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not the profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, In Plain English; or, Medicine Simplified, 1008 pages, over 700 illustrations, newly revised up-to-date Edition, paper-bound, sent for 21 one-cent stamps, to cover cost of mailing only. Cloth-bound, 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

They Can't Budge It

No amount of force or persuasion on the part of the imitators is great enough to even budge it from its present firm hold on the minds of the people. This has been emphatically demonstrated several times during the past few years. Imitations have come and gone, but Kellogg's goes on with an ever increasing demand. Dell Coburn's horse slipped its bridle Sunday evening during church services and got loose, completely demolishing the buggy. It was lucky that no other damages were done to other rigs.

Miss Maud Baker of Concord, is working for Mr. Pfaummer. Girls that will work out are getting scarce, but I say that a young gentleman should doff their hats to a young lady that is capable and willing to accomodate people in times of need. What say you.

Mrs. Henry Smurr and family of Mooresville, J. M. Dermott and wife, Olen Dermott and wife, Wm. Maxwell and family, J. M. Milliman, Clifford and Fanny Milliman, Eliza Kinsey and lady friend, Miss Mayola Pepple, were pleasantly entertained at the home of Mrs. Cordelia Alton, Sunday.

The neighbors turned out last Thursday and moved Uncle Dave Andress's goods to Hicksville. The community feel sorry to see them leave. He has been a resident of this place or near where he lived almost 50 years and has been a great help to the church and to all those that needed help. If a wood bee was needed Uncle Dave was the one to start it a going, and other kind deeds that will now be forgotten. His many friends here wish him and his good wife much happiness in their new home in Hicksville.

Womanly Wisdom

When roasting a turkey stuff the brest with pared sweet potatoes. They get a fine flavor from the juices.

Take time to put a quietus upon rattling windows and banging shutters. They are not tranquilizing winter evening sounds.

Have an old leather mitten to slip on your hand while scouring the top of the stove and you will not be troubled with the black.

When a cake recipe calls for two eggs and eggs are scarce and high, use one egg and sift one tablespoonful of cornstarch with the flour.

Although all linen is sweeter for being dried in the air, if a time comes when you need to do it up immediately, try my emergency plan: Wash the linen as usual, then dip it in hot water and shake it well; fold as well as possible and run it through the wringer; then wrap it in a dry, white cloth, and iron at once wituout starching.

Hen feathers answer well for pillows, cushions, or even for beds, if the sharp quill ends are removed. The easiest way to do this, after the chicken is killed, before picking it, clip off with a pair of sharp scissors all the desirable portion of the feathers. This is quickly done and gives a pan of fluffy dry ends. The fowl may then be scalded and picked, as usual.

You may sometimes think that mother is a little old-fashioned, but after a while you will acknowledge that she is the best advisor you ever had.

When you must go out in the rain wrap your ankles above the shop tops in paper, draw the stockings up over it and the dampness will not penetrate it.

Do not throw away your leaky rubber hot water-bags. Get some clean sand, heat it in a tin pan and pour into the bag by means of a funnel. The sand keeps its heat as well as water.

Just a little nick out of the enamel of a tooth made by cracking a nut in mouth, may spoil the tooth forever. When you have nuts to crack use a hammer or nutcracker and save the teeth.

Mrs. Elsie Shuff and son Harold of Garrett are visiting Hillery Shuff and family this week. Harold is yet unable to walk but is recovering nicely from an attack of brain fever.

Hat full of Coal lasts all night in Cole's Hot Blast

Your fire is never out!

A hat full of coal in a Cole's Hot Blast burns all night, and in the morning instead of building the fire, shivering in a chilled room and waiting for the fire to heat up, you open a draft only.

And there is fuel enough left to warm up nicely.

We guarantee a saving in fuel of a third. This is a conservative guarantee. You really save one-half to 60% of your winter's fuel bill by using this stove.

Let us show you this remarkable heater—this clean stove—this continuous fire holder—this expense cutter—this beauty.

Cole's Hot Blast $12 Up

Take note that this heater burns soft coal, hard coal, wood, slack, lignite or coke—and we guarantee it against any heater, size for size, at twice or three times its price.

Ours is the Original Cole's Hot Blast, with the name Cole's on the feed door.

Even Heat Day and Night — Fire Never Out.

Letter from the South

The following is a letter from M. T. Bishop and wife of Spring City, Tenn

After an uneventful trip we reached this place, a very nice city of about 1100 people of two colors. The city is in the Cumberland range of mountains and has some very nice scenery of rocks and gorges. The famous Rhea Springs are near here, whose waters will heal all stomach and kidney trouble, they say. I am drinking a gallon every day and am feeling very well although I do not think this place is quite suited for asthma, but has helped some already. Think we will go further south in a few weeks. The weather is fine here, quite warm in day time and cool at night. Wife and I have a room here at the hotel and board ourselves most of the time.

There is a saw mill here that gets its logs away up in the mountains. Wednesday afternoon, wife and I got on a flat car and took a wild ride, four miles up the gulch, under and around and over all kinds of big rocks and seen them load logs. They have an engine there and they take wire ropes and chains away up the mountain and gets hold of four logs and bring them down the side of the mountain a cracking, cannot describe it but was a great sight. Regards to all.

Yours
M. T. Bishop.

After which the hostess surprised the ladies by serving a palatable two course luncheon consisting of bread and butter sandwiches, roast wild duck, pickles, coffee, apricots and cake. The ladies thoroughly enjoyed the menu, especially the wild duck which was the result of Mr. Milliman's hunt at Cold Springs.

Local Option Petitions

(Auburn Dispatch)

The local option petitions were filed with Auditor Shook late Saturday afternoon—a voluminous document with 2,617 names of voters over the county, almost twice the required twenty percent. Union and Keyser townships were the last to report to Dr. C. S. Stewart, secretary of the county option league. Union had 444 names or thirty-five percent of the voters and Keyser had 282 or twenty-one percent.

In this county at the last election there were 6,914 votes cast for secretary of state. In order to petition for a county local option election it is necessary to have at least twenty per cent of such a vote which in this county would mean 1,383 names. But far more than that many have been secured. The officers of the league instructed the workers in the various townships to aim at forty per cent inasmuch as the more names secured the better showing it would make. In some places the per cent has run as high as sixty-eight and forty to fifty not uncommon.

Below is given the total vote cast in the respective townships at the last election, the number of names secured and approximately the per cent of the total:

	Vote	Names	%
Troy	132	80	60
Franklin	318	131	41
Smithfield	377	149	41
Fairfield	334	134	40

A Million Dollars Back Of
Cole's Hot Blast Guarantee

See what the makers—the Cole Manufacturing Co. of Chicago—have written us. Pretty strong from a million dollar concern selling 60,000 of this one stove a year—isn't it? Read it. Remember the Original sold here only:

GUARANTEE

"You are authorized to sell the Original Cole's Hot Blast Heater this year on the most rigid guarantee ever made by any stove manufacturer. Our guarantee to every customer of ours is—

"1—A saving of one-third in fuel over any lower draft stove of the same size, with soft coal, black or lignite.

"2—That Cole's Hot Blast will use less hard coal for heating a given space than any base burner made with same size fire pot.

"3—That the room can be heated from one to two hours each morning with the soft coal or hard coal put in the stove the evening before.

"4—That the stove will hold fire with soft coal from Saturday night until Monday morning.

"5—A uniform heat day and night with soft coal, hard coal or lignite.

"6—That every stove will remain absolutely air-tight as long as used.

"7—That the feed-door is and will remain smoke and dust-proof.

"All we ask is that the stove shall be operated according to directions and set up with a good flue.

"(Signed) COLE MANUFACTURING CO., (Makers of the Original Patented Hot Blast Stove)."

Woman Passenger in Aeroplane.

With her skirts tied tightly about her ankles to keep them from fluttering in the breeze, Mrs. Van Deman, wife of Capt. De Ralph C. Van Deman, Twenty-first Infantry, U. S. A., occupied the passenger's seat beside Wilbur Wright when he ascended in the government's aeroplane at College Park, Md. For four minutes she experienced the sensation of soaring in the air sometimes as high as sixty feet above the ground. This was the first time a woman has made an ascension in a heavier than air machine in the United States, the Wright brothers having resisted a multitude of feminine importunities for aerial excursions.

Million for Improvements.

President W. C. Brown, of the New York Central & Hudson River railroad, has announced that the management has entered upon a campaign of extraordinary expenditures to meet extraordinary traffic demands. The company had placed contracts in the last few days, he said, for $25,000,000 worth of new locomotives, passenger and freight cars, and intends to spend $60,000,000 more, $85,000,000 in all, in reducing grades, straightening curves and laying new rails, exclusive of $50,000 for terminal improvements in New York City.

Muncie Doctor Guilty of Murder.

Dr. Nelson B. Ross, who shot and killed Daniel Linder, a conductor on the Muncie & Portland traction line, last August, following a quarrel over an excess fare of ten cents, was found guilty of murder in the second degree by a jury in Muncie, Ind. The verdict carries with it life imprisonment. Ross' attorneys asked the court to defer passing sentence until they could confer as to their course. Ross then was led back to jail. He told one of his guards that he wished he was dead.

A Disastrous Flood in Mexico.

An estimated loss of five millions of pesos, including crops of corn, beans and other grain, fruit and fine hardwoods, two lives known to be lost and many others, it is feared, sacrificed in the floods, hundreds of homes in country and town washed away and thousands of heads of cattle drowned are the known results of the disastrous cloudburst and storm that broke over the state of Tabasco, in Mexico.

Burned Herself to Death.

Mrs. David Summitt, of Stinesville, Ind., saturated her clothing with coal oil, set fire to it and was burned to death. Her daughter returning home found her body. No visible circumstance indicated that the woman's death was other than suicide. She had been in ill health for several days.

$1,000 Reward for Dynamiters.

Mayor Bookwalter has returned to Indianapolis from Chicago, and announced that he would ask the City Council to offer $1,000 reward for the arrest of the dynamiters that wrecked several buildings last week. He ordered the police department to exert every effort in the investigation.

Preacher Was Too Much Married.

Rev. Frederick H. Ward, pastor of the Baptist church at Freewater, Ore., pleaded guilty of bigamy and was sentenced to five years in the Washington penitentiary. Ward admitted having wives in North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky besides the one he recently married in Oregon.

Woman School Principal Dead.

Mrs. Florence Markley, aged 48 years, principal of the Miami school at Wabash, Ind., for twenty-four years, is dead. She obtained a teacher's license when only 12 years old. Her body will be buried at Muncie, where she was born.

Thirty-Four Lives Lost at Sea.

Thirty-four lives were lost in the wreck of the Donaldson line steamer Hestia, which went ashore on the Old Proprietor ledge off Seal Cove, Grand Manan, Maine. Four of those lost were boys. Only six persons were saved.

THRONGS GREET TAFT ON MISSISSIPPI TRIP

Thousands Travel All Night to See the President at Cape Girardeau, Mo.

WELCOME BY OTHER TOWNS

Nation's Head Stirs East St. Louisans by Waterway Talk— Lays Federal Building Cornerstone.

President Taft stepped from his flagship the Oleander as it docked at Cape Girardeau, Mo., at 6 o'clock Tuesday morning. That city, the first stop on the trip from St. Louis by boat to New Orleans, greeted the President with prolonged cheers. Thousands of country people arrived during the night by rail and wagon. While the levee was thronged, the greatest crowd was at the State normal school, one mile from the city, where President Taft was driven in an automobile. In the natural amphitheater the chief executive was introduced to the citizens of southeast Missouri by Congressman C. C. Crow of the 14th Missouri district. Mayor M. E. Leming presided at the meeting, one of the features of which was the planting of a tree. The chill October morning air reverberated with cheers when a gold badge was pinned on the lapel of the President's overcoat. The badge was a gift of the citizens. Because the schedule called for only an hour's stop, the President's address was brief. At 7 o'clock the Presidential flotilla departed for Cairo.

There was little incident to the trip down the river Monday night. Throughout the night a cheer would occasionally come from one bank of the river or the other as the President's boat, the Oleander, passed. Bonfires lighted the river at several places.

What with his strenuous day in St. Louis Monday and his strained throat President Taft was completely tired out, and an hour after the boats left the city he sent word to the governors' boat, the St. Paul, that he would nave to be excused from attending the banquet arranged for him and them until later in the trip.

Elaborate plans for the feast had to be changed in a few minutes and there was much hurrying and confusion. The viands intended for the banquet were put back in the refrigerators and the governors were given a frugal repast. Not the least amusing feature of the incident was the frantic efforts of the newspaper men to send out "kills" on their elaborately detailed stories of the banquet including several of the governors' speeches. They begged in vain to get ashore at some telegraph station, then called loudly to people on the bank that the President was ill, hoping that in this way a warning would get to their offices. All devices were in vain, however, and the stories of the dinner had to stand.

The proposed deep waterway from Chicago to the gulf received strong indorsement in East St. Louis, Ill., Monday afternoon in speeches by President Taft, Vice President Sherman, Governor Deneen and Speaker Cannon. Governor Deneen told 40,000 Illinois citizens that it is his purpose to call the Illinois legislature into session within five weeks for the specific purpose of legally initiating the work of starting the dirt to flying on the second stretch of the lakes to the gulf channel. While in East St. Louis President Taft laid the corner stone of the new Federal building there, the oration of the occasion being delivered by Vice President Sherman. Besides the President, the Vice President and the Speaker of the House there were among those present the solid delegation from Illinois in the House of Representatives. Senator Lorimer and a dozen other United States Senators, Gov. Deneen, Lieut.-Gov. Oglesby, Secretary of State Rose, State Treasurer Russell and two-thirds of the members of the Illinois legislature. The Justices of the Illinois Supreme Court, Mayor Kreismann of St. Louis and a committee representing the St. Louis business interests were also on the stage.

FIENDS SET BOY AFIRE.

Horrible Act of Two North Dakota Men Ascribed to Liquor Fight.

Citizens passing by Aneta Park in the middle of Aneta, N. D., the other night stared transfixed at a flaming figure running through the streets, trailed by sheets of fire, out of which issued the horrifying shrieks of a burning boy, Kenneth, the 12-year-old son of Simon McKenzie, a butcher, leader of the reform association there, while delivering meat for his father, had been met in the park by two men who hurled him to the ground, poured oil from his own lantern over him, and ignited it. Passersby bore him to the ground and quenched the fire. The child had been probably fatally burned and was rushed to the St. John's hospital at Fargo. On account of the prominence of Simon McKenzie in the fight being waged against the illegal liquor element, the deed is ascribed to the hatred and threats of that class against him.

Assassins Shoot Italian Second Time—Rouses Police.

Fifty arrests were made by the Chicago police in efforts to clear up the shooting of Salvatore Pinello, who was followed to Chicago from a hospital in Streator, Ill., where he had lain three months after being shot by agents of the Black Hand, and was shot a second time in Chicago. Clews in possession of detectives were expected to lead to the capture of Salvatore and Stefano Uttida, brothers, who were accused of the crime by Pinello. Pinello was wounded the second time with a shotgun. Physicians at the hospital, to which he was taken, held but little hope for his recovery. His body was full of shot. The shooting of Pinello was the sixth charged to the Black Hand society within a year. Pinello told the police that he came to this country three years ago from Italy and went to Streator, where he was a section hand for the Santa Fe Railroad. The sufferer had not been in the town long when the Uttida brothers, who were in Chicago, began to write him threatening letters demanding money. "We will tell the police that you are a member of the Black Hand society unless money is sent us," was written in one letter. The threats continued and Pinello became desperate. He threatened to call on the police to arrest the men annoying him. The following day he was shot near his home.

SCORE DIE AS SHIP GROUNDS.

Hestia, Glasgow to Baltimore, Goes Down in Bay of Fundy—6 Saved.

The North Atlantic Ocean's annual toll of lives and vessels received the first tithe of the winter season from its tributary, the Bay of Fundy, Tuesday in the loss of at least a score of lives and the destruction on a shoal, inside of Old Proprietors' Ledge, off Seal Cove, Grand Manan, of the Donaldson Line steamer Hestia, bound from Glasgow for St. John and Baltimore.

Of nearly two score persons aboard the steamer when she piled up on the shoal at 1 a. m. Tuesday, only six are positively known to have been saved. They were forced to cling to the wreck, shifting their precarious positions often as the steamer was tossed by the great seas. Those known to be saved are Third Mate Stewart, Second Engineer Morgan and Seamen Keen, McKenzie, Smith and McVicker.

J. M. BARRIE WANTS WIFE BACK

Writer Offering All Sorts of Inducements for Her to Rewed.

J. M. Barrie, the English novelist, who divorced his wife within a week, now wants her back again. He does not want to marry Pauline Chase, his beautiful young ward, he has declared. He loves his wife; he is willing—despite proofs at court of her guilt—to have her come back to him. And he is offering her all sorts of inducements to return.

All England is literally astounded by the sudden change in the affairs of its most popular playwright and author. For days, it has become known, Barrie has been writing letters to his wife (she was Mary Ansell, an actress), humbling himself, begging her pardon for having instituted the suit, forgiving her misdemeanors and absolutely begging her to wed him again. He has offered to settle $200,000 on her in a lump sum if she will again be his wife. Mrs. Barrie thus far has been altogether unresponsive.

SPANISH CABINET RESIGNS.

Moret Said to Have Accepted Premiership at King's Behest.

Premier Antonio Maura and every member of his Conservative Cabinet resigned in Madrid Thursday. King Alfonso accepted their resignations. After a long consultation with the King, Signor Moret, the Liberal leader, formed a Cabinet in which he is at once Premier and Interior Minister. The new Ministers, who took the oath of office at once, are:

Premier and Interior Minister—Moret y Prendergast.
Foreign Affairs—Perez Caballero.
Finance—Senor Alvaradao.
War—Lieutenant General de Luque.
Marine—Rear Admiral Concas.
Public Works—Senor Gasset.
Public Instruction—Senor Barroso.
Justice—Martinez del Campo.

When the president of the House of Representatives announced that the Maura Cabinet had resigned, there was such an uproar he had to adjourn the session.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The weekly review of Chicago trade compiled by R. G. Dun & Co. says: Heavy payments through the banks, smaller mercantile defaults and a broader demand for money reflect encouraging conditions in fall activities. Further indications of widening enterprise in the leading industries strengthen the position in iron and steel. Announcements include costly railroad terminals and important additions to factories at South Chicago and Gary. The approach of winter imparts more urging forward of building operations, but new permits aggregate large totals and there is yet enormous absorption of materials, price of which stand above the average of last spring.

Live stock receipts improve over recent totals, and there are also substantial gains in the supplies of hides, leather, wool, lumber and minor metals. Holiday goods are in excellent request, while the mail and road orders remain satisfactory for forwardings of textiles, footwear, furniture and food products. Retail trade here and at the interior shows more briskness, stimulated by lower temperatures, and the depletion of stocks is gratifying in heavy apparel and other seasonable necessaries.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number fourteen, against thirty-six last week, eighteen in 1908 and twenty-eight in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number three, against ten last week, five in 1908 and six in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Trade and industrial developments are largely favorable. Continued cool weather furnishes a marked stimulus to demand for heavy wearing apparel—dry goods, clothing and shoes—and also benefits demand for hardware, groceries, lumber and building materials at retail in most markets. Demand for coal has also been perceptibly quickened, both for steam sizes and for household supplies. After a long spell of dullness the liquor trades also display more life, which may be variously attributed to weather influences or to renewal of consumption made possible by improved pay rolls in general industry. Jobbing trade is good for the season.

Business failures for the week ending with Oct. 21 in the United States were 244, against 220 last week, 231 in the like week of 1908, 220 in 1907, 184 in 1906 and 178 in 1905. Business failures in Canada for the week ending with Thursday number 30, as against 39 last week and 31 in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XIV.—(Continued.)

Within the house the scared servants were clearing away the uneaten dishes from the dining-room table, and the doctor was coming downstairs out of Agatha's bedroom. Rupert could not see her. She was in a raging delirium, and knew nobody.

Remorse and penitence overwhelmed felt that if she were to die, her death would be upon his head, and yet he knew that in the frightful shock and chaos of the moment when his senses returned to him, he had been quite irresponsible for the words that had come rushing in a torrent from his lips. Bye-and-bye Louise came downstairs and sat with him, and tried to comfort him. She was distracted, poor soul, by the calamity which had fallen upon the two creatures she loved best on earth.

"You had better go back to London," she said to him at last, "you can do no good to my poor girl. If she dies—I think it would be a merciful thing."

"What am I to do about the woman I love—whom I have deserted all these months?" he cried, brokenly.

"You cannot—in fact, you must not—do anything at all, Rupert. The best thing you can do is to pray that you may never meet her again in this world, and to hope that she has learnt to forget or hate you."

"These are cruelly hard words, Louise."

"My dear, they are the only words that are possible in your case. There are times in life when only cruelty and hardness can save us. You must not, if you can help it, ever see that poor girl again. You are Agatha's husband, and bye-and-bye, if she is spared to us, it is to Agatha that you must devote your life.. Go back to London, my dearest brother, and when the time comes for you to be here, I will send for you."

So Rupert obeyed her, and went.

CHAPTER XV.

"And the new beauty? What is she like?" drawled a languid young guardsman.

"She's perfect!" cried Algy Dessinger with energy. "My dear chap, if you were only to see her!—and you may do so to-night at Lady Clothilda's ball. why, she would awaken even your sluggish nature into an ecstasy! I met her last night. I took her in to dinner at General Bateman's—fancy sitting from soup to strawberries side by side with a goddess! Such luck never came my way before."

"Why, Algy, are you in love!" laughed an older man, who was listening with some amusement to the conversation. It was the man who was so strangely like, and yet unlike, Rupert Carroll.

"I should rather think I was in love!" cried the amorous Dessinger rapturously, "and so would you be, too, if you saw her, my boy!"

"My dear fellow," replied Netherville, with a languid smile, "no more girls for me! I keep out of their way now-a-days."

And then the others remembered that Netherville had been jilted about a year ago by a girl who had married his own cousin, and that he was still supposed to be secretly sorrowing over the event; although he was well known to affect the society of a certain lively and somewhat vapid little widow, who was presumably engaged in pouring balm into his wounded heart.

Presently he rose, and making some excuse, left the rest to the party to finish their smoke and talk without him. When he was gone, the others, who were all younger men, became more at their ease, and the talk went on very much as before.

"Tell us her name, Algy?" persisted Bertie Morris. "Who is she, and what is her history?"

"She is a Miss Garland. She was brought up in the country, and just as she grew up her mother died, and her aunt took her abroad. They have been away for more than a year; on the Riviera first, and afterwards they traveled about in Italy; spending last summer in Switzerland. They came home in May, she and the aunt, and this is positively her very first appearance in London."

"And who is the aunt?"

"Lady Garland is the widow of a Lord Mayor, or something of that kind; a stupid sort of woman, I should say, but I didn't speak to her."

The eighteen months since we saw her last have worked a great change in Irene Garland. She is older, harder, and colder, and yet quite as beautiful as in those old days, long ago, when she dawdled away the dreamy hours amongst the water lilies and surrendered the whole of her fresh young heart to Rupert Carroll.

It is not good for any woman to be deserted and slighted; still less is it good for one who has the power of youth and beauty on her side. It makes a woman's heart grow hard, her judgments on others bitter, her views of life altogether to become distorted and unlovely.

Because one man had treated her badly, Irene was convinced now that all men were unprincipled and dishonorable. It seemed to her that a woman, who had suffered as she had done, had best turn her hand against them all indiscriminately, and that to repay the wrongs she had endured from the cruelty of one, upon the rest of his sex, was only a fair and just retaliation.

Many women have felt this, but all have not the power to act up to it. Now Irene had the power. It was Rupert himself who had once told her so, and no sooner was she fairly launched into the swirling tide of the London season that she found out by experience the truth of his words.

It was easy to smile and look sweet, to talk pleasantly and even cleverly, in order to fascinate the men who crowded about her. It was easy to make them fall in love with her, and then to turn round upon them and laugh, and declare that she had meant nothing at all—upon her word of honor, nothing at all! It was really a most amusing game to play at, and Irene soon learned to play it with extraordinary dexterity.

"It serves them right!" she would say to herself, with a toss of her scornful little chin. "I am very glad I can trample on their hearts; they would think nothing of breaking mine into atoms—if I had any heart left to break—which, fortunately, I have not!"

Yet often and often the poor child would lie awake through hours of the night, her pillow wet with tears, her hands clenched hard together, her heart bursting with the sorrow that she never could quite succeed in cheating away, and in the darkness low moaning words of misery and despair would break from her lips.

"Oh, Rupert!" she would murmur, aloud to herself. "Why did you treat me so? I had rather you had died than have used be so cruelly. Oh, why cannot I forget you!"

But by degrees, as time went on, and the excitements of her daily life increased, these moods of wretchedness became rarer and rarer, and Irene learnt in a measure to enjoy the empty pleasures and distractions that she pursued so eagerly and so heartlessly.

Lady Garland came into Irene's room just as her toilette was completed for Lady Clothilda's ball. She found her niece standing before the long mirror, dressed all but her gloves, surveying her own beautiful image, with a small smile of triumph on her lips. Her ball dress, of the softest and palest rose-tinted crepe de chine, suited her fairness to perfection, two rows of pearls—her mother's only bequest—were clasped about her slender throat; she wore no other ornament. Two large bouquets, one of yellow roses, the other of pink carnations, lay upon the table.

"Irene, I want to talk to you seriously," said Lady Garland, sitting down on the sofa. "Mr. Taunton is in love with you——"

"Is he—poor man!" and Irene shrugged her shoulders carelessly.

"Pray remember that he is exceedingly well off. His mother was an heiress and he has just come in to all her money, and moreover there are only three lives—and they are delicate ones—between himself and an earldom."

"I detest Mr. Taunton; he is ugly and he is offensive to me. I don't want him, and his money, and his earldom one bit."

"You are enough to try the patience of a saint, Irene!" cried Lady Garland, irritably. "You ought to remember that your face is your only fortune, and that it is your duty to me to marry well. Last night you wasted the whole evening in a corner with that young Dessinger! A third son, a beggarly clerk in a public office who will never have a shilling of his own, it's enough to turn one's hair grey!"

"I rather like young Dessinger, Aunt Anna, and I shall meet him again this evening."

"Let me entreat you not to dance too often with him, Irene. Have you not had enough of lovers without any position in life?"

Irene laughed carelessly and hardly. "I do not intend Mr. Dessinger to become my lover, aunt; make your mind quite easy on that score," she answered.

The house in Park Lane was brilliantly lit up. The hall was crowded, the staircase well nigh impassable.

Lady Clothilda smiled and shook hands, and murmured a conventional greeting, with her eye upon the next arrival. Irene entered the ball room. A number of dancing men, who had possibly been waiting for her to arrive, gathered quickly around her, and her card was soon nearly full. With smiles and little jesting words she turned gaily from one to another.

Then suddenly the smiles died away, and the jest rose upon her lips; all the pretty rose tint on her cheeks paled and faded into an ashen grey. For one short moment the room and the lights and dancers all became misty and indistinct.

For not ten yards away, with his back turned towards her, she saw Rupert Carroll's dark head amongst the crowd.

CHAPTER XVI.

Irene had always known that it must happen sooner or later, and though often and often she had schooled herself to bear the meeting when it should come, yet the shock of it to-night found her entirely unprepared. Irene had never known Carroll's station in society, and Lady Garland had often declared with angry energy that he was an impostor altogether, and that he probably belonged to no society whatever. But an unerring instinct told her that her aunt was wrong. Therefore, when she began to go out largely into London society, she had felt convinced that some day or other they would certainly meet in some crowded room.

When, as she apparently caught sight of him to-night, across the backs of the people before her, she was horrified to find how wildly her heart began to beat, and how every pulse in her body tingled and quivered with mingled joy and misery at the sight of him.

Then he turned, but did not look at her, and all at once, oddly enough, it seemed to her as though his face was somewhat altered; it was the face she had seen in the concert room at Monte Carlo, but she was vaguely conscious that it was in some way different from the face of the man who had told her that he loved her, in the punt under the moonlight below the weir. Yet she entertained no doubts as to his identity. She was afraid to look at him, afraid lest their eyes should meet, and he should again ignore her existence. She turned away quickly.

The dancers kept streaming in through the windows, from the lighted ball-room. Some found cosy corners for themselves, and remained to whisper to one another in the cool seclusion, some only walked in and out again. Amongst the latter—whilst the now totally enslaved Dessinger was bending rapturously over Irene's hand, having received a gracious permission to fasten one of the buttons of her glove that had come undone—Irene, over the top of his head, suddenly saw once more the man whom she took for Rupert Carroll. He came in with a lady on his arm—it was the same lady she had seen at Monte Carlo. She had yellow hair and very dark eyes; her voice was gay and a little loud, and there was a false ring of unreality in its tones. Irene fancied that she looked as if she were miserable. When they came out through the long window she looked about her—apparently for a seat, as she said immediately:

"What a bore, they are all taken!"

Her companion answered crossly:

"I told you they would be—but nothing ever satisfies you!"

"Oh, go away and leave me then!" cried the lady, impatiently. "Why do you get me cards for balls if you can't behave kindly to me when I am there?"

And she dragged him back hurriedly into the lighted room. For several moments Irene was silent. What was the meaning of this little scene? Who was this woman to whom he spoke so roughly and disagreeably, and with whom he appeared to be quarreling? She was recalled to the present by Algy Dessinger's conversation, which had been going on all the time, but to which she had paid no attention.

"Of course, I know that I am a fool to tell you so the second time I have ever met you—but if you knew how rare it is in London to meet with anyone whom one longs to know more of! I assure you I have been going out now for five seasons in town, and though I suppose I know pretty nearly every man and women in every drawing-room I go into, I never before met——"

"Do you know so many people?" she inquired eagerly—"then perhaps you can tell me something of some one I want to know about? Do you know a man called—Rupert Carroll?"

"Certainly—used to know him very well once."

"Tell me something about him, Mr. Dessinger."

"Oh, he's an awfully good chap, Netherville's cousin, don't you know. I used to see a lot of him two or three years ago—he was very fond of fishing."

"Yes, yes," she gasped, feverishly.

"Well, as I was saying, he is an awfully good chap, or used to be; he's dreadfully changed now, I hear, but I have hardly seen anything of him at all since his marriage."

"Since—what?"

"Since his marriage. Didn't you know that he was married? He married the winter before last; I am told that it's a very unhappy affair altogether, and that he is perfectly wretched, and certainly I never saw a chap so altered in all my life. Miss Garland! Are you ill?"

Ericsson and the Dreadnoughts.

The naval correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, of London, reminds the world that the great British Dreadnought, which is credited with revolutionizing battleship construction, is a direct descendant of that Monitor of Ericsson's which nearly half a century ago caused a still greater change in the navies of the world. The Monitor, he argues, was the first "all big guns" ship, as well as the first with a revolving turret. "Downing street," said Ericsson, "will hardly view with indifference this latest 'Yankee notion.'" The prophecy was true. After a little delay the British admiralty adopted the American design, and one of the first three turret ships which it built, which were also its first "all big guns" ships, was named the Dreadnought. In the design of that ship may be seen the germ of the Dreadnought of to-day. Between the two there have been many changes and many experiments, but now there is a reversion to the original type, of course, much enlarged and improved.—New York Tribune.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Two children, aged 3 and 9 years, respectively, were tagged at St. Louis to Mrs. Meech at Corydon, and arrived there safe a few days ago.

Simon Walters, 40 years old, living near Urbana, was kicked in the head by a horse and his skull fractured. He was found several hours later lying unconscious where he had fallen. It is feared he was fatally hurt.

An unknown young man was struck and killed by a Big Four train at the station in Terre Haute. He had an interurban ticket to Paris, Ill., and a photograph of a woman. He was about 25 years old, and of good appearance.

The big flour mill in Elkhart owned by the Indiana & Michigan Electric Company and leased by A. H. Burrell and B. D. Morgan was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $50,000. The mill was built in 1868 and had been in continuous operation.

Ray Polston, aged 16 years, was probably fatally injured while assisting William Hart, a contractor, move a house on the J. W. Lawrence farm, northwest of Auburn. He was pinned under a heavy timber for half an hour, and was seriously crushed.

The 5-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Symonds, of Princeton, was fatally scalded when she fell backward into a tub of hot water. The child was only partially dressed, the mother having removed the outer clothing preparatory for the child's bath.

When Fletcher Medearis, of Greensfork, reaches his one hundredth birthday anniversary, on November 16, the event will be celebrated by the gathering of two hundred members of the Medearis family. The centenarian is in good health and is taking much interest in the plans for the celebration.

One of the most important land deals made in this section was closed last week, when the deeds for 115 acres of fine oolitic stone land were transferred to the Ingalls Stone Company by Mrs. Mary S. Dalton, for which she received the sum of $13,500. The land is located near Oolitic, and is underlaid with fine building stone.

Two dogs got among a flock of sheep owned by Abner Whaley, south of Morocco, and in less than an hour killed twenty-five head and maimed others. The barking of the dogs attracted the attention of Ross Lucas, a neighbor, who killed both with a rifle while they were in the act of pulling down a sheep. The dead and maimed sheep were appraised at $125.

A night blooming cereus, owned by Miss Nellie Jonas, of Seymour, has the distinction of blooming in daylight, which, according to persons acquainted with the habits of the plant, is an unusual occurrence. Three buds opened on Wednesday night, which remained in bloom Thursday, when, about noon, two other buds opened, making five flowers on the plant at one time.

William Mosier, of Flora, an employe of a milling company, was instantly killed three miles south of Delphi, when he was run over by a wagon he was driving. Mosier had been drinking, it is said, and tumbled from his seat into the roadway. One of the wheels of the heavy wagon crushed Mosier's skull. School children found the body soon after the accident occurred.

Princeton authorities have been unable to find a trace of the unidentified man who fired at two E. & T. H. freight trains south of there, last week. The first shots were fired at train No. 51, two bullets taking effect in the engine cab. An extra freight was fired on in a similar manner, a few minutes later, and the shots were imbedded in the engine cab and caboose. None was injured.

Mr. and Mrs. Ephraim Pike celebrated their fifty-ninth wedding anniversary at their home in Spiceland with a family dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Pike were married at Greenboro, N. C., October 17, 1850, and came to Henry County in 1852. Since 1892 they have lived there. They have a family of seven living children, three sons and four daughters; sixteen grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren. Mr. Pike is 86 years old. Both have been in feeble health for several months. Mr. Pike has been an apt student of botany and has a wide knowledge of native plants and herbs.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Roudebush celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary at their home in Noblesville with a family dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Roudebush were married in Carroll County, Ohio, October 18, 1849, and moved to Hamilton County about fifty-seven years ago in an ox wagon. They have a family of six living children, four sons and two daughters; twenty-three grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. Roudebush are 80 years old. They are enjoying fairly good health. Mr. Roudebush was a prosperous farmer and stock dealer until he retired twenty-four years ago and moved to Noblesville.

Samuel E. Tilford, for nearly sixty years a resident of Indianapolis, died last week at Anderson. He was a mail clerk on the Central Indiana railroad. Apoplexy caused his death.

Riley, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Rule, and one of the Rule triplets who attracted attention throughout the State because they were named for the Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley, is at the point of death at his parents' home, about six miles north of Flora, with brain fever.

E. L. Martin, the New Carlisle butter maker, who has taken many first and second prizes at Indianapolis and Purdue, has been offered a position by the Government as butter inspector.

Mrs. Roy Hiland, living four miles north of Jamestown, was painfully burned about the hands and arms while rescuing her 3-year-old daughter, whose clothing caught fire. The child was badly burned and her recovery is doubtful.

Corn that had been in the crib twenty years, owned by M. O. Smith, near Morocco, has just been shelled. There was about one hundred bushels. It was cribbed, in the fall of 1889, and each year the crib was filled with the new corn, leaving the old in the bottom. The corn shelled easily, the color was bright and the quality good.

A veterinary surgeon was called by John King, a Brookville liveryman, to administer to the ills of his horses, and either by mistake or misjudgement the veterinarian administered to them heavy doses of arsenic. Of the eleven horses to which the poison was given, seven became sick and up to this time three of the horses have died. Some of the animals are valued at $300 each.

Tony Leongo, aged 24 years, a laborer of Richmond, died at St. John's hospital in Anderson from the effects of a blow inflicted by Francesco Castelluccio, aged 27, of Cincinnati, Ohio. The men, who were working on the Pennsylvania railroad near Anderson, got into a dispute and Castelluccio hit Leongo on the head with a shovel, fracturing his skull. Castelluccio escaped soon after the fight and is still at large.

D. M. Pulver, of Morocco, has just completed fifty-three years as justice of the peace, having held the office continuously since 1856. He is now 80 years old, but in every way he is a well preserved man, and appears younger than most men at 60. Pulver has officiated at four hundred marriages and he is commonly known as the "marrying squire." In point of continuous service he is one of the oldest justices of the peace in Indiana.

The annual fall pilgrimage from Bartholomew and Brown Counties to the corn fields of Illinois is on. During the last week seventy-five young men from Bartholomew County and Brown County started for Illinois to husk corn. The young men make it a regular business to go to Illinois each fall and husk corn. They say they are well paid, and in addition they take the work as a sort of vacation. They will all return when the corn husking season is over.

Bert Young was seriously injured on the farm owned by Clinton Finley, near South Milford. He was assisting John Menely in removing a threshing outfit from him barn. The engine which was pulling the separator was stopped, but the separator had got under such headway that it could not be stopped until it came in contact with the engine. Mr. Young was caught between them and was badly crushed. Three ribs were broken and it is thought internal injuries were inflicted.

Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester M. Williamson, of Peru, now know the folly of depositing their money under the carpet instead of placing it in a bank. For some months they have been secreting part of Mr. Williamson's wages in a small envelope beneath a carpet. While away from their home recently burglars entered the house and stole the money. The carpets in three rooms were torn up before the thieves found what they were looking for. How they got the tip as to where the money was secreted is not known.

After reading an account how the early crowing of a rooster was stopped by attaching a weight to its tail, Heber Kellans, a farm laborer, near Owensville, tried the scheme with success. Spencer discovered that the posture of crowing elevated the tail at a certain angle, and that by attaching a weight too heavy to allow the required elevation, the rooster would not crow. Kellans declares Spencer is substantiated by a practical test of the plan. The rooster that annoyed Kellans by its early crowing does not crow when the weight is fastened to its tail.

Some Columbus people are interesting themselves in the rice lands of Arkansas. Already two syndicates have been formed there to grow rice near Stuttgart, Ark., and many have bought farms to conduct themselves. The Columbus Land Syndicate has 110 acres in rice this year and will begin threshing soon. Cashier Fagan, of the German-American Bank at Stuttgart, estimates that the syndicate will have seventy-five bushels of rice to the acre this season and it will be sold at Stuttgart for $1.06 a bushel. If the crop averages seventy-five bushels the members of the syndicate will have dividends of $17.80 a share.

The City Council of Evansville has passed an anti-din ordinance, making it unlawful for factories to blow their whistles longer than three seconds at a time and oftener than four times a day.

Mrs. Barbara Kneisley, aged 90, is dead at Lowell. She was married in 1836. She leaves seven daughters, four sons, forty-four grandchildren, seventy-one great-grandchildren, and eight great-great-grandchildren. Relatives claim her record is unequaled anywhere.

GENERAL O. O. HOWARD DEAD.

Last of Union Commanders of Civil War Succumbs to Heart Disease.

General Oliver O. Howard, last of the Union commanders of the Civil War, died at his home in Burlington, Vt., Tuesday night. Heart disease was given as the cause of the noted soldier's death. He was 79 years old.

The previous week General Howard was in Ontario delivering his lecture on "Abraham Lincoln." His last public appearance was at London on Sunday night. Monday he returned to his home in Burlington and was apparently in his usual good health. Tuesday night, while sitting in a chair at his home, he was attacked by heart disease and was dead when a physician reached the house.

Including General Howard's services in the Indian wars, he was probably in more engagements than any other officer in the United States army. General Howard, besides having been an able and efficient commanding omcer, who had the friendship and confidence of Lincoln, Grant, Sherman and Sheridan, was known as the religious general. He was known in European army circles as "The Havelock of America."

In 1865 General Howard was appointed head of the Freedman's bureau, various societies having been organized under this name to help the emancipated negro. He established schools of general learning and also Sabbath schools during the nine years he continued at the head of the bureau. He received the degree of LL. D. from no less than four colleges and of late years, since his retirement, has written many books. He was also a writer of magazine articles on military subjects and addressed many religious meetings.

MANY WOMEN SLAIN?

Disclosures Expected as Result of Arrest in Long Island Case.

Admissions made under severe cross-examination by Otto Mueller, an Astoria, L. I., pianomaker, arrested on the ground that he may know something of the strange circumstances of the death of Anna Latter, the young German woman whose skeleton was found at Islip, L. I., are expected by the police to bring to light a tale of wholesale marriage and murder seldom equaled in criminal records.

Mueller was arraigned under the name of Frederick Gebhardt on the formal charge of bigamy, but the police expect to lodge a more serious charge against him. Mrs. Gebhardt informed the authorities that she has lived in terror of her husband for many years and that on the occasion he was overheard while intoxicated to say that she was his eighth wife and that those who preceded her were in their graves.

Another point on which stress is laid by the police is the finding of four notes scribbled by Mueller, in which the writer revealed his intention to disappear. All are dated Oct. 23, the day of the man's arrest, and contain instructions for the disposal of his property. One of the notes is addressed to the Long Island City bank and follows: "Please pay my account to my wife, Anna Gebhardt. I am legally dead." Mueller confessed that he married the Latter girl in February, 1908, but says he deserted her three months later and does not know what became of her.

A box of 32-caliber revolver cartridges was found by the police in a search of the house Mueller occupied at Astoria. A flattened 32-caliber bullet was near the skeleton of the girl.

PASSENGER VANISHES IN LAKE.

Victim of Strange Disappearance on Night Trip to Holland, Mich.

A passenger on the Graham & Morton line steamer Puritan, supposed, because of a card found in his stateroom later, to have been John M. F. Edwin of Wilmette, Ill., disappeared in mid-lake Saturday night while the boat was on its way from Chicago to Holland, Mich. The man's disappearance was not discovered until the vessel landed at Holland. Then the stateroom was searched, and part of the man's clothing and his half-emptied valise were found in the stateroom. No one saw him disappear.

CANNOT MARRY; DIE TOGETHER.

Dead Bodies of Nebraska Couple Found in a Buggy.

"If we can't marry we will die together." These words were scribbled on a sheet of wrapping paper found in the pocket of the coat of Ray Foster, whose dead body was found in a buggy on the road four miles from Clay Center, Neb. On the floor at his feet was the body of Miss Ines Cox, a stenographer. On the seat of the buggy was a revolver, two of the chambers containing empty cartridge shells. A bullet had pierced the heart of each.

Epilepsy, Fits

"My son was cured of a very bad case of epilepsy with Dr. Miles' Nervine."
MRS. D. BAKER, Cleveland, O.

"My little daughter who was afflicted with St. Vitus' Dance is now entirely well after taking Dr. Miles' Nervine only four months."
MRS. C. G. BENNETT,
Alma, Mich.

Epilepsy, Fits, St. Vitus' Dance and Spasms, are all nervous diseases. They have been cured in so many instances with Dr. Miles' Nervine that it is reasonable to conclude that it is almost sure to cure you. With nervous diseases of a severe type, persistent use has almost invariably resulted in a complete cure or lasting benefits, worth many times the cost of the remedy. The best evidence you can get of its merits is to write to those who have used it. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

The Rebekah lodge gave Mrs. Amanda Shaw and husband a reception last Thursday evening, in their hall. A musical program was rendered and Miss Violet Kinsey favored them with a recitation. After the program a luncheon was served consisting of sandwich, coffee and pickles. A good social time was had. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw and two children left for their home at Urbana, Ohio, Monday.

With big crops, fat bank accounts and with prosperity reigning supreme in every country home, it is the duty of every farmer to look around for opportunities whereby his children can gain impressions that will prove beneficial to them through life and if by taking advantage of these, he can, at the same time, secure for himself and his good wife much needed rest and recreation, it would seem that such an opportunity should appeal to him. This opportunity is offered in connection with the International Live Stock Exposition which will be held in Chicago from November 27 to December 10. The champions of the leading shows of the world, in fact, the finest specimens of cattle, horses, sheep and swine that the world produces will here compete for supremacy and final honors Do you know what this means? Can you realize what a liberal education such a collection produced by the world's foremost feeders and breeders means to your boys?

The best brains, the greatest masters of the live stock industry, the foremost live stock specialists will here demonstrate what can be accomplished, and shrewd farmers will begin to think of these things and endeavor to make arrangements so that they can profit by the teachings of this great International Exposition.

The coming show gives promise of being the greatest of this splendid series of events, and the management is planning to offer a program that will far eclipse anything that has ever been offered in the past—delightful music, dashing performances and brilliant evening entertainments, combined with educational opportunities unequaled in the world. Where can a greater combination be found at such a nominal outlay of money. Education entertainment, a pleasure trip and recreation—all in one. Why not plan a pleasant surprise for the folks at home and take advantage of these exceptional opportunities?

Reds Gave Banquet

The M. E. Sunday school had another delightful time on Friday evening when the Reds entertained the Blues. The entertainment was opened by singing and prayer then a talk by the pastor and thanking all that took part and made it possible. It was an evening long to be remembered. While supper was being arranged the children engaged in a guessing contest to see who could guess the eighteen things a little boy had in his pocket. Ray Zimmerman received first prize and Violet Tyndal, the second. The pastor read a paper with many of the names of people of Spencer township to the delight of all, everyone enjoyed it. The decorations were hallowe'en and consisted of pumpkins, squashes, corn, turnips, beets, apples, tomatoes, potatoes and many other vegetables arranged in many shapes and things to the surprise of those that came. Supper was served to one hundred and forty. Oysters, chicken and the good things that go with them. After supper the children entertained us again by apple eating contest. The apple suspended from the ceiling by a string which made it all the more exciting. Mark Tyndall received the reward. On leaving for home everyone pronounced a fine time and thanked the Reds for the way they were entertained. Come again. There is room in our Sunday school for you and you are welcome. Come with us and we will do thee good.

Kills Her Foe of 20 Years.

"The most merciless enemy I had for 20 years," declares Mrs. James Duncan, of Haynesville, Me., "was Dyspepsia. I suffered intensely after eating or drinking and could scarcely sleep. After many remedies had failed and several doctors gave me up. I tried Electric Bitters, which cured me, completely. Now I can eat anything. I am 70 years old and am overjoyed to get my health and strength back again." For Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Kidney Trouble, Lame Back Female Complaints, its unequaled. Only 50c at H. Milliman's.

Building Completed

The fine new hardware of Jack Beams was dedicated last Saturday, and it now presents a most striking appearance. Special prices prevailed during the day and hot coffee and sandwiches were served free of charge. The people commenced to come in early and continued all day. At times it was impossible to move about in the store. Mr. Beams reports an excellent sale during the day and five clerks were kept busy all day long. The new building is a beauty and was built according to the idea of Mr. Beams and we can further say that it would make some stores of the city look out-of-date. The structure is made of cement blocks and the interior is finished up fine. A beautiful steel ceiling adorns the lower room, painted in striking colors. The windows are fitted for displaying goods and to say the least it is the finest building of the kind we know of for some distance around. Drop in and see it.

Leg Broken

Mrs. Renn met with quite an accident while visiting with a Mr. Foote south of here last week. She was accompanied to this place by Mrs. Silas King. In some way she fell from the porch breaking her leg between the knee and hip joint. Arrangements were made for her to be brought home and as there were no one there to care for her, Mrs. King thought it best to take her home with her, at which place she still remains. As Mrs. Renn is an aged lady it will be a hard matter to heal the fractured bone. Dr. Shook is the attending physician.

Heavy Trade in Stock.

Kansas City Stock Yards, Oct. 25, 1909. Trade in stock and feeding cattle was again heavy last week, almost 1000 car loads going to the country, containing more than 30,000 head. Buying was more conservative last week, and the market ranged from steady on the best kinds to 20 cents lower on the common cattle. The total cattle supply was heavy during the week, and in spite of this large movement to the country the hold over at the end of the week was 1200 head greater than at the end of previous week, and was the heaviest of the season for week ends at 9200 head. The run today is 19,000 head, market steady. The general tone of the market on stockers and feeders is not nearly as firm as two weeks ago, for two reasons, first heavy supplies of short fed cattle on the market, together with liberal runs of grass cattle, have put plenty of fleshy steers in the hands of killers, and they do not bid on anything that looks like a feeder, and secondly, the result of the decline in prices of killing cattle in the last two weeks, especially short fed steers, has made the feeding venture so far this season a failure in some cases, and therefore discouraging. On the other hand, in most sections of the corn belt, prospective feeders find there is a big crop of corn to be gotten rid of and they are turning more earnestly in search of cattle to consume it. The Panhandle country and Colorado are both well represented here today, and will be for several weeks ahead, as Colorado is just starting heavy shipments for this season. Best feeders bring $4.90 to $5.25, not taking into account the few lots of choice fleshy steers for a quick feed, which go as high as $6.00, bulk of the feeders $4.20 to $4.80, stockers $3.60 to $4.25, a few common and off color steers down to $2.75, stock cows and heifers $2.60 to $3.75. Prime beef steers sell at $7.50 to $8.50, short fed steers plentiful at $5.25 to $6.50, grass steers $3.75 to $5.25, heavy cows sell at $3.75 to $4.40, grass cows $3.00 to $3.75, bulls $2.75 to $3.75, calves $4.00 to $7.50, quarantine steers $3.25 to $4.60.

PLANTS NEVER FREEZE

Houses Heated by Cole's Hot Blast Never Chill, for the Fire is Never Out.

Users of Cole's Hot Blast are the ones who keep their plants throughout the winter in perfect condition. This same stove is also the cleanest heater ever invented because it is smoke proof, and there is no escaping smoke or soot to blacken up the walls and soil the curtains.

Cole's Hot Blast is guaranteed to be a money saver, is guaranteed to save a third in fuel over any lower draft stove of the same size. We have a letter from the Cole Manufacturing Co. to this effect, so not only do we guarantee the stove, but one of the biggest stove concerns in the world stands behind us to make good the guarantee; so that we can take back the stove if it does not live up to its guarantee in every particular.

Besides this, Cole's Hot Blast burns any kind of fuel, soft coal, lignite, hard coal, wood or cobs. No change of the stove is necessary in any particular to burn any kind of fuel. Don't wait until the season is well on and the cold weather is here before investigating the merits of this remarkable heater.

Note that we have the exclusive agency for the Original Cole's Hot Blast, and that this famous stove cannot be found in any other store here. Full line on display now.

CURED ITCHING HUMOR.

Big, Painful Swellings Broke and Did Not Heal—Suffered Three Years—Tortures Yield to Cuticura.

"Little black swellings were scattered over my face and neck and they would leave little black scars that would itch so I couldn't keep from scratching them. Larger swellings would appear and my clothes would stick to the sores. I went to a doctor, but the trouble only got worse. By this time it was all over my arms and the upper part of my body in swellings as large as a dollar. It was so painful that I could not bear to lie on my back. The second doctor stopped the swellings, but when they broke the places would not heal. I bought a set of the Cuticura Remedies and in less than a week some of the places were nearly well. I continued until I had used three sets, and now I am sound and well. The disease lasted three years. O. L. Wilson, Puryear, Tenn., Feb. 8, 1908."

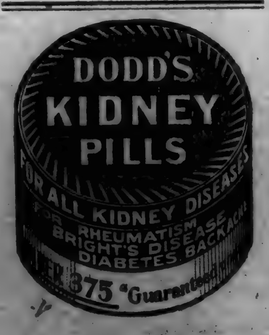
Now she goes to a restaurant to save the trouble in the home. Moreover, there was a time when the hostess prided herself on her own conversational powers and upon her ability to draw out her guests, who were generally chosen with regard to some ability in this direction. Now nobody talks, but somebody sings or plays and the concert or rhetorical entertainment has taken the place of brilliant conversation.



EDITORIALS

Opinions of Great Papers on Important Subjects.

UTILIZING THE SOIL.

AMERICAN farmers are beginning to learn that old methods will not always fit new conditions, and that it is possible largely to increase their profits by intelligent study of scientific agriculture. Through the efforts of the government, aided by various railroads, thousands of farmers throughout the West have acquired a broader knowledge of their industry. Nevertheless much remains to be accomplished before they realize all the possibilities that lie in the soil. Men who, like James J. Hill, feel some solicitude in regard to the future of American farming, may be over-apprehensive. Their warnings, however, are too serious lightly to be set aside.

Experts declare that the United States will contain 200,000,000 people by the middle of the century. In view of the steadily rising price of farm products, this suggests serious question whether agricultural production will keep pace with the increase in the number to be fed. The solution undoubtedly lies in improved farming methods that will give the maximum productivity to every acre of land. As land becomes more scarce the demand for education along this line will steadily increase.

These conditions are responsible for development of the Department of Agriculture from an insignificant beginning to one of the most important and far-reaching departments of the government. The prospects are that it will assume even greater importance during the next twenty years. Some of the problems that accompany our rapid increase in population can be met through no other agency.—Chicago Journal.

ARE WE SPOILING OUR BOYS?

FORMER PRESIDENT ELIOT of Harvard recently spoke most emphatically of the very small percentage of boys coming from the larger, more expensive and fashionable schools who proved satisfactory students. A similar statement has been made by a member of the faculty of Yale. The experience of Princeton is the same. The boys from the high schools carry off honors out of all proportion to their numbers. And the names of the larger fashionable private boarding schools, with some exceptions, are conspicuous by their absence from the list of honors.

In regard to one limited group of families the tendency of many boys with the best chances in life to weaken their will power, by taking steadily in college the line of least resistance, can be measured against the statistics of its results.

The families entered in the "New York Social Register" as residents of that city may reasonably be considered as households whose heads are able and willing to give their boys the best chances in life. In five senior classes at Harvard, Yale and Princeton (not the last five classes) there were 166 sons of those families. At Yale College they formed 5.1 per cent of the total membership of their classes; at Harvard College and Princeton, 2.9 per cent. A comparative test of their records at graduation yields some very striking results. It shows that, as a class, they are far below the average of their fellows in the ability or the willingness to make the most of their opportunities. And the same marked inferiority, as compared with the average student, appears in each of these institutions and in fourteen of the fifteen classes examined. The figures unquestionably indicate an average attitude, a general social drift.—Paul Van Dyke, in Scribner's.

FOREIGN RAILROAD INVESTORS.

PERHAPS one of the most significant indications of the faith that men of large affairs have in the continued prosperity of the country is the extensive borrowings of New York banks in European money markets. It is estimated that the American banks have sold their notes in London and Paris to the extent of $400,000,000. This is remarkable when money is not scarce in New York and the rates of interest continue low.

The most plausible explanation is that this money is for the American railroads which are preparing to make extensive improvements in the near future in order to keep pace with the demands which it is expected the expanding commerce of the country will make upon them. It was Mr. Hill's prediction some time ago that before the railroads would be properly equipped again to do the transportation business of the country hundreds of millions would have to be expended in betterments. Indeed, the traffic of the country is swelling at a rate which threatens again to swamp the transportation facilities, which have not been materially increased since they proved to be so inadequate two years ago.—St. Paul Dispatch.

EASTERN AND WESTERN CITIES.

TWENTY St. Paul municipal officers and Council members, who have just completed a 3,000-mile trip through the East, make some interesting comparisons between Eastern and Western cities regarding different phases of municipal progress. They find, among other things, that the "City Beautiful" idea is more clearly developed and the movement more widespread in the East than in the West, and that the movement to advertise cities is receiving more widespread attention in the East, though the point is made that in most instances the movement is "hardly along the same practical lines as in the West." Allowance should be made, however, for difference of opinion as to what kind of municipal advertising really deserves the name of being practical. Eastern and Western ideas may differ widely on this point, and often for the best of reasons. The average Western city has different attractions to offer than its Eastern sisters, and naturally it adopts different methods to bring them to the attention of the country at large.—Springfield Union.

"Well, how did you stand it while I was away?" asked the iceman, as he dropped the ice into the refrigerator and turned to face the good-looking maid.

"Oh, have you been away?" she asked. "You must have had that chunk of ice with you all the time—the way it's dwindled."

"Have I been away?" repeated the iceman, in injured accents. "Well, what do you know about that? And me worryin' to death for fear you'd think somethin' had happened to me. Why, I've been away on my vacation, Maggie, an' you never missed me."

"Say, I've told you before about calling me Maggie," said the pretty maid, indignantly. "I don't see what license you have to think anybody'd miss you."

"You ought a been up there at the lake where I was," pursued the iceman, ignoring her gentle criticism. "That was all that was wantin' to make it perfect. We had a grand time, fishin' an' dancin' an restin' in hammocks—me for that twelve months in the year if I could put it over."

"You must look swell in a hammock," retorted the good-looking maid, "and I'd give a lot to see you waltzin' —with them feet of yours. What was this—some sort of a insane asylum where they let you get into a hammock?"

"Not on your life!" said the iceman. "It was one of the swellest of these here lakes where all the folks go. Say, they didn't ever know I was an iceman while I was up there! I sh'd say not! You oughta see me in my Sunday bags some time—I'm one of the best, Maggie-"

"You'll be wearing your Sunday clothes looking for a new job if you don't move along, won't you?" suggested the pretty housemaid. "Don't you suppose any of these people on your route have telephones? They'll all be calling up your boss and telling him to make that vacation of yours the real thing."

"Don't you ever fret about my losing my job," said the iceman. "I could grab another in twenty minutes! There ain't any too many icemen that have the trade I've got—and I can carry my trade with me, too!"

"Carry it along, then," advised the girl. "Don't let me stop you for a minute! I've got a lot of things to do and I'm not going out of the kitchen and leave you here, with all that silverware on the table."

"I can't figure out why it is you like to knock me all the time," said the iceman, mournfully. "I've tried to be just as friendly with you as—as anybody on my route. Honest, I have, Maggie."

"You don't mean to say that you go along this alley handing out this sort of talk at every door you stop at, do you?" demanded the good-looking maid. It's no wonder you never get around until afternoon with the ice! I'm surprised you haven't got a wagon load of water by the time you get here. Run along, now, and don't be tracking up my clean porch."

"Say, you won't get sore if I ask you something, will you?" asked the iceman.

"Depends on what it is," announced the housemaid.

"Well, I was going to ask you," said the iceman, "if you were going anywhere Sunday afternoon."

The pretty girl tossed her head and smiled at the calendar on the kitchen wall. What business is it of yours whether I am or not, Mr. Fresh?" she demanded.

"Well, I was only going to say," went on the iceman, "that I ain't been to none of these here amusement parks for a long time an' I was just thinkin' if you wasn't dated up for Sunday afternoon—"

"You got you're nerve, ain't you, asking me to go out with you?" said the housemaid. "Besides, I've got a date for then."

"Who is it—that big policeman?" asked the iceman, eagerly.

"Don't block up the stairway," said she. "If that big policeman should happen to drift around here right now they would have to take up a hospital collection in the icemen's union."

The iceman sighed heavily and lumbered away.—Chicago Daily News.

NAMES FOR FAST TRAINS.

One Road Offered Prize for the Most Attractive Title.

Some time ago an American railroad company offered a substantial prize for the most attractive title for its fastest train, and though none of those submitted was accepted, the ingenuity of the competitors was not undeserving of praise. Among those sent in were such titles as "The Republican Limited," "The Narrow Path Express," "The Liberty Express," "The Yankee High Flyer" and many others more or less good.

Although the novel competition practically failed in its purpose, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, it called attention to the picturesque and ingenious names which designate many of the important highflyers which run daily over American rails. There is no better known express in the world no better known express in the world than "The Twentieth Century Limited" stop between New York and Chicago, doing the journey of 1,000 miles in twenty hours.

Another interesting and appropriate name belongs to an express on the Pennsylvania railroad, which runs daily from Philadelphia to New York, and which is known as "The Brides' Limited." This high flyer gained its name from the fact that ever since its inauguration last year it has not failed to carry at least one happy couple on a honeymoon trip daily. "The Brides' Limited" is made up of three or four Pullman coaches, each bearing some title suggestive of its happy freight, such as Cupid, Hymen, etc., and the train is now extremely popular with newly married couples.

"The Green Mountain Flyer" is the famous Montreal express for New York and received its name from the beautiful green hills through which it runs on its daily journeys. An equally picturesque title is that of "The Sunset Limited," a Southern Pacific express which dashes daily toward that El Dorado of horticulturists—California.

Minneapolis and St. Paul are known as the Twin Cities, and so it is only natural that the train which runs from there to St. Louis should be called "The Twin City Limited." The exposition at St. Louis, by the way, has been the means of giving titles to many new trains, among these being "The Exposition Limited," over the Grand Central.

One of the most magnificent trains in the world is "The High Grass Limited," which runs from St. Paul to the Pacific coast, so called because in its journey it passes over much desolate prairie.

WILL HAVE FLYING BICYCLE.

What Jules Bois Predicts for Civilization 100 Years Hence.

Jules Bois, a distinguished archaeologist, whose hypotheses in regard to ancient civilizations have been wonderfully borne out by archaeological discoveries, has attempted to forecast the changes likely to take place in Europe in 100 years' time, based solely upon hypotheses formulated on the state of society 100 years ago and demonstrated in the light of present-day conditions, some of which, of course, cannot be traced to the beginning of the nineteenth century.

In the first place, says a Paris letter to the New York Times, M. Bois predicts that all the great cities will be practically uninhabited except by visitors and for business purposes during the daytime. All classes will live in the country or garden cities at considerable distances from the towns, to which access will be cheap and extremely rapid owing to the enormous development of all methods of contrivance, from pneumatic railways to flying cars. The motor car will have gone completely out of fashion, but the bicycle, in a new form, will be once more in favor, for a sort of flying bicycle will be invented which will enable the rider to soar in mid-air. The average height of Europeans will be increased; so will the average length of life.

Entirely new views will prevail concerning the beauty of women, for women themselves will be greatly changed; their beauty will be combined with muscular power and courage. Parliamentary institutions, M. Bois believes, will be greatly modified; indeed, will almost have disappeared, and nations will be governed by delegates of various castes.

All existing aristocracies will have become blotted out, but a new form of aristocracy, brought into being by the general alteration of the conditions of life, will be socially and politically powerful. French will become the great international language.

A first edition of "Tom Brown's Schooldays," published in 1857, sold at auction in London recently for £16. At the same sale a first edition of "Alice in Wonderland," published in 1866, realized £12.

Fanny C. Macauley, who wrote "The Lady of the Decoration," under the pen name of Frances Little, is an aunt of Mrs. Alice Hegan Rice, author of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Mrs. Rice is the "mate" to whom the letters in "The Lady of the Decoration" were written.

A history of the art of flying, by Alphonse Berger, is to be published this autumn. Now that the attention of the public is directed skyward with the alarming knowledge that the air is assuredly the coming road of travel, the book seems timely and will serve the prospective aviator as an admirable primer.

The collection of the letters of Meredith, which is in preparation under the supervision of Lord Morley of Blackburn, is not expected this year; but a volume of "Last Poems" is promised for the autumn. The volume will contain all the later verses which have not hitherto appeared in book form, and also many new poems.

It is an interesting fact that the same firm of publishers has brought out Peary's "Nearest the Pole," containing a detailed description of Peary's former expedition, and also Dr. Frederick A. Cook's "At the Top of the Continent" and "Through the First Antarctic Night." Considerable curiosity is aroused as to who will bring out the new books to be written by these new rival explorers concerning their latest expeditions.

A. J. Quiller-Couch, the author of the recently published novel, "True Tilda," was a famous athlete during his college course at Oxford. He stroked the university crew. He is an enthusiastic yachtsman, but does most of his literary work on land. He thinks out his stories in the course of long walks, and most of them are dictated to his wife. He is a slow and painstaking worker, rarely exceeding 1,000 words a day, and sometimes producing less than 150.

The announcement of a new novel by Winston Churchill is a literary event of importance. The new book as yet is without a title, but it will mark a distinct change in manner and material from those which have preceded it. Mr. Churchill's stories have been historical novels, although the latest of them, "Mr. Crewe's Career," is a historical novel of the present time. In his new work the author has quit the field of politics and has written more purely a love story than anything else that he has attempted.

A Kansas City druggist tells that a wealthy man came into his store Sunday morning and, throwing a dime on the showcase, said: "Give me two nickels for that, please?" "Going to try a slot machine?" asked the druggist, pleasantly. "No," replied the wealthy man, "I'm going to church."

AFTER SUFFERING ONE YEAR

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Milwaukee, Wis. — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman, and I would like to tell the whole world of it. I suffered from female trouble and fearful pains in my back. I had the best doctors and they all decided that I had a tumor in addition to my female trouble, and advised an operation. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman and I have no more backache. I hope I can help others by telling them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me." — MRS. EMMA IMSE, 833 First St., Milwaukee, Wis.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

For Lame Back

An aching back is instantly relieved by an application of Sloan's Liniment.

This liniment takes the place of massage and is better than sticky plasters. It penetrates—without rubbing—through the skin and muscular tissue right to the bone, quickens the blood, relieves congestion, and gives permanent as well as temporary relief.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. JAMES C. LEE, of 1100 9th St. S.E., Washington, D.C., writes: "Thirty years ago I fell from a scaffold and seriously injured my back. I suffered terribly at times; from the small of my back all around my stomach was just as if I had been beaten with a club. I used every plaster I could get with no relief. Sloan's Liniment took the pain right out, and I can now do as much ladder work as any man in the shop, thanks to

Sloan's Liniment

Mr. J. P. EVANS, of Mt. Airy, Ga., says: "After being afflicted for three years with rheumatism, I used Sloan's Liniment, and was cured sound and well, and am glad to say I haven't been troubled with rheumatism since. My leg was badly swollen from my hip to my knee. One-half a bottle took the pain and swelling out."

Sloan's Liniment has no equal as a remedy for Rheumatism, Neuralgia or any pain or stiffness in the muscles or joints. Prices, 25c., 50c. and $1.00

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE TREE OF LIFE.

By Rev. Andrew F. Underhill.

The vision of the prophets, while often pessimistic of present conditions, has always culminated in the hope of a final realization of the text. Men in every age have looked forward through difficulty and discouragement to the time when the jealousies, the rivalries, the selfishness of individuals and nations should pass away and mankind should live in one common bond of brotherhood and peace together.

St. John, in the record of the beatific vision given him, foreshadows the reign of a final peace on earth and an eternal conscious communion with God in the life beyond. The fruit of the tree of life is to be won through labor and service. Man's effort of self-development is to result in his finding the larger life. In his finding of the larger life for himself he is to bring to it the whole family of mankind. The leaves of the "tree" are for the healing of the nations, for the bringing of them together through the removal of their sin and selfishness.

Christianity as a religious force has given the principles of reaching outward and of seeking contracts with other men. It has inspired the courage for discovery and exploration and the impetus to treat for a mutual understanding. None but the nations professing Christianity, who have been the pioneers in discovery, have had an appreciable share in bringing the ends of the earth together or in creating what is known as the "family of nations," where an international law instead of brute force has found field for operation.

We are celebrating now the anniversary of two great discoverers. On our shores are gathered representatives of every clime to do honor to Hudson and Fulton and to cement the friendships of an international peace. In this we are acknowledging that there is a common bond between us all and our meeting together now is a fact that goes to make that bond stronger. Discovery has located the far lands, invention has brought them closer together in time and distance; travel and intercommunication have made possible a mutual acquaintanceship, and the spirit of Christianity, which has created the conditions of life favorable for these achievements, if we are willing to live it, will carry us further—to the realization of that peaceful understanding to which all men look with eager longing.

Co-operation is the outcome of the great law of love which Christ died to vindicate—the co-operation which means a consideration for the true welfare of one another. Your life and my life banded together in this spirit means an uplift for the lives of all other men. Let us foster this spirit, under the inspiration of Jesus, in all our personal relationships, substituting kindliness for strife, helpfulness for ruthless struggle, service for selfishness. The victory of achievement at the expense of our fellow men means but a repetition of the old and oft-repeated ruin of civilization through misery and sin. We rise to a height only to be cast down. But progress through the refusal to benefit at the expense of one another means an achievement that holds for the generations to come. Mankind working as a united whole, unthreatened by personal dissensions, giving itself instead of combatively trying to save itself must achieve victories to stagger the imagination. To such striving the tree of life shall yield her leaves for the healing of the nations and bring the balm of a peace the forestaste of the peace of the life eternal.

THE THINGS THAT REMAIN.

By Henry F. Cope.

"And now abideth faith, hope, love."—I. Cor., 13: 13.

After all, even when it seems that the worst has happened to us, we come to know that it is not the worst; that there are deeper depths of misery and, what is more important, that there remain to us possessions of value greater than all we have lost. The storms that sweep down on us have no power to uproot our trees of life.

Like old Job, we may be thrown upon the dunghill, bereft of our kin and friends, despoiled of our possessions, and racked with pain, and still the spirit rise victorious and memory and imagination discover comforts and resources that put to rout the pessimisms of the prosperous and the painfree.

Blessed be the adversities that uncover the real riches of life. We might never know the real value but for the loss of unworthy things we have valued too highly; we might never know how rich we really are but for the harsh hands that despoil us of that which we once counted as riches. The piercing sorrows are the ones that break through the crust of life and open the worth under the surface.

Many a man finds out what is in him by losing the things he has put about him or by the sweeping away of those protective walls which good fortune had built about him. Inner resources are developed, external aids fall from us. We learn in time to bless the hand that seemed so cruel when it thrust us from some sheltered nook and compelled us to battle with naked fists against the world.

When the true man is left destitute it is surprising to see how much remains. The man is there with his will, memory, imagination, his power to create and to conquer, to make riches of the heart, to win friends, to enter into fellowship with the spirits of all ages, to appreciate and possess the universe of the things that are eternal and imperishable.

Destitution of things is the fate that awaits us all; some may know it often during life; in some measure losses must be in every life, while all must some day lose the grip on things, must bid farewell to all possessions and carry out of this stage of being only their own selves. It were well for us if we learned to see in this not a despoiling but a discovery of better and greater treasures.

He would be a foolish man who cared only for the apple blossoms and nothing for the coming fruit. We would count him a fool who continued in manhood to pour out exclusive affection on childhood's toys. Yet that is just what many of us are doing, living for the passing and the trivial, and so losing the eternal and truly valuable.

Life is just the chance to get rich in this way and to have a self that enriches the ages. Neither pain nor poverty nor even death has terrors to those who know how little any of these can take from him. The secret of life is the discovery of this life which is eternal because above the ills and accidents of time.

The evil days must come. Happy are they who can view them with equanimity, because they are rich in the things beyond their reach; though the barns may be empty and the bank account fail, they look within and find quiet thoughts, memory stretches like a fair land behind, and they hold communion with the great and good of all days. Faith, and hope, and love are theirs.

These are the abiding things, the unfading riches, the perennial blossoms, the streams that flow forever and follow us all through the desert. They are so easily had that the wonder is that any are poor, and he who has them can never know destitution or be utterly lost.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

JESUS, LOVER OF MY SOUL.

By Charles Wesley.

[Charles Wesley (Epworth, England, Dec. 18, 1708—London, March 29, 1788) was the younger brother of John Wesley, with whom he worked and preached. Charles is justly known as the poet of Methodism, for he is the author of over 6,000 hymns which were, written for the use of their people. But he is more than this—his hymns are of such a spirit that they are sung freely by all denominations. "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," was originally entitled "Temptation," and is said to have been written immediately after a thrilling experience of narrow escape from death by shipwreck. Henry Ward Beecher said: "I would rather have written that hymn of Wesley's than to have the fame of all the kings that ever sat on earth." Certain it is that this hymn has been sung by many who have never heard of the great kings of earth. Its beautiful thought has become current in many tongues. It was one of the favorite songs of the Chinese Christians who perished in the boxer uprising, many dying with it on their lips.]

Jesus! lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly
While the billows near me roll,
While the tempest still is high;
Hide me, O my Savior! hide,
Till the storm of life is past;
Safe into the haven guide;
O, receive my soul at last!

Other refuge have I none;
Hangs my helpless soul on thee;
Leave, ah! leave me not alone,
Still support and comfort me.
All my trust on thee is stayed;
All my help from thee I bring;
Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing.

Thou, O Christ! art all I want;
More than all in thee I find;
Raise the fallen, cheer the faint,
Heal the sick, and lead the blind.
Just and holy is thy name,
I am all unrighteousness;
Vile and full of sin I am,
Thou art full of truth and grace.

Plenteous grace with thee is found,
Grace to pardon all my sin;
Let the healing streams abound,
Make and keep me pure within;
Thou of life the fountain art,
Freely let me take of thee;
Spring thou up within my heart,
Rise to all eternity.

VALUABLE HOME RECIPE

Will Break Up Severest Cold in a Day and Cure Any Curable Cough.

Mix one-half ounce of Concentrated pine compound with two ounces of glycerine and a half pint of good whiskey. Shake thoroughly each time and use in doses of a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful every four hours.

This formula is given out by a noted medical authority whose remarkable cures are well known to the profession. Local druggists say this mixture will work wonders for the treatment of all throat and lung diseases. Any druggist has these ingredients or will get them for you from his wholesale house.

The Concentrated pine comes only in half ounce bottles, each enclosed in an air-tight case, but be sure to get only that labeled "Concentrated."

A Poor Memory for Names.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Is the best of all medicines for the cure of diseases, disorders and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in the diseases of women.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system. THE ONE REMEDY which contains no alcohol and no injurious habit-forming drugs and which creates no craving for such stimulants.

THE ONE REMEDY so good that its makers are not afraid to print its every ingredient on each outside bottle-wrapper and attest to the truthfulness of the same under oath.

It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. Such a man is not to be trusted. He is trifling with your most priceless possession—your health—may be your life itself. See that you get what you ask for.

Making Room for Hosea.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale was a foe to long sermons. He used to tell a story of a long-winded preacher and the minor prophets, which the Washington Star reprints.

This preacher once preached over an hour on the four greater prophets, and then, when his exhausted congregation thought he was through, he took a long breath, turned a fresh page, and leaning over the pulpit, said:

"We now come to the more complex question of the minor prophets. First let us assign to them their proper order. Where, brethren, shall we place Hosea?"

An irascible old gentleman in a back pew rose, took his hat and stick, and said, as he departed:

"Place him here if you want to I'm going home."

SOLID GOLD & SILVER AWARD
For the Best Ear of Corn
To be Known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Trophy
To be Awarded at the
National Corn Exposition, Omaha, December 6 to 18, 1909.

Over one hundred thousand million (100,000,000,000) ears of corn were grown in the United States last year. Over a billion dollars were paid for them. More than a million and a quarter extra dollars went into the pockets of the farmers for corn this year than they received for the previous year's crop.

The reason for this may be found in the fact that the people of the United States are beginning to learn how delicious corn is and to realize its full food value.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes has placed corn among the indispensable items of daily fare.

The makers, therefore, are interested in the development of the King of Cereals, and have decided to award a beautiful trophy for the man, woman or child who can produce the best ear of corn in two different seasons.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., December 6th to 18th, 1909. Two single rules will govern the plan, and they are:—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909, and that you are a member of the National Corn Association. Full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time. In other words, you must produce the best ear of corn two different years.

There will be no restrictions. Any man, woman or child belonging to the Association can enter. It will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for

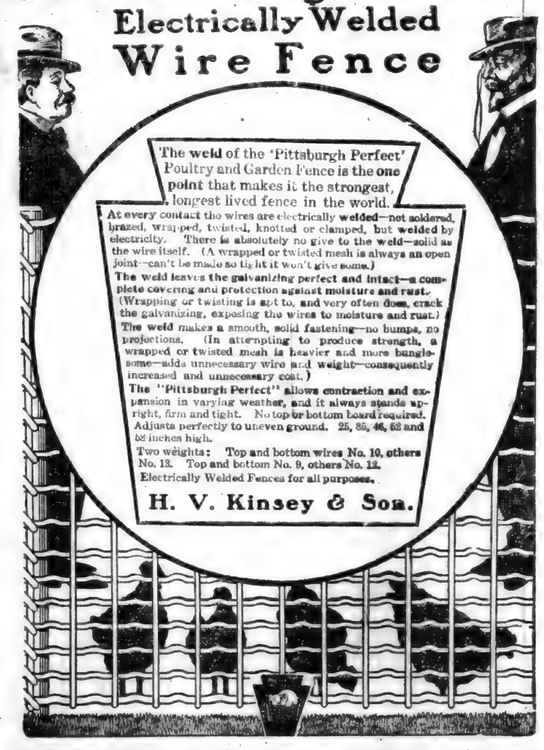
The "Pittsburgh Perfect" Electrically Welded Wire Fence



The weld of the 'Pittsburgh Perfect' Poultry and Garden Fence is the one point that makes it the strongest, longest lived fence in the world.

At every contact the wires are electrically welded—not soldered, brazed, wrapped, twisted, knotted or clamped, but welded by electricity. There is absolutely no give to the weld—solid as the wire itself. (A wrapped or twisted mesh is always an open joint—can't be made so tight it won't give some.)

The weld leaves the galvanizing perfect and intact—a complete covering and protection against moisture and rust. (Wrapping or twisting is apt to, and very often does, crack the galvanizing, exposing the wires to moisture and rust.)

The weld makes a smooth, solid fastening—no bumps, no projections. (In attempting to produce strength, a wrapped or twisted mesh is heavier and more bungleSome—adds unnecessary wire and weight—consequently increased and unnecessary cost.)

The "Pittsburgh Perfect" allows contraction and expansion in varying weather, and it always stands upright, firm and tight. No top or bottom board required. Adjusts perfectly to uneven ground. 25, 35, 46, 62 and 58 inches high.

Two weights: Top and bottom wires No. 10, others No. 13. Top and bottom No. 9, others No. 12.

Perhaps Mr. Ware did wrong but the boys need a good lesson and it seems as though someone must suffer before they will heed what is told them. The boy is in a serious condition and Mr. Ware is in the jail at Auburn awaiting developments.

LADIES READY-TO-WEAR APPAREL.

We devote one-half of one of our large rooms on first floor to show the exceptional large stock of ladies ready made garments. We are now making this one of the prominent features of this store, showing in a wonderful variety of styles Coats-Suits-Skirts-Waists-Petticoats-Wrappers-Dressing-Sacques-Sweaters-Knit Skirts-Outing Skirts and Muslin Underwear The large volume of sales made in this department keeps our styles right up-to-date by our keeping in touch with the new ideas as they come out for fashion fancies from time to time. The scarcity of dressmakers these days makes this a growing business and as we make it our special work to see that all of our ready-to-wear goods are made right in every way, you run no risk in buying your apparel ready-to-wear. We keep an experienced lady tailor to make any alternations necessary to make a garment to fit, and the work will be done quickly while you wait and with no charge. We hope to have you investigate this department personally this month.

Why Cole's Hot Blast
Is Supreme Over All Heating Stoves

Every part of Cole's Hot Blast Heater is a stove masterpiece. And government patents permit them on Cole's Hot Blast only.

Every little detail contributes towards making Cole's Hot Blast the fuel saver, a perfect heat radiator, a stove that holds fire from Saturday night to Monday morning, and the cleanest stove ever set up.

Remember Every Stove is Guaranteed

(See accompanying illustration)

The air-tight construction holds back the heat and gases wasted up the chimney with other stoves. The hot blast draft burns the 15,000 feet of gas which is in every ton of soft coal. The heavy castings surrounding the fire protect the body of the stove at all points, and the sensitive, all-steel, radiating surface radiates all the heat into the rooms.

One season's use will cut your fuel bill in two and give you satisfaction such as you never believed possible with a heater. Will you come in and see?

A union meeting will be held at the Christian church on Sunday evening. Lady and gentlemen speakers will be on the program and a good crowd is anticipated. The Crescent Concert Company will also be there.

Jack Beams is a busy man. Last week he installed a furnace for Nick Goldsmith and Clyde Rectenwal. Monday he put one in for John Beams and he expects to put in another this week. Jack is doing business right.

J. A. Brown with Lester Blackman of Kendallville as singer, will begin a series of meetings at the Christian church on next Sunday. On Sunday evening there will be a union temprance meeting to which all interested in the cause is invited.

Mr. Jos. B. Hartley of four miles west and one mile south of St. Joe, will soon be a resident of our little city. Arrangements have been made whereby Mr. Hartley becomes interested in the grist mill with Mr. Keesler and as soon as his sale, which will be on Saturday, November 20, Mr. Hartley will move into his property, purchased of Frank Barney on Widney Auenue last week. Mr. Barney will move into the Chris Saylor property for the present.

The Crescent Concert Company will appear at Widney's opera house Saturday night under the auspices of the Coburntown Farmers Band. Come.

Hicksville will be hostess Friday night to several men of prominence, owing to the presence of Hon. Champ Clark in his famous lecture "Picturesque Public Men" at the M. E. Church in that city. Hon. Cyrus Cline, Congressman from the 12th Indiana district, Hon. Carl Anderson, Hon. T. T. Ausberry, Hon. D. D. Donavin and several other of the Ohio Congressman and state officers will be there to meet the Missouri Member who holds the reins as leader of the Democratic party at Washington.

Quite a change is taking place in St. Joe. Wm. Curie has purchased the old Majestic Skating Rink, owned by H. C. Hathaway and same is being moved to the rear of his lot. Mr. Hathaway has purchased the small building of Mr. Curie and Geo. Wade gets the corn crib and in all a complete change takes place. When the rink building is located Mr. Curie expects to have an up-to-date place. He will then have room to shelter his entire lot of machinery. Frank Hart commenced the moving Wednesday.

A free lecture accompanied by stereopticon views, was given in the M. P. church last Friday evening to a large crowd. Rev. Overmeyer of Waterloo delivered the address as the views were thrown upon the curtain. A quartette furnished the music which enlivened the entertainment. The line of thought taken up was against liquor and each picture shown was to the point and besides appropriate at this special time. The church was crowded and all seemed to be enthused by the forceful talk. Several temprance workers from Auburn and Waterloo were here.

The Burning Question.

Present Conditions of Dry towns -A Few Brief Facts and Figures

Mr. Editor:—

Just at this time when there is much interest taken in the approaching local option election, I shall be glad to be permitted to say a few words about the relations of business and the liquor traffic. Though I am a minister I am a man of business, as I raise much money and direct the business affairs of a church which sometimes reach four or five thousand dollars a year. Besides this I handle cash aggregating sixty or sixty-five thousand dollars every year for my conference, and accounts of about forty thousand dollars more. Here are some facts.

MARTINSVILLE

Within the years 1898-1904 the number of saloons in Martinsville increased from 6 to 14. They averaged $10,000 business which meant in 1904 annual receipts of $140,000. In the same period 34 other business houses failed. If the receipts of the liquor traffic had gone to the groceries, clothing stores, etc. of Martinsville, legitimate business would have had its just income, its accounts would have been paid.

GARY

The magic city of Gary is the site of the U. S. Steel Corporation. The corporation bought 6000 acres of land to built the plant and city upon. Not a lot can be purchased without a restrictive clause in the deed which prevents the sale of liquor on the premises. It is a simple business proposition. Men will give better service, will save their wages, and will be satisfied better with their employers without liquor.

WINSLOW

The largest dry goods store had an increase the first "dry" year of $4,000 business. A hardware dealer the same year increased his trade $2,500. The liveryman a pro-saloon man admitted that his business was "as good as ever The bank cashier reported people having bank accounts who formerly did not have enough to eat.

SYRACUSE

After all saloons had been closed here, 34 business firms reported. Not one claimed that trade had fallen off; some said "as good"; some, "excellent;" some, "better than ever before." At the same time more farmers were coming to town, people were buying better goods, and were paying cash for them.

MONTICELLO

A local paper reports crowds in town better trade and concludes "No dear, the people of the county are not staying away from Monticello because they can't get booze here." Instances could be multiplied at Salem, Boswell, Bloomington, Oxford, Paoli and many other places.

CHURUBUSCO

The town board met for the sole purpose of cutting the tax levy from $1.25 to 25 cents. They had $5,000 cash on hand. The town is prosperous, considerable building, every business room but one or two filled, a $1,200 school building is going up, a contract for a new sewer has been let. The advocates of a wet town down there can't understand it.

KENDALLVILLE

"All the thirteen rooms formerly occupied by saloons now occupied." In their places are 1. second-hand store, 2. soda fountain, 3. shoe store, 4. job printer, 5. restaurant, 6. grocery, 7. cigar store, 8. bakery, etc.

THE FARMER

And now by this time, I am sure that some one asks how it will be with the farmer. Our business interests are largely a unit. What is good for one is good for another. The business man depends upon the farm, the mine and the factory for his support. Where will the farmer sell his corn if the gin mill stops? The Secretary of Agriculture is James Wilson. He has had the confidence of me of all the parties, and he certainly knows what he is talking about. When he was ask what part of the corn crop was used for the manufacture of liquor, he replied that it was about TWO PERCENT. The chief clerk of the internal revenue department says that much of even this is used in making alcohol for scientific or mechanical purposes. It seems to me that the farmer might fatten an extra porker with that two percent of his corn, or in these days when eggs ought to be kept in a safe with the diamonds, he might raise a few more laying hens. A reliable correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald maintains that if all the breweries and distilleries were closed, so far as their market for corn is concerned, the farmer would never find it out.

Who Gets the Money?

From a bushel of corn four gallons of whiskey are made. These retail for $16.40. I do not know how much the adulterations cost. The government gets $4 40. The railroad gets $1. The retailer of the whiskey gets $7. The farmer gets 60 cents. The drayman gets 15 cents. The consumer gets drunk. We have all seen too frequently what the wife and children of the consumer get from it. Any one can see that a business which makes a 60 cent product sell for $16.40 is fictitious in its character unless inconceivable labor is expended in the manufacture. The facts are as follows: The traffic pays us for grain $110,000,000; the labor bestowed amounts to $22,500,000. The total which the traffic pays for grain and labor is $132,500,000. But they sell us back their products, and we pay for it a sum like this, $1,188,000,000, or just about nine times as much. The dear people certainly do not get that eight-ninths of the enormous sum. Respectfully,

W. W. FREELAND.

Stole a March.

On Saturday evening Mr. Craig Sheffer and Miss Grace George attended the skating rink as usual and spent the evening with their friends as calm and serene as two lambs on the hillside, and about 9:00 o'clock took their leave, as their friends supposed for home, but instead of going home they hied away to Elder Brown's, pastor of the Christian church, and were quietly married. So completely did they fool the boys that Craig had to tell them on Sunday that he was married. Their friends are now congratulating them.

The Band.

Did you think the band was dead? That they had vamoosed-quit business, eh? Now listen—they have hibernated—quit business, just like those two baloons made the beautiful aerial gyrations at the Hicksville fair. They didn't do it, you know.

The band is alive—awake—and doing things. Watch the indicator—keep your eye on their temperature and your hand on their pulse, you will sure find something doing and on Saturday evening—the 13th.,—you will witness some musical pyrotechmics that will drive sordid care henceward a thousand miles. The noisy part of the melodious fireworks will be introduced by the band at 7:30 in the evening in front of the Opera House, and watch out—you may get hit when some of those bass notes make ragged holes in the atmosphere—if you are in danger—run up-stairs and the Crescent Concert Company will soothe your over-wrought nerves for twenty-five cents. And say the tonic they will dope out to you for that measley little sum is marvelous—you will be surprised at what you get for your money, and then you will be helping the band, for it is at the bottom of this disturbance. They have something else good up their sleeve—don't forget the indicator.

Terrible Tragedy in Pennsylvania.

One of the worst tragedies that has ever shocked the county occurred at Pine Grove, near Pottsville, Pa., when Daniel Schoke, a butcher of that place, cut off the heads of his wife and 12-year-old daughter and then committed suicide by shooting himself. The ghastly discovery was made when neighbors found Schoke lying on the first floor and the bodies of the wife and little girl in a bed on the second floor. The daughter's head was entirely severed and had rolled away from the body, but his wife's head hung simply by the vertebrae. A large butcher knife on the floor showed how the murders had been committed. In a note he left Schoke said he was not being treated fairly and that he did not want to leave his wife and daughter to their own resources after he was dead.

Say Peary Found Pole.

A dispatch from Washington, D. C., states Commander Robert E. Peary practically was indorsed as a discoverer of the north pole by the National Geographical Society. Every indication points to the fact that Peary's personal statements before the sub-committee of the society convinced its members that he had set foot on the top of the world. The explorer has been invited to deliver the first of his public lectures before the society there on November 12, and it was pointed out that had the proofs been open to the slightest question he never would have been asked to appear. It was announced at the home of Rear Admiral C. H. Chester, retired, that a public statement of the findings of the society would probably be forthcoming in the near future.

One Killed; Sixty-Five Hurt.

Careening like a ship without a rudder, a street car broke away from the control of the motorman in Des Monies, Ia., and leaving the track, turned a complete somersault, killing one man and injuring sixty-five passengers. The dead man, W. R. Robb, of Oklahoma City, was taken from the wreck a few minutes after the accident, still alive, but died of a fractured skull shortly after his arrival at a hospital. D. B. Smith, of Des Moines, was so seriously hurt that he may die. It is believed that the others injured will recover.

Leaped to Her Death.

Believing that the automobile in which she was riding with her husband in Chicago was about to collide with a rapidly moving taxicab, Mrs. Mary Blake jumped to the pavement and was run over and killed by the wheels of the taxicab. Mr. Blake avoided the collision by a quick turn to the side of the street. Before she made the fatal plunge Mrs. Blake threw her baby boy who was in her arms to the side of the street and the little one escaped injury.

Bank Wrecker is Convicted.

A Federal Grand Jury hearing the evidence in the trial of David J. Richardson, former cashier of the now defunct Cosmopolitan National Bank at Pittsburg, Pa., brought in a verdict of guilty on twenty-four of the twenty-six counts in the indictment. Richardson was charged with misapplication of bank funds, the making of false reports to the Comptroller of the Currency, and the making of false entries in the bank books.

Woman Goes as Aid.

The balloon Meiba III, with Captain John Berry as pilot, and Miss Julia Hoerner as aid, ascended in St. Louis, Mo., in an effort to life the Lahm cup. It will be the first long flight for a woman from St. Louis. Miss Hoerner is qualifying to act as a licensed pilot. Enough sand and provisions were taken for a four days' trip.

Bank Robber Gets $1,000.

Holding up the teller, Arthur Du Chateau, at the Farmers' Exchange Bank in Green Bay, Wis., at the point of a revolver, a lone masked robber grabbed about $1,000 in cash and then made good his escape. No one but the teller was in the bank at the time.

Wagon Injures Small Boy.

Kenneth Shelley, aged 6 years, son of Millard Shelley, living southeast of Belleville, Ind., was seriously hurt when he was run over by a heavy coal wagon. The accident occurred near Clayton, Ind.

Engine Explodes, Five Killed.

A freight engine on the coal and coke railroad exploded at Yankee Dam, W. Va., about forty-five miles from Elkins, W. Va., killing five men.

NEW ORLEANS ROARS WELCOME TO TAFT

The Deep Waterways Convention Opens with the President as Headliner.

OTHER BIG ONES ARE PRESENT

Hundred Thousand People Cheer When the Little Oleander Arrives —Athenaeum Is Packed.

To the roar of guns from the warships at anchor in midstream, saluted by the deafening shrieks of sirens, the clanging of bells and the shrill cheers of one hundred enthusiastic citizens who lined the banks of the Mississippi, President Taft arrived at New Orleans shortly after noon Saturday, bringing to a successful conclusion his long trip down the river from St. Louis. It was a reception well worthy of the big President and that he enjoyed it was very evident.

Standing on the bridge of the trim and speedy little Oleander, marked among the group of his personal entourage by his immense size, clad in the now familiar silk hat and frock coat, he bowed and smiled happily at the enthusiasm of the throng, turning now and then to whisper to one of his party. As the salute guns of the battleship Mississippi ceased spitting out their noisy greeting, and while Captain Marshall, in command of the squadron, stood on the bridge, the Oleander rounded to and crept up to the wharf at the foot of Canal street.

"Plenty of water here, Mr. President," remarked the pilot, "we have now nearly two hundred feet beneath us." A moment later the reception committee was on board and the President was escorted to the landing.

The delay in the arrival of President Taft, which also delayed the starting of the parade, postponed the opening session of the lakes-to-the-gulf deep waterways convention. But as soon as President Werlein's gavel fell the prearranged program moved with celerity. Following Mayor Behrman's address of welcome, William K. Kavanaugh, president of the waterways association, delivered his annual address. Immediately following came the appointment of committees, the address of the secretary, F. W. Saunders, and the introduction of resolutions, followed by an adjournment until the afternoon, when Mr. Taft addressed the convention.

At the water way convention Monday night, 5,000 delegates pledged themselves "to support no candidate for public office who will not unqualifiedly indorse" the lake-to-the-gulf deep-channel policy. The resolution to this effect was adopted with a whoop. The resolutions as a whole declare that the moment has arrived for actual construction of the lakes-to-the-gulf waterway; that delay cannot be tolerated by the people of the valley; that the needs of the entire nation must be considered simultaneously with the demands of the Mississippi valley, and that unless the present congress can rise to the occasion it is time to get a congress that can.

GREEK REVOLT ENDED.

Fleet of Four British War Vessels Arrives at Phalerum.

Four British war ships have arrived at Phalerum, near Piraeus, Greece. The rebellion, for the time being at least, is at an end. The last of the naval vessels in the hands of the mutinous officers has been recovered, the torpedo boat destroyer Velos returning to the arsenal the other evening. Lieutenant Tibaldos, however, who was the leader in the recent movement, is still at large.

There is a general belief that the government will connive in the escape of Tibaldos and his companions in order to avoid the embarrassment their capture would entail, since the government would not venture to execute them because they are connected with the highest families in Greece. The cabinet council has decided to try the other mutineers in the ordinary courts.

All the newspapers condemn the mutiny and demand exemplary punishment of the ringleaders. Several of those closely identified with the political situation did not attempt to conceal their apprehensions concerning the future. Some think the only solution of the crisis is for the king to invite the military league to form a cabinet.

SOUTH DAKOTA PRAIRIES AFIRE

Loss to Farm Buildings and Crops Is Heavy.

A terrific prairie fire extending for a distance of three miles from east to west has been raging in Tripp County, in the southwestern part of South Dakota. Much loss of farm buildings and crops has taken place, and hundreds of men and women have been out fighting the flames. The towns of Lamro and McNeeley, threatened for a time, have been saved only after strenuous efforts on the part of the fire fighters. Two persons are known to have been badly burned. They are Mr. and Mrs. McGrievie, who had been taken to Lamro for medical treatment.

WANTED—A DEEP WATERWAY.

"FLEET" IS DELAYED.

Taft and Party Reach Vicksburg, Miss., Behind Time.

President Taft and his party moved on Vicksburg, Miss., Thursday by land and water. The executive steamed in at night several hours behind time and found that his escort of Governors, Senators and Congressmen had beaten him in by the base ruse of taking to the railroad.

When the Oleander whistled for the Yazoo Canal it was 9:30 o'clock at night, but as the President alighted from the vessel half an hour later he found the steep streets of Vicksburg lined with people who had been waiting since early afternoon. Mr. Taft made a brief speech, in which he did not touch on water ways, and then went to the public dinner which had been waiting for three hours. The President left on the Oleander at 11:35 p. m. for Natchez.

When the sailing orders were changed the previous night and each boat was told to steam along as fast as it could, the days of steamboat racing on the Mississippi were suddenly revived. Each captain tried to crowd as much out of his boiler as he could.

When the Governors and other dignitaries woke up Thursday morning and peeked over the rail they discovered that they were left hopelessly behind. It looked as if they would reach Vicksburg long after the President had left the town.

In order that the Governors and other honored guests might not be deprived of the trip over the battlefield and through the national cemetery, which had been looked forward to as one of the big features of the voyage, President Smith of the Business Men's League sent the steamer Alton ahead to Greenville to charter a special train.

While the difficulties of getting to Vicksburg appeared to chase water way talk to the woods for the time being they have given the travelers an excellent object lesson of the troubles in navigating the Mississippi in its present unimproved condition. It took the President's boat, the Oleander, one of the fastest on the river, over twice as long to get from Greenville by river as it did the others by train, and at that the train did not fuse the rails by its speed.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

At the Bois du Bologne race course (Paris) the Prix Gladiateur for a purse of $6,000 and a trophy valued at $2,000, was won by W. K. Vanderbilt's Seasick II.

Bello, at 6 to 1, won the Harbar Hill cup for 3-year-old jumpers, defeating the favorite, Oakhurst, by half a length. The race stamped the filly as a clever jumper.

In the last of the series of games which the collegians crossed the ocean to play, the University of Wisconsin base ball team defeated the Tokyo University with a score of 8 to 0.

Jim Flynn, of Boston, heavyweight, defeated Ralph Galloway, colored, of California, in twelve rounds of the hardest fighting ever seen at the Armory Athletic Association at Boston.

The loss of Lee J. Talbot will be severely felt by the track team at Cornell this year. Talbot, the intercollegiate champion hammer thrower, has been refused permission to re-enter the college because he failed to pass upon one subject in which he has been conditioned from his freshman year.

DEMANDS ON GOVERNMENT BY WATER WAY CONGRESS.

We demand and direct that a definite and vigorous policy of water way improvement, beginning with the lakes-to-the-gulf deep water way, be adopted and put in operation by the national government without delay.

* * *

We publicly pledge our personal honor to support no candidate for public office who will not unqualifiedly indorse and maintain that policy (referring to immediate water way action).

* * *

The federal government should, without needless delay, enter upon a definite policy of water way development.

* * *

We repudiate and condemn that portion of the federal board of engineers' report declaring against the commercial expediency of the project.

* * *

The commerce of the interior absolutely demands the opening of a water way from the great lakes to the sea.

* * *

We condemn the fallacious theory that the need for water way development can be measured either by the amount or by the absence of waterborne commerce before the channels are properly developed.

* * *

We insist on the development of our water ways as an investment rather than a succession of piecemeal experiments.

* * *

We indorse and approve a bond issue.

TYPHOON 135 MILES AN HOUR.

Record of Wind in Philippines Received—Strain on Anemometer.

No anemometer could stand a pressure much greater than that imposed on the instruments of the Philippine weather bureau in the typhoon which swept over the islands recently, when, according to cable reports, the wind reached 135 miles an hour. The record storm in the United States was that which caused death and destruction at Galveston, Sept. 8, 1900. At that time, after the anemometer had marked 135 miles an hour, the instrument was blown to pieces. Prof. Willis L. Moore, chief of the weather bureau, has turned his attention to the construction of a machine on a new principle, designed to withstand any storm.

BLOWN OUT OF ENGINE CAB.

Fireman Killed, Engineer Hurt, in Locomotive Explosion.

Fireman Crawford of Collinwood, O., was instantly killed and Engineer Kramer of Erie, Pa., was badly injured when a cylinder head on an eastbound freight train blew out at a point 1,000 feet east of the station at Geneva, O. The fireman and engineer were blown through the cab windows when the train was going at a high rate of speed. The train ran its length before the accident brought it to a standstill. A brakeman standing on the tender was injured.

Break Two World's Army Records.

Two world's army records for fast machine gun firing and wall scaling were broken by the Sixteenth Infantry at Fort Crook, Neb. The machine gun platoon made a record of 44 1-5 seconds against 55 1-5 seconds, its own former world's record, for packing, unpacking, running 100 yards, firing and running back 100 yards. In the wall scaling test the eight-man team of the same regiment reduced the record from twenty-six to eighteen seconds.

BANK SHORTAGE IS GROWING.

$800,000 Found to Have Been Deposited in Mineral Point.

The deposits in the First National Bank of Mineral Point, Wis., should have been given as $800,000 instead of $579,000. This was the statement made by R. W. Goodhart, special bank examiner, who discovered the defalcations of Phil Allen Jr., and, on the failure of the directors to come to the rescue, closed the bank. Mr. Goodhart was on his way Monday to appear before the grand jury in La Crosse. It is expected soon after his appearance before the jury an indictment will be found against Allen.

Mr. Goodhart's statement that there were several hundred thousand dollars more of deposits in the bank than was given on the books was based on the discovery of bank receipts given for money deposited with Allen, and for which the bank is liable. They already amount to $200,000 and are still coming in.

Examiner Goodhart says the defalcation was discovered when he charged Allen with having two notes with forged signatures. The bank man then admitted, says Mr. Goodhart, that he was a defaulter and forger. Before the interview ended Goodhart had discovered $90,000 in forged paper that Allen admitted he says, was forged.

GAMBLERS HURL TWO BOMBS.

More Spectacular Outrages in Chicago's Long Series Arouse City.

Bombs No. 33 and No. 34, fired within twenty minutes of each other, wrecked two buildings in the loop district of Chicago Sunday night, caused nearly $10,000 damage, frightened hundreds of citizens and served notice on the people of Chicago that, in the face of the oft-repeated denials of the police, open gambling is still going on in the city. The two cases Sunday night left no chance for the police to ascribe the outrages to anything but a gamblers' war. Each of the places blown up sheltered gambling establishments.

The annual report of the Kansas City Southern Railway shows an increase of net earnings from $2,714,000 to $3,090,000.

Judge Pritchard, at Asheville, N. C., signed the final decree terminating the receivership of the Seaboard Air Line Railway and the delivery of the property in accordance with the plan of reorganization.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has purchased a fifty-acre farm near Bacon, Del., which is to be worked as an experiment station, the object being to demonstrate what may be done by scientific farming in that section of Delaware, Maryland and Virginia.

Four great American railroad systems have reported their operations for a whole year without a single passenger killed. These were the Pennsylvania, the Burlington, the Northwestern and the Santa Fe. During the year ended June 30, these systems carried 100,000,000 passengers. The one most important factor contributing to this result, in addition to the latest safety devices, is the enforcement of rigid discipline. All devices depend at some point on the faithfulness of an employe.

VERDICT OF VOTERS THE COUNTRY OVER

Results of State and City Elections in All Parts of the Country.

GAYNOR WINNER IN NEW YORK

Traction Matters Cause Defeat of Johnson in Cleveland—San Francisco Retires Heney.

Important State and municipal elections were held in many sections of the country on Tuesday, early reports on the results of which are briefly stated thus:

William J. Gaynor, Democrat, was elected mayor of New York City Tuesday by a plurality of more than 70,000 over his nearest competitor, Otto T. Bannard, Republican. He will be in complete isolation, however, in the board of estimate and apportionment. The borough presidents on Gaynor's ticket in Manhattan, the Bronx, Queens, Kings, and Richmond were defeated. His associates on the Tammany city ballot—Moore for controller and Galvin for president of the board of aldermen—lost by probably 50,000 votes.

The Chronicle and Call concede the election of P. H. McCarthy, Union Labor candidate, as mayor of San Francisco, the Chronicle estimating his majority at 5,000 to 7,500 and the Call estimating it at 10,000. They both concede Fickert's election by 15,000 majority over Heney. The large majority by which Heney, graft prosecutor, was snowed under shows that there has been widespread revolt against the present administration, which is in the hands of civic reformers. These men have thrown out slot machines from cigar stores and saloons, have been largely instrumental in killing betting on the racetrack, have shut poolrooms and put the lid on a town that for years had been wide open.

Herman C. Baehr, Republican, has been elected mayor of Cleveland over Tom L. Johnson. The indications point to 4,500 plurality for Baehr, with a tendency toward an increase in these figures. Johnson admitted his defeat by a plurality of 1,500, but declared that he would push the traction peace plans before he leaves office. He also said he would run again. Charles Salen, manager of many of the Johnson battles, conceded a Democratic defeat.

Election results in other sections may be summarized, as follows:

Philadelphia—Reform ticket defeated. S. P. Rotan (Rep.) re-elected over D. C. Gibboney for District Attorney. Estimated plurality, 45,000. Rest of city Republican.

Pennsylvania — State Republican ticket, headed by State Treasurer, wins by 150,000 estimated plurality.

Cincinnati—Dr. Louis Schwab (Rep.) elected Mayor by 10,000 plurality.

Indianapolis—S. L. Shank (Rep.) won over Charles A. Gauss (Dem.) by 1,468 plurality. Republicans had claimed Democrats were aided by liquor interests. Black eye for Tom Taggart.

Indiana (cities and towns)—Mixed results between parties. Terre Haute, Evansville, Muncie, and Lafayette wet; Kokomo dry; South Bend for regulation.

Illinois Towns—Jacksonville remains dry. In small southern towns of State, where liquor was issue, the changes from dry to wet were 8; from wet to dry, 8; unchanged, 20.

Toledo—Mayor Brand Whitlock re-elected by about 3,500 plurality.

Massachusetts — Republicans re-elected Gov. Draper by a plurality of 8,000. One year ago Draper received a plurality of over 60,000. Fight was made by Democrats along tariff reform lines and the shrinkage of over 50,000 is attributed to dissatisfaction with the tariff.

Virginia—Democrats elected State ticket headed by William H. Mann by 23,000 majority.

Maryland—Disfranchisement, which would have deprived 50,000 negroes of vote, probably beaten. Democrats win State ticket and Legislature, insuring Rayner's return to Senate. Majorities, however, are reduced.

FOIL LYNCHING MOB IN KANSAS

McMahon, Confessed Slayer of Three, Is Rushed to Missouri Jail.

To prevent lynching by a vigilance committee reported to be forming, Sheriff Al Becker late Thursday night removed James McMahon, the confessed slayer of his two sisters and brother-in-law, from the county jail in Kansas City, Kan., to the city jail on the Missouri side. Patrick McMahon accompanied his brother and remained at police headquarters in Kansas City, Mo., all night. Patrick was told he might have his liberty, but he said he preferred to remain under police protection for a while.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XVI.—(Continued.)

She had sunk back almost fainting against the cushions of the couch. The young man could not help seeing how deadly pale she was, and there was a look in her eyes that positively frightened her.

"You are ill! Miss Garland," he cried, "let me find your aunt—let me send for a doctor?"

"No, no—it is nothing," she gasped, "only a little faintness—I am subject to it—it is nothing at all. Get me a glass of water quietly, without making any fuss; I shall be all right again in a minute."

He flew to do her bidding, and for a few moments she remained absolutely alone in the semi-darkness of the half-lit balcony. The lingerers had all gone, the band was playing a polka, and the sound of the dancers' feet on the parquet floor kept time to the music.

Oh, why is one made to live through such moments as these? Why does not something come and kill us before we are allowed to suffer like this? Married! And that must be his wife! That yellow-haired, painted woman, who was quarreling with him just now!

He must have been engaged to her first, ere ever he came to Chatswell, and made believe to care for herself. No wonder he was ashamed even to make a sign to the unhappy girl whom he had tricked and deceived! No wonder that he had met her eyes blankly, and as if she had been a stranger!

She got up from her seat, she forgot Algy Dessinger's very existence. She fled through a side room, and luckily she met Lady Garland.

"I am tired—I am ill—take me home for pity's sake, aunt!" she said to her brokenly.

And when Mr. Dessinger returned to the balcony with the glass of water for his divinity, her place was vacant. Irene had vanished.

CHAPTER XVII.

Ever since October Rupert Carroll and Agatha his wife had been living together in Chester Square. There was a third inmate in the house in the person of Miss Louise Carroll, who, having let Harvington Lodge furnished for a year to a most desirable tenant, brought her god-daughter up to London, and took up her abode as well in the house which she had engaged for her brother.

For a long time after their wedding-day Rupert and Agatha never even saw one another. Agatha did not die, as perhaps she would have liked to do, but she recovered very slowly from her serious illness, and when she was better she was ordered change of air, and Miss Carroll took her for three months to Bournemouth. Then when her strength came back to her, there arose the question of what was to be done about her future. Agatha protested that nothing would induce her to live with a man who had publicly stated on her wedding-day that he had only married her under a hallucination, and she declared that if he did not love her, but someone else, she would be no wife to him; whilst Rupert, though humbly anxious to do all in his power to promote her welfare, was clearly in no way desirous of any closer connection with the unhappy girl, whom he liked and respected, but whom he could never love. In fact, to live apart was the wish of both.

But Louise had strong ideas of duty, and she would not hear of such a plan. She contended that Rupert and Agatha were as much bound by their marriage vows as any other husband and wife, and that if only to silence the voice of scandal, it was incumbent on them to live together and to make the best of a bad business, at any rate in the eyes of the world.

It was more than six months after their marriage that the first interview took place between them in Miss Carroll's presence. She brought Agatha up herself to Rupert's bachelor rooms in town, and the two met with much reluctance on both sides.

"I wish to give you your liberty, Rupert," said poor Agatha, not daring to lift her sad eyes to her husband's, "and to leave you perfectly free; but it seems that it would not be right for me to do so. I have only come to tell you that I will do exactly what you and your sister wish."

He took her hand kindly. She was frightfully altered—she had grown very thin and pale, and the good looks which love and happiness had conjured up for a short time in her had all faded away again. Rupert pitied her from his heart.

"There is nothing I will not do to make you happy, Aggie," he said, "you shall have everything I can give you—every penny of my money."

"I do not want your money, Rupert," she said, quistly, "I want your affection."

He was silent; he bit his lip and looked down on the ground, in painful distress of mind, for he could not answer her as she would have liked him to answer.

"Now this is all nonsense, my dear children," here broke in Miss Carroll, briskly. "We are not going to discuss matters of sentiment, but matters of fact. You have both known and liked each other all your lives, and you must both manage to make the best of one another for the future. Rupert, you must take a house in London for Aggie and you, Aggie, must go and live under your husband's roof, like a good girl."

"Auntie," she said, hesitatingly, "if you would only come and live with us?"

"What a capital idea!" cried Rupert, with animation. "Yes, Louie, come and help us patch up our life together, and then we will both do as you wish and endeavor to make each other as happy as we know how."

And so it was eventually settled. And in due course of time this queer and uncomfortable trio took up their abode in the very furnished house that Miss Carroll's fancy had been originally set upon.

Little by little they fell into the life that a great many married people lead; that is to say, there was no display of love and devotion—but they were very good friends. They did not quarrel, and they did not hate one another—that is always something, in these days of ill-assorted couples! Rupert was kind and scrupulously polite to Aggie, and Aggie was submissive and always obedient to Rupert.

When first Rupert had recovered his memory he had used every means in his power to discover what had become of Irene. He had gone down to Chatswell repeatedly, and had made inquiries about her. He soon learnt, of course, that Mrs. Garland had died in the November of that fatal autumn, and that her daughter had gone away with her aunt immediately after the funeral, but beyond the fact that it was "somewhere abroad," her humble friends and neighbors could tell him nothing.

Then came the London season, that brought the Garlands to England, and in the list of the debutantes at Her Majesty's first drawing-room, Rupert read this sentence one morning in the newspaper:

"Miss Irene Garland—by her aunt, Lady Garlond."

So she was in London! Well, Irene need not have been afraid of meeting him. Rupert went out very little now-a-days; and that sentence in the Morning Post was quite enough to put a stop to his going out at all.

She was alive—she was well—and since she had been to a drawing-room, she was presumably happy enough to go into society. He felt that this knowledge ought to be enough for him. He believed that he had lost the desire to see her now, and, at least, he had no intention of seeking her out, or of putting himself in her way, although involuntarily his eyes were always on the alert in the streets, or as he passed on his homeward way through the park, looking out for the face that, to him, was the only face he wanted to see in all the crowd, and yet he never saw her. He told himself that he was glad of it—glad that Aggie's health prevented their going out in the evening, and that he went nowhere where he was likely to meet her.

Meanwhile, Agatha was, if anything, even more to be pitied than her husband. Her health was extremely bad, often for days she lay prostrate on the sofa, unable to do anything at all. About this time Rupert gave her a victoria, as prettily turned out as any in the park, and the horse was as handsome a one as money could buy, and Aggie and Miss Carroll were delighted with their new toy, and took daily drives together whenever Aggie was well enough to go out.

On one of these occasions the little carriage was standing in the shade by the end of the railing near the Row at Hyde Park Corner, and the two ladies were idly watching the gay scene, the brilliant equipages, the coaches with their shining teams, the bright dresses and gay parasols, and the crowd of happy faces that went by them, when suddenly some feminine voices exclaimed excitedly close behind them:

"Why, I declare, there is Agatha!—and Miss Carroll."

They turned round and beheld the phalanx of four—the Goodford girls in all their glory—who came crowding about the victoria with noisy and delightful greetings. After all, it was pleasant to see familiar faces, for Agatha and Louise Carroll knew very few people in London, and the Goodford girls were so genial and jolly that it was impossible to help liking them. Then followed a crowd of questions and answers on either side.

"And how is your husband, dear?" asked Cora. "Papa heard from somebody that you and he are such a model couple; quite devoted to each other, and all little misunderstandings blown away, eh? And oh, by-the-way, have you heard about Lord Netherville, Aggie? People say he is always about with such a horrid woman—a widow, who paints, and dyes her hair! Such a pity, isn't it? I do hope he won't marry her; but I daresay you know all about it?"

"No, indeed," answered Agatha, a little eagerly. "I have not seen Lord Netherville at all. Is he is London?"

And Agatha saw her old lover taking off his hat to her over Cora's head.

CHAPTER XVIII.

One afternoon on his return from the city Rupert found Lord Netherville sitting in his wife's drawing-room. He rose, somewhat nervously, at his cousin's entrance, and it was a relief to him to find how cordially and heartily Rupert shook hands with him.

"I met Mrs. Carroll in the park two days ago, and she was good enough to tell me I might call," he began, apologetically.

"We are both delighted to see you, Netherville."

"Lord Netherville was telling me all the news of the fashionable world," said Aggie. "Go on, please, about that girl who is so lovely."

"I am afraid I have very little to tell you about her. I do not, indeed, know her myself, only as you asked me who is the prettiest girl in town this season, I must unhesitatingly give the palm to Miss Garland. She is decidedly the beauty of the year."

Carroll was standing with his back to them. All at once he seemed transfixed into stone, and remained staring at the dusty square garden over the tops of the white marguerites and scarlet geraniums that were banked up on the balcony outside.

"What is she like?" inquired Aggie, who was faintly interested and amused.

"You must not ask me to describe her; for I am a duffer at that sort of business. I can only tell you that she is certainly a very beautiful creature, although I have only seen her at a distance, and have never been introduced to her, and, to tell you the truth, I have no desire to know her. All the young fellows are in love with her, but she is an arrant flirt, and they say she bowls them over at the rate of two a week! But I hear that she will certainly be engaged before the end of the season."

"Who is the favored man?"

"Well, it seems the young lady—like most of our girls nowadays—has an eye to the main chance, and there is a man with a lot of money always dangling after her, and people say she will probably end by marrying him. I hear that she is as cold as ice, and as heartless—well, as the rest of your lovely sex, Mrs. Carroll!"

"Don't you think I have good cause to be cynical, Agatha? Have you always behaved so nicely to everybody?" He had lowered his voice, so that Rupert, standing by the window, with his back towards them, did not hear him.

Agatha lifted her eyes, dewy with unshed tears, to his.

"I did treat you badly!" she murmured back. "But, perhaps, I have been punished for it. No, I don't mean that," she said hastily, seeing an expression of pained surprise in his face. "For, of course, I cared for Rupert, and there was nothing mercenary in what I did. And I hear there is some one else you like now, so, perhaps, you have forgiven me, and got over it."

"My dear," he whispered, "I have forgiven you certainly; but as to getting over it—that is another matter! And there is no one else—not in the sense that you mean—there never will be! There is one woman who is a great friend of mine—nothing more—I shall never wish to marry again. You will always hold a place apart in my life. And, Agatha, I want to say to you that if you ever want anything done for you—if you ever want a friend—remember that you may always reckon on me—to my life's end."

At this moment Rupert walked over from the other side of the room and joined them.

"Who is this man with money, whom you say Miss Garland will probably marry?" he inquired of his cousin.

The question surprised them both. Agatha looked up startled. Nor had Netherville imagined that he had even listened to his gossip. However, he answered him immediately.

"It is a man called Taunton, I am told; but really I know very little about it."

"Taunton!" repeated Carroll, with disgust. "Why, the fellow has nothing on earth to recommend him but his money! Her friends must be mad to allow her name to be coupled with that of a snob of that description!"

"He is a cad, certainly," replied Netherville, with a shrug of his shoulders; "but money covers a multitude of sins; and I'm told that he is head over ears in love with her."

"They can never allow her to marry such a man as that!" repeated Rupert, excitedly. "It would be a crime."

Making Eyes at Senorita.

In the uncertain illumination of the electric lamps some of the senoritas of Tepic City appeared very attractive in breezy, fluffy gowns and fetching mantillas and they knew it pretty well too. They like to have you look at them directly and admiringly, and they will not drop their eyes, says Outing. If you have the nerve to give one a look of this kind—such a look as would be considered extremely rude in any American city—the chances are, when you meet her on the next turn you will be rewarded with a smile and a challenge from the black eyes, and if you have a sufficient stock of nerve in reserve you will speak to her and pay her some complimentary remark upon the first opportunity that offers. This is good breeding and will not be resented. Should you then become infatuated with the lady, you will search out her home, visit her barred window and mope under it for an hour or two every morning; and if you impress her favorably she will make your heart glad by talking with you through the bars or dropping little scented notes to you. Should you become real serious you will hire a stringed band to serenade her at night, now and then. To conform with the custom you should start your band out at midnight and let it play as long as your money lasts.

Generous Child.

"Ma, what are the folks in our church gettin' up a subscription for?"

"To send our minister on a vacation."

"Won't there be no church services while he's gone?"

"No, dear.'

"Ma, I got $1.23 in my bank—can I give that?"—Cleveland Leader.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The government has shipped sixty-six headstones to Clinton to be used in marking the graves of Union soldiers buried there.

Silverton Bebout, of Shelbyville, was riding on a wagon used for carrying water to a traction engine when he fell off. One of the wheels ran over both his legs. He was also bruised about the body. He will recover.

The erection of a new courthouse in DeKalb County is assured, the Board of Commissioners having awarded the contract for drawing the plans to Mahurin & Mahurin, of Fort Wayne. The building is to be modern throughout and will be about 126 feet square. In a recent tour of inspection the commissioners were much impressed with the courthouse at Bloomington and the plans of that building will be followed.

Twitchell & McFadden, oil operators, have completed a well in the Oakland City field, in which fifty-four feet of oil sand was drilled and the drilling stopped while the tools were still in the sand. Nearly forty feet of the sand was oil bearing. This is the record for the field. No estimate of the well's production can be made. It is producing some gas. There are now over thirty strings of drilling tools in the field and not an idle contractor.

The Wilcoxen and Coers families have been having trouble at Morristown for a few days, and a dead cat started the trouble. The animal died on the premises of one of the families and as it belonged to the other family it was thrown into the neighbor's yard. Then the families started an argument and Mrs. William Wilcoxen, who became angry, struck John Coers with a stone. Coers filed an affidavit for assault and battery against the woman and she was fined $15.

The thirty-second annual meeting of the Farmers' Co-Operative Insurance Association at Danville shows that the company is now carrying insurance on property to the amount of $4,521,405, and an assessment of 20 cents on the $100, or one-fifth of 1 per cent. has been ordered. The losses in the last year amounted to $7,429.09, and there was a gain of insurable property of $74,270. George W. Scearce was re-elected president and Simon Hadley chosen to succeed himself as secretary.

When James Sexton, mail carrier at Shelbyville, went to the depot one morning recently for the mail pouches which arrive at night, he found four of them had been tampered with. Three sacks, containing papers, and one sack, containing letters, had been cut open and the contents scattered in the baggage room. Letters and circulars were opened, while many letters were unopened. The doors had been pried open, apparently with an ax and crowbar. The amount of money secured, if any, is not known.

Relatives in Brazil have just returned from Gosport, where they attended the marriage of Mrs. H. N. Hays, aged 73 years, and E. W. Ogenbright, aged 81 years. They have been warm friends for over a half century, and for fifty years have been members of the same church in Gosport. Many years ago the first husband of the bride died, leaving one of the largest mercantile businesses in Southern Indiana. The widow at once took charge of the business and has conducted it successfully ever since.

While excavating for the foundations of a new cement bridge on the North Salem road, a mile northwest of Danville, a few days ago, Charles Hall unearthed what is apparently an iron nugget about the size and having all the appearances of a hickory nut. It is very heavy and shows indications of being filled with iron pyrities, but many people declare it is a petrified hickory nut. It was found nearly eight feet below the surface of the ground and no one is able to account for its presence there. It is now on exhibition. Professors at the Central Normal College are unable to agree on what it is.

Carl LaMar, of Frankfort, has just completed a model for an airship. At its first trial the diminitive airship flew about one hundred feet with the ease and grace of a bird. The machine is eight feet in length and seven feet in width. On account of the ship being too small to carry a gasoline engine the motive power for the trial was obtained by a coil of rubber, which propelled the wings as it unwound itself. The machine did not come to the ground until the rubber was all unwound. LaMar has been working on the idea for his machine for some time and will soon begin the work of building a machine large enough to carry a gasoline engine. LaMar for a number of years was engaged in giving balloon ascensions and parachute leaps throughout the State and it was while thus engaged that he began the study of airships. He feels confident he can build a ship that will fly.

Unable to force the door of a safe containing $50,000, thieves who entered the Farmers' Bank at Silver Lake were content with stealing a barrel containing 120 bottles of beer.

Grant Baker, driver of a cab that was hit by a street car in Anderson, may die. Two women and two men who were in the cab and whose names have been withheld, were painfully hurt. Baker refuses to divulge the names of his passengers, but says they were taking a "joy ride."

While paring potatoes, Lee Shepherd, a miner, of Sullivan, severed an artery in his left forearm and almost bled to death before a physician arrived. He is in a critical condition from the loss of blood.

The largest individual payment of taxes at Bluffton since the payment of the fall installments began was received last week in a letter from the Indiana Pipe Line Company. The company enclosed to County Treasurer W. J. Dustman a check for $6,882.18, to pay for the fall installment on pipe lines and on the station south of Bluffton.

The 4-year-old son of Mrs. Anna Skelton, of Francisco, was fatally burned when he and three companions stole out with a box of matches and set fire to a field of grass. The child's clothing caught fire and his little body was terribly burned before rescuers could fight their way through the flames to where he lay. Two other boys had narrow escapes.

Clad in the working clothes of farmer boys, shucking pegs on their fingers and many wearing boots, forty students of Oakland City College, headed by President Dearing, spent a day in the cornfields of Professor N. C. Johnson, north of Oakland City, shucking corn. The college corn huskers worked for fun, and also for the money there is in the work, for Professor Johnson is paying the current price for all corn hauled to the cribs. The object of the work is to raise money for the use of the college Y. M. C. A.

William Filoy and James Kellam, workmen employed on the Benjamin Beeson, Jr., farm near Milton, in making an excavation unearthed several skeletons and a stone pipe. The stem of the pipe is six inches long, while the bowl is two inches high and one inch in diameter. During the war of 1812 the settlers of the southern part of the township erected a blockhouse in the vicinity to protect themselves from the attacks of Indians, and it is thought the skeletons and pipe unearthed were those of hostile redskins.

The contract for a new county jail at Bloomfield has been awarded to the Stewart Jail Works Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, for $28,000. It was necessary to call the County Council in special session to get an additional appropriation of $3,000. The plans for the new building were drawn by Herbert L. Bass & Co., of Indianapolis, under the supervision of Amos W. Butler, secretary of the Board of State Charities, and Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the State Board of Health. The building will be located on the new site across the street, south of the courthouse.

Deputy Warden Hiatt, of Fairmount, arrived in Rochester last week to investigate the rumors of violation of the game law regarding shooting of ducks on Lake Manitou before sunrise and without a license. At an early hour he appeared at the lake and demanded the licenses of Ed Fieser, Geo. Ream, Charles Bailey and Rex Hunter, of Rochester, and Neal McIntosh, a traveling salesman, of Indianapolis. The Indianapolis man paid his fine, which amounted to $34.55 and continued his journey. Warrants were issued for the others. The charge was hunting before sunrise and without a license.

Surgeons removed a cambric needle threaded with a small piece of thread from just below the knee of Walter T. Boling, of St. Paul. Mr. Boling swallowed the needle when an infant, nearly thirty years ago. The needle never gave him any trouble, although he was treated for bone erysipelas sixteen years ago. About a week ago he was out hunting with a physician and he complained of a sensation as if a brief were pricking him just above the knee. The physician applied local treatment and the pricking ceased for a few days. When the sensation again appeared, this time on the under side of the leg just below the knee, the surgeon cut the flesh open with the result that the needle was removed, it having traveled almost through the length of his body. He is seven feet tall.

Captain Thomas Jefferson Howard, aged 70 years, died last week at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Harry Duffy, in Jeffersonville. He was a clerk for many years on Ohio and Mississippi river steamboats, and was the younger brother of three men who were founders of shipyards in Jeffersonville. Captain Howard served as first clerk on the Robert E. Lee and other river packets, some of them built by his brothers. He served during the war in a Confederate cavalry regiment, and in later years was bookkeeper at Howard's shipyards. Besides a daughter, two sons survive him—Paul Howard and Arthur Howard—both in the boat-building business at Seattle, Wash., where their father located for a short time ten years ago. Captain Howard was born at Cincinnati a few years after his parents came from England.

Three houses near the South Linton mine, one mile south of Linton, sank about five feet last week. The ground is in bad condition and may cave in at any time.

Snooks Brothers' auction sale of loose leaf tobacco at Madison was largely attended. Prices ruled firm. The sale was encouraging to local owners. F. R. Towalter, of the American Tobacco Company, and T. P. Block, head buyer of the Independents, were among the foreign buyers.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The weekly review of Chicago trade, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says: Favorable developments are sustained in the flow of new demands for raw and finished products, and in the high aggregate of solvent payments through the banks and increasing use of money for manufacturing and mercantile purposes, which impart further firmness to current discount rates. A healthy situation in commercial credits is indicated by lower trading defaults. Conditions generally favored wider activity, and with the more settled weather movements of grain, live stock, factory outputs and general merchandise became heavier. The markets for crude materials reflect unusual absorption, and this causes increased efforts to accumulate supplies for the winter consumption.

Retail trade here and at the interior broadens under seasonable weather influences and strong demand for necessaries. Satisfactory mail and road orders maintain a good volume of business in the wholesale branches of dry and fancy goods, holiday novelties, footwear, clothing and food products.

Bank clearings, $269,099,679, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 16 per cent, and compare with $236,701,075 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 21, against 14 last week; 48 in 1908, and 27 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 6, against 3 last week, 13 in 1908, and 8 in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Trade as a whole is good, or better, the former word, in fact, hardly sufficing to characterize the buoyancy and breadth of demand shown in many lines. Industry, in utrn, responds with advices of full manufacturers' order books, full or overtime run, and general reports of an insufficiency of skilled labor to meet requirements. Altogether the situation is, all things considered, a very satisfactory one, and the rate of improvement in the late months of the year promises to place 1909 close to the front in the list of years of prosperity.

A number of mills announce shorter time in operation, the coarser products showing the most strain. Iron and steel are being produced in large volume, though some advices of ease in pig iron are noted.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Oct. 28 were 217, against 244 last week, 241 in the like week of 1908, 223 in 1907, 163 in 1906, and 160 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week numbered 24, which compares with 30 last week and 32 in the same week of 1908.

Kansas City Stock Yards, Nov. 1, 1909. After a good beginning last week in the stocker and feeder trade, demand dropped off a little, and business was dull after the middle of the week. Total shipments to the country for the week were 800 car loads, containing 26,000 cattle, figures a little below the supply for the week, as the hold over at the end of the week was 10,000 head, an increase over close of previous week. Prices were stronger the opening days, but the advance was lost before the close, and some stock cattle sold lower. In some sections grass is gone and feeders are not yet ready to put cattle in the feed lot. However, the demand came from all parts of the feeding country, bulk of the good feeding steers going to Illinois, Indiana and Iowa, stock grades mostly to Missouri and Kansas, where the corn crop is not as heavy as in the more favored states. The run to-day is 19,000 head here, market steady on everything. Stockers and feeders are a little slow to-day, though prices are unchanged, best feeders at $4.90 to $5.40, medium to good feeders $3.90 to $4.75, bulk of the stockers at $4.00 to $4.50, medium to common grades downwards to $3.00, stock cows and heifers $2.75 to $3.75, stock calves $3.25 to $4.75. The feature in the last week has been the large supply from the panhandle and from Colorado, and these sections will furnish good runs till near the end of November. Prime beef steers are selling at record prices, top in the last week at $9.00, but steers of this quality are extremely scarce, bulk of fed steers at $5.25 to $7.00, western grass beef steers, of which there is a good supply coming, $3.75 to $5.25, quarantine steers $3.50 to $4.75, western grass cows and heifers $3.00 to $4.50, bulls $2.75 to $3.50, calves 50 cents to $1.00 lower than a week ago, best veals around $6.00.

The Poultry Yard.

Eighteen hens that were fed milk last winter, laid more eggs than 100 fed on cut bone and meat.

A flock might just as well roost in trees as in a house full of cracks and holes, which chills the birds in spots and produces bad colds.

A hen too fat gets lazy; she takes no interest in life. One too poor cares nothing about her egg record. The happy medium is a happy hen.

Some people are willing to pay an extra price for eggs of one color. Many people get a cent or more a dozen for sorting their hen fruit according to size and color.

On some farms the young chickens are allowed to roost outdoors during the summer and fall. They should at once be trained to winter quarters, and the sooner this is done the better.

I should rather have one happy hen than two grumpy ones. A happy hen is the one that fattens the pocketbook; a hen with a grouch isn't worth her space, no matter what her breed may be.

It is worth the poultry raiser's while to remember that an earth floor is unhealthful when the location is naturally wet and not well drained. With this kind of location it will pay to put in a board floor.

Hens will not lay during the cold months unless given food rich in egg material. I feed wheat and skim-milk, which are splendid egg producing foods; and also include parched corn and Kafir-corn in the bill of fare.

Take no chances by having too many chickens together in one flock. If you see they are getting to be crowded in their winter quarters, make thrift and health a certainty by dividing them up, or selling some of them.

You may have an idea that poultry can hunt their own grit. You are wrong. Grit is as essential as feed. Get a grit box, fill it with crushed rock and oyster-shell, and hang it on the wall where dirt will not be scratched into it.

We know when November arrives that winter is not far off. There will be a number of very nice days this month, and advantage should be taken of good weather for repairing the houses, painting, white-washing, or whatever work might be necessary before real winter comes.

One of the best methods of keeping the poultry house warm in winter at small cost, is to keep the floor well littered with dirt, cut straw, hay or leaves to the depth of from three to six inches. This protects against loss of heat and prevents cold currents from below, and may also be used to scatter the grain in to keep the fowls active.

The Most Remarkable Guarantee Ever Made on a Heating Stove

We have received a letter from the President of the Cole Manufacturing Company which specifically states that they can guarantee Cole's Original Hot Blast Stove to save a third in fuel over any lower draft stove of the same size with soft coal, slack or lignite; it is guaranteed to hold fire from Saturday night until Monday morning; guaranteed to have a smoke-proof feed door; guaranteed to remain air-tight as long as used; guaranteed to give a uniform heat day and night with soft coal, hard coal or lignite; guaranteed to use less hard coal for heating a given space than any base burner with the same size fire pot, and guaranteed to heat the rooms from one to three hours in the morning with the fuel put in the day before (which does away with kindling or rebuilding the fire each morning).

This guarantee comes with Cole's Hot Blast, which can be bought only from us. When you analyze this guarantee and see how they state in black and white just what it will do in comparison with other soft coal stoves, and even with hard coal base burners, it is safe to say that the majority of stoves bought this season for heating purposes will be the famous Cole's Hot Blast, for which we are the exclusive selling agents for this town. We have these stoves on our floor and will be pleased to show them to every one interested. Come soon.

The Bible and Baseball

St. Luke 17—17.

Read St. Luke 11--20.

By Rev. D A J Brown November 7, 1909

The subject that I am about to discuss is not one whether baseball is lawfull or not or whether it was played in bible times or not but can we find names appropiate for the different plays and the necessaries to play baseball with in the bible and after studying the book on this line we find about everything that we need to play baseball with.

First let me call your attention to the scripture that I have read and you will find, where are the nine. To play the regular game of base ball it is necessary to have a nine. Although the league teams comprise as many as two dozen men but only nine can play on a side at a time.

In many of my references I will construe the meaning so as to have it fit the place intended for it.

In this lesson that is brought out in Luke, Christ was passing through the country, doing his father's bidding and when he had passed through Samaria and Galilee to another little village he saw standing afar off ten lepers and they cried master have mercy upon us and Jesus said, "go show thyselves to the priests and as they went (as they obeyed) they were cleansed and one of them when he saw that he was healed turned and glorified God with a loud voice and fell down on his face at the feet of Jesus and rolled in the dust and was glad for he was a Samaritan. Now Jesus said were there not ten cleansed, where are the nine? Why should that man return and give thanks to God. Do you understand that leprosy is the most stubborn disease that we have to contend with and seems to be incurable except through the touch of God. They were standing afar off because the law would not allow them to come near the city and many time hung bells upon them as a warning to the people that they were lepers. While the leprosy kills the body there is hope for the soul but when it comes to sin it is even more dreadful for the reason that it will destroy both soul and body unless we feel the hand of God upon us.

Now that we have a nine it will be necessary to have a pitcher, catcher, a ball, club, bases, umpire, etc.

In Isaiah 22-18 we find that Isaiah in making his prophesies tells the people that God will toss the people like a ball that he will violently take them and toss them like a ball just as the pitcher pitches the ball to-day. So here we have the ball. Next in Deut. 14-20 we find the bat. The club that you strike the ball with.

Zechariah 5 11 furnishes us with the base and of these we need three and a home plate.

Genesis 24-15 we find that Rebecca comes to the well with a pitcher it is evefy day occurence for a girl to be seen with a young man but few are lucky enough to have a pitcher but Rebecca was. She drew water from the well to quench the thirst of the weary travelers, and then they went to the inn and put up for the night but on their return home she went along with them.

After a brief wooing in the evening she married a catcher because he was successful in catching the beautiful Rebekah. So here we have a pitcher and a catcher if you choose to see it that way.

St. Luke 5 10 tell us of the story of the fisherman that had poor luck until Jesus came along and when he saw them washing their nets getting ready to quit he tells them to cast their nets on the other side where it is deep and after that marvelous catch he tells them that he will from henceforth have them to catch men so here we are provided with someone to catch.

In Job 9-33 we are provided with an umpire or daysman one that stands as a judge and is supposed to give fair decisions.

We will now call the bases 1st., or repentance, 2nd., or conversion, 3rd., or baptism and the home plate we will call Heaven, since it is necessary to have base men to fill the bases it is not necessary that they be called base or mean men for they can be good.

The ball is round as you all know and so is the devil, he is round here, there and everywhere shutting men out of their hope of heaven or even trying to be a Christian.

One thing I wish to call your attention to is this that we want men that are ready to do when they are called upon to do.

Now I think we are ready to play ball and the umpire calls (play ball) the Egyptians are the first up and the Israelites are out and the game swings on, the Israelites find that the Egyptians are a hard set to deal with and have a real struggle to be able to do anything with them but they are retired and the Israelites have their inning and fare a little better than their opponents.

Cain, the son of Adam, is the first up to the bat and we find that he makes a base hit, that is, that he slew his brother Abel and made a mean base unmanly hit when he struck his brother down. But let me say that he found a base man, a vicious one to help him and the Devil like the ball always round tried to head him off. The next Genesis 22 tells us that Abraham made a sacrifice, these are timely hits and the man that make the sacrifice he is well thought of among the baseball fans and so Abraham is well thought of because God had instructed him to offer up his son Issac on an altar as a sacrifice. He did not stop to count the cost or to think any sacrifice to dear but went the three days journey and on approaching the mountain left his help behind and with Isaac proceeded to the place God had told him and when the alter had been made he bound Isaac and laid him upon it and as he was about to draw his knife to take Issac life there was a goat in the thicket that bleated and Abraham understood from God that this was the sacrifice so Abraham made a sacrifice.

Now then the next up was Israel or Moses and when it came his turn we find that he made a home run thus we see that from this time on it was a hard struggle until he had gotten past all of the base men and got home. Israel had no easy task of it but had to work for every inch of the ground she possessed. On the other hand the Egyptians were shut out at the game played at the Red Sea and the Israelites were the victors with a score of 3 to 0 in favor of the Israelites.

Let us go back and review this thing and if you will note what I have said about the ball being round like the devil, is it not a fact that let a man try to get to first and the base man with the ball or the base man with the devil will try to shut you out from repenting and keeping you from it and throw you entirely out, it is just as sure as the man tries to keep you from making first base.

Now the second base or let me say conversion that is spoken of so much in the bible it is only too true that here the devil will try to shut you out The runner will attempt to make his second base since he has made first and the base man with the ball will try to head him off and put him out. So their are people just like the devil that when they see a person on the repenting line and going down to be converted they will do their utmost to shut them out from reaching this stage in life. They were never converted, do not believe in it and will hinder all that they can from doing so.

Third, What can we say about the third base, surely it is getting nearer home and something radical must be done and the devil and the base man are all the more alert and they say it is not necessary to go by the third base man to get home but you ask any baseball player and ask him if ever he got a run by going from the second base to the home plate and he will tell you that you must touch the third base before you can get home. Baptizing is not essential.

We are at the home plate now and what are we going to do about that now, we have tried to make it plain to you, because the baseball player knows it is essential to make the tour of the three bases before getting home so I have tried to help you see that to get to heaven and fill all the requirements of the word of God one must repent, be converted, be baptized and go home to glory.

This is not all when we come to sum up the game of ball, while it is essential to have good pitchers and catchers it is also essential to have men who are ready to do something when they are called upon to do so but they need men who will strike at the ball and rap it every chance they can get and to be sure that is the very kind of a christian that I am looking for is one that will take a rap at satan and smash him so hard that it will be a home run for them and that they will never go back to that old sin any more.

We have also the coacher that stands always ready to assist by prayer or kind words the people that are striving to make heaven their home.

Let me also add that the line runs from one base to another are to be run on and not to be played with, that is, the runner cannot run where he chooses but must keep on the line so must we as the christians and the rooters.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE POWER OF A PRESENCE.

By Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin.

"I have set the Lord always before me," Psalm xvi: 8.

There is a timeless element in this little Hebrew poem. We may pass by the questions of authorship, date, historic setting and local coloring. They have a passing interest. The homiletic value lies in the permanent principle. Some soul in that long ago walked the highway of life's experience and left this song for our guidance and inspiration. Since his day, living saint and dying martyr, crowned monarch and homeless wanderer, have caught the note and been comforted in strength. Twice in the Book of Acts this psalm is quoted in reference to Jesus Christ. Even His life felt the pulse beat of this abiding element.

The crisis of experience had brought the Psalmist to this confidence. He had not come to his high place with a bound. He had passed through the vanities and tragedies of life. First, he began as we all do, with the outward emphasis of life. Pleasures and possessions had the first attraction. Then he learned the subtle forces of change and decay, and found that he must shift the emphasis if he would permanently triumph. Disappointment, perplexity, sighing and tears had driven him from temporal ambitions to eternal aspirations. Second, he had noted the tragedies of those men who, in the pursuit of the lower passions, had followed other gods; men whose religion is a driving force, harnessed to their personal desires. The evil issues of such policy has had dramatic illustration in history. This experience drove him in upon God. His soul made its highest choice in Jehovah. God became his dwelling place. Jehovah was a refuge, his satisfying portion and his song. He contemplated nothing beyond God. To him God was all and in all.

It is ever so in the soul's progress. It is the accent of antithesis that makes us wise. We need the sharp contrasts of life. Tribulation and temptation are crucibles in which God's good things are converted into His best things.

Divine immanence was the great secret which the Psalmist discovered. When Jacob awoke at Bethel he was surprised, and said: "The Lord is in this place, and I knew it not." He had localized God to certain times and places. This Psalmist saw Him ever before him—in nature, history, providence and experience. And that consciousness became the dominant note of his life.

This sense of the divine presence becomes a hidden motive in life. We are constantly broken between surprise and disappointment, as our fellow-men rise above or fall below our expectations. Saul, with all the emoluments of royalty, is bitterly disappointing; while David, a hunted fugitive, is splendidly surprising. So, frequently, people whose surroundings should cradle contentment chill us with murmuring complaint. And others whose circumstances might nurse a bitterness will sing us into good cheer. The motive is hidden from view.

Every religious hero knows the motive power of the divine presence. Faith is the sense of the unseen. This was the secret of Abraham's greatness. Lot walked by the shrewdness of the visible, while Abraham set the Lord before him. Of Moses it is written: "He endured as seeing Him who is invisible." This is only a paraphrase on the text. This same consciousness underlay the achievements of Joshua, Samuel, David and the prophets. In the Book of Daniel it is written: "The people that do know their God shall do exploits."

This presence is a power. Every presence is a stimulating and a restraining influence. Some personalities stimulate our evil propensities and chill the good, while others draw forth our virtues and check our vices. When the consciousness of the Lord's presence is upon us, our better self is developed and our evil is mortified. Before we can deliberately indulge wrong we must forget and rid ourselves of the sense of God's presence. And that void is the very essence of atheism. Not a man with sincere intellectual embarrassments concerning God, but the man who lives and acts as though there were no God, this man is the practical atheist who meets condemnation.

The issues of this presence are practical and inspiring.

Such a soul cannot be moved. It finds no immunity from the temptations and sorrows of life, but it knows the secret of strength. When Joseph was tempted, the Lord was with him, and His presence made him strong unto victory. When Paul was afflicted, the Lord stood with him and made his suffering a crucible of glory. The power of His presence will bring us off more than conquerors.

It is the inspiration of hope. Though we go down into the valley of the shadow of death, His presence is with us and He will turn the shadow into day. Our outer form may perish, but our inner personality shall be clothed with immortality, and we shall enter upon the larger enjoyment of the pleasures that are at His right hand, and the fullness of joy that is ever in His presence.

PROGRESS SHOULD WORK GOOD.

By Rev. J. Lyon Caughey.

And after the fire, a still small voice.—I. Kings 14:12.

This passage in the Book of Kings from which our text is taken seems to me to describe the conditions under which we have been living in this city recently and at the same time to indicate what ought to follow after the great celebration.

The celebration has been a wonderful display of material advancement and achievement, of scientific progress and development. But is this after all the matter of greatest importance? We have a great many things that the men and women of 300 years ago did not possess, but are we any better men and women than they were?

We live a great deal faster than they did; but do we lead any better or more useful lives? We have made a great many improvements in our manner of living, but have we made any great improvement in our characters?

These are the questions we ought to be asking ourselves if we are to make any comparison between ourselves and the men and women of 300 years ago, for spiritual and not material development is the real test of progress. What does it matter if we have bigger and better boats than Hudson and Fulton ever dreamed of if we are not better fitted to sail the seas of eternity? What does it matter if soldiers do march in splendid array along the streets if they are not good soldiers in the battle of life? What does it matter if men do learn to fly in the air? Will they ever be able with their airships and aeroplanes to fly up to heaven? What does it matter if we are richer than the men and women of long ago if we are not richer toward God?

All this modern material progress is of very little value unless it helps to make better men and women, unless it enables and inspires us to live larger and nobler lives, unless it brings us into closer fellowship with God and makes us more worthy to enter into the life eternal.

We have enjoyed the festivity and the excitement, the naval and military display, the varied and kaleidoscopic scenes, but no one except children would like to have the fun and festivity continue indefinitely. Most of us are glad that the end has come. The rush and hurry of the holiday season soon become monotonous and barren of interest.

It is significant, I think, that a young society woman should have announced in the midst of the season of festivity her dissatisfaction and disgust with a life devoted to the pleasures of society.

"No life is so monotonous and dull as modern society life," she says, "and I am determined to make something different of myself."

The young woman's sense of dissatisfaction helps to reveal the emptiness of a life given over wholly to selfish pleasures. Life is empty and barren of any real happiness without something worth while to do for the glory of God and the good of our fellow men.

God, help us to listen for the still small voice in our souls, the voice of duty, the voice of unselfishness, the voice of the spirit of God.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

LEAD KINDLY LIGHT.

By Cardinal John Henry Newman.

[John Henry Newman (London, Feb. 21, 1801—Edgbaston, Aug. 11, 1890), well known as a writer and an ecclesiastic, has yet found far greater fame as the author of this single hymn. He was educated at Ealing and at Trinity, Oxford, and in 1824 was ordained to the ministry in the English church. Twenty-one years later, after a long period of stress of mind and conflict with doubt, he went into the church of Rome. A particularly trying time of religious perplexity led to the writing of this hymn, which was first published as a poem, under the title, "Light in Darkness." Born of such an experience, it has become the hymn not only of those who wander in religious unrest, but of all who are in darkness of any kind. It is sung at by far the greater number of funerals, and its general use after great disasters, as in the services following the Iroquois fire, entitles it to be known as our National Anthem of Consolation. Besides this, its catholicity of spirit has caused it to be sung in churches and gatherings of every sect under the sun. It is commonly sung to the tune, "Lux Benigna," by J. B. Dykes.]

Lead, kindly light! amid th' encircling gloom,
Lead thou me on;
The night is dark, and I am far from home,
Lead thou me on;
Keep thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene; one step enough for me.

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that thou
Shouldst lead me on;
I loved to choose and see my path; but now
Lead thou me on;
I loved the garish day, and spite of fears,
Pride ruled my will. Remember not past years.

So long thy power has blessed me, sure it still
Will lead me on
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone;
And with the morn those angel faces smile
Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile!

Little Laughs

A Useful Garment.

Clothier—Were you pleased with the overcoat which I sold you?

Customer—Oh, yes; all my boys have worn it.

"Well, think of that!"

"I do. Every time after a rain the next smaller one has to take it."—Answers.

An Indiscreet Memory.

The Hostess—Don't you think Col. Broadside is quite a wonderful old man? Look at him. He is as straight and slender as an arrow, and he has the most wonderful memory.

The Lady of Dubious Age—I think he's an atrocious old bore. He remembers when everybody was born.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Bad Outlook for Cholly.

Maud—Has Cholly Sapleigh a sister?

Ethel—No, but he will have one if he proposes to me.—Boston Transcript.

An Advance of Savagery.

Mr. Grump (a savage bachelor)—I don't see why a man should get married when a good parrot can be bought for $25.

Miss Readywitt—As usual we women are at a disadvantage. A grizzly bear can't be bought for many times that.—Boston Transcript.

Classified.

"What a very large and formidable wife little Simpkins has."

"Yes, she's one of the Dreadnoughts of her sex."

"And what's Simpkins?"

After the Cheese.

The Effect of Heredity.

The Duck—Your latest youngster seems to be a spoilt child.

The Hen—Yes, poor thing; he was hatched from a spoiled egg.

But Not Before.

"Are you humorists ever humorous in daily life?"

"Oh, yes," replied the professional. "After I have published an idea in verse, as an anecdote and as an epigram I introduce it into my ordinary conversation sometimes." — Louisville Courier-Journal.

Well Equipped.

A Methodist bishop was recently a guest at the home of a friend who had two charming daughters. One morning the bishop, accompanied by the two young ladies, went out in the hope of catching some trout. An old fisherman, out for the same purpose, wishing to appear friendly, called out:

"Ketchin' many, pard?"

The Bishop, drawing himself to his full height, replied, "Brother, I am a fisher of men."

"You've got the right kind of bait all right," was the fisherman's rejoinder.—Success Magazine.

Childhood's Innocence.

"What are you doing in my orchard?"

"If you please, ma'am, I just came to see if you would lend me a few apples."—Punch.

Very Likely.

"What do you suppose the doctors will think of this new theory that entirely too many operations are performed?"

"They will probably be more cut up than their patients."—Baltimore American.

Easiest Way.

Bill—I never sleep at Sunday chapel any more.

Jack—Broken yourself of the habit?

Bill—No; quit goin'.—Princeton Tiger.

Mistook His Man.

Confidence Man—Why, how do you do, Mr. Wilson. I met you last——

Westerner—See here, young fellow, my name ain't Wilson. My name's John Jones, alias Pete Rodney, alias Jim Hall, alias Joe Peters. So you better move on."—Western Times.

The Kind Needed.

"What kind of a mat ought this photograph of Miss Oldgirl have to look pretty?" said the fashionable photographer, pensively.

"Of course, you know your business best," said his pretty office assistant, "but I can't imagine any other kind than a diplomat."—Baltimore American.

Hopeless of Any Tips.

For four consecutive nights the hotel man had watched his fair, timid guest fill her pitcher at the water cooler.

"Madam," he said on the fifth night, "if you would ring, this would be done for you."

"But where is my bell?" asked the lady.

"That the bell!" she exclaimed. "Why, the boy told me that was the fire alarm, and that I wasn't to touch it on any account."—Success Magazine.

They Came After Rest.

"Gosh, I guess those city folks meant what they said when they told us that they came up here to get a good rest."

"They're taking it easy, eh?"

"Taking it easy? I should say they are! Would you believe it—not a one of 'em has got out of bed before 6 o'clock any morning since they've been here!"—Detroit Free Press.

Unusual Luck.

"So you've rented that haunted house which was on your hands so long?"

"Yes; rented it to an actor."

"Did he find out its reputation?"

"That's the very thing which decided him to take the house."

"Rather surprising!"

"He said it would be such a comfort for him to get inside of a house where the ghost walked every night."—Baltimore American.

Saving Trouble.

"Which side are you on in this Peary-Cook controversy?"

"Well, I haven't taken sides as yet."

"Better take sides. If you don't you'll have to listen to the arguments of both factions."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Reply Candid.

"Say, Jimmy."

"What, Billy?"

"Daisy's beau was over to our house the other night, and he asked me, he did: 'Jimmy, if your aunt's child is your cousin, what will I be if I marry your sister?'"

"Were you able to give the correct answer?"

"Yep; I told him he would be a chump."

BULGING GUN BARRELS.

The Ruin That Is Wrought by Careless Handling.

I have sold guns for ten years, and in that time four of them have had their barrels bulged, one by snow, one by dirt, one by sand and one by something else getting into it. One man crawling through a fence got a little snow in the muzzle. He could not remove it with his finger, so concluded to wait and shoot it out, which he did, but he found a bulge like a pullet's egg on the end of the barrel. Another got some earth in the muzzle and shot it out, and he, too, found the same kind of a bulge on the end of his gun. Another fired his gun at ducks, which knocked him over on his back and fairly got away from him. When he picked up the gun he found a narrow raised band around the barrel fourteen inches from the muzzle. In this case a wad had probably lodged there. This customer thinks the manufacturers ought to give him a new set of barrels. I tell him if the barrels had not been good ones it would have been a burst instead of a bulge, which might have maimed or killed him. Another man lying on a point brought down a duck with a broken wing which scurried for the water. The man ran and struck the duck with the muzzle of the gun and in so doing got sand in it. He blew most of it out and shot out the rest of it. Well, after that shot he found a little blister two inches from the muzzle about the size of a man's little finger.

Thirty years of unparalleled success confirms the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to cure female diseases. The great volume of unsollcited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

What has become of the old-fashioned woman who rolled her work apron in a bundle, and went over to a neighbor's to spend the day?

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM should always be in the medicine closet of the mother whose children have croup. Its freedom from opium makes it an ideal children's remedy.

Wants Jury of His Peers.

"I have been engaged in the practice of law a good many years," said S. S. Urmy, police judge of Topeka, Kan., "and about the most humorous thing I ever saw in a courtroom was in Topeka.

"One day an old negro man was being tried in the justice court—that was before the office of police judge was created—and he demanded a trial by a jury of his peers. He could neither read nor write, and his lawyer insisted that the jury, to be his peers, as required by the law, must be unable to read or write, too. To avoid disputes I agreed to it, but we had a time finding twelve men in Topeka who could neither read nor write. But we did find them, and the case went to trial.

"Before the jury retired I took two pieces of paper and wrote 'guilty' on one piece and 'not guilty' on the other and instructed the foreman of the jury to destroy the one he did not wish to be used and to return the other to me when the jury had reached a verdict. The jury was out only a few minutes, when it came in. The foreman handed me a piece of paper with the word 'guilty' written on it.

"'Well, gentlemen, you find him guilty, do you?' I asked.

"'No, sah, jedge, no, sah, we done found him not guilty,' spoke up one of the jurymen. Then he added with disgust: 'I tole that fool nigger he was tearin' up the wrong piece of paper.'"—Kansas City Star.

THE DIFFERENCE.

Coffee Usually Means Sickness, but Postum Always Means Health.

Those who have never tried the experiment of leaving off coffee and drinking Postum in its place and in this way regaining health and happiness can learn much from the experience of others who have made the trial.

One who knows says: "I drank coffee for breakfast every morning until I had terrible attacks of indigestion producing days of discomfort and nights of sleeplessness. I tried to give up the use of coffee entirely, but found it hard to go from hot coffee to a glass of water. Then I tried Postum.

"It was good and the effect was so pleasant that I soon learned to love it and have used it for several years. I improved immediately after I left off coffee and took on Postum and am now entirely cured of my indigestion and other troubles all of which were due to coffee. I am now well and contented and all because I changed from coffee to Postum.

"Postum is much easier to make right every time than coffee, for it is so even and always reliable. We never use coffee now in our family. We use Postum and are always well."

"There's a reason" and it is proved by trial.

The learned writers for the press
  Are very, very good
At proving how we waste on dress
  Or furbelows or food.
Each writer new who makes his bow
  With other sages vies
To show unhappy mortals how
  They may economize.

They tell us of the thrifty French,
  Who all excesses shun.
But I'm not anxious to retrench;
  It isn't any fun.
I'm weary of this endless song;
  I wish some seer wise
Would show us how to get along
  And not economize.

Fine Recipe for Colds.

Any druggist can supply these ingredients, or he will get them from his wholesale house.

"Mix half pint of good whiskey; two ounces of glycerine; half ounce of Concentrated pine compound. Shake the bottle well each time and use in doses of a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful four times a day." This prescription is said to work wonders.

The Concentrated pine is a special pine product and comes only in half ounce bottles, each enclosed in an air-tight case, but be sure it is labeled "Concentrated" in order to get the genuine article.

Before 1880 most English railway carriages had only four wheels, and weighed ten tons. From 1880 to 1890 they had six wheels, and weighed fifteen or sixteen tons; from 1890 to 1900 they had eight wheels, and weighed twenty-four tons; and since 1900 the fashion is twelve wheels for dining and sleeping cars, and the weight is thirty-five to forty-two tons.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure Send for circulars, free.

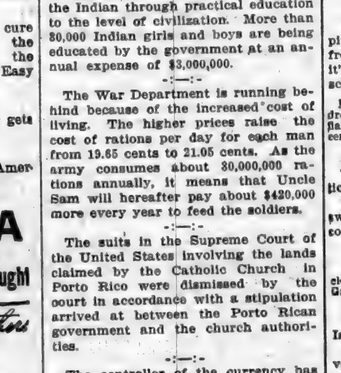
HOLLAND MEDICINE COMPANY, SCRANTON, PA.



The commission sent by Congress to Liberia in answer to an appeal from that country to save it from assimilation by France and Great Britain has just reported, recommending the help asked for. Some interesting facts and figures are given. There are 40,000 Liberians, that is, descendants of civilized negroes, and 150,000 native negroes. The former live in towns along the coast and rivers that very much resemble the negro towns of our own Southern States. They occupy themselves mainly with trading with the natives in natural products which thy export. They have schools, but no railroads; their towns are fairly well governed and fairly clean. The government is a republic, in fact as well as name. The country needs protection from encroachments on her territory, and also money and business management if it is to survive as an independent nation.

Notwithstanding the fact that 45,312 veteran pensioners of Uncle Sam died during the past fiscal year, and over 3,000 more were dropped from the rolls from other causes, the amount paid out in pensions during that year was larger than for any preceding year; the amount was $161,973,703. Commissioner Warner explains these facts by showing that a large number of new pensioners were placed on the rolls by the act of February 6, 1907, granting $12, $15 and $20 to survivors of the war with Mexico and the Civil War on reaching the ages of 62, 70 and 75, regardless of injuries having been received.

-:—:-

Postmaster General Hitchcock does not overlook the value of the cat in the postal service and, during the present fiscal year, the postoffice department will spend approximately $135 for cat meat. Cats are recognized by the department as employes, and so carried on the rolls. They are used in the postoffices to minimize the depredations of rats and mice, and have saved a large amount of money to the government.

A recent report from Washington shows that contrary to the common belief the number of Indians in this country is not decreasing, but has increased some 40,000 in the past twenty years. The increase is attributed to the government's efforts to raise the Indian through practical education to the level of civilization. More than 30,000 Indian girls and boys are being educated by the government at an annual expense of $3,000,000.

The War Department is running behind because of the increased cost of living. The higher prices raise the cost of rations per day for each man from 19.65 cents to 21.05 cents. As the army consumes about 30,000,000 rations annually, it means that Uncle Sam will hereafter pay about $420,000 more every year to feed the soldiers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

The Russell-Miller Milling Company, a North Dakota corporation, has filed with the Secretary of State of Minnesota notice of an increase in its Minnesota capital stock of $475,000.

In order to replenish the depleted supply of corn in the republic of Mexico, the duty on that serial from the United States has been temporarily rescinded. Owing to severe drouths throughout the corn belt of Northern Mexico, followed by floods, both the growing crop and the supplies of corn in storage have been reduced to such an extent as to entail high prices and actual suffering.

The orange and lemon growers of Southern California have raised a fund of $50,000 to fight the Southern Pacific and other roads, which they say are taking all their profits in exorbitant transportation rates. Acting for the citrus growers in the fight, Senator Flint will, as soon as Congress meets, introduce a bill prohibiting railroads from raising their rates without the consent of the interstate commerce commission.

The new State Agricultural school at Morris, which was given by the government to Minnesota, will not be opened until next autumn. The Indians who were government wards there have returned to their respective homes at the reservation, and the buildings will stand vacant during the present school year because the State Legislature failed to make provision for sufficient funds to carry on the agricultural work there the present year.

Indians on the Cheyenne reservation were much interested in the Gas Belt exposition at Pierre, S. D., and made elaborate arrangements for exhibiting their agricultural products there.

Twenty-two hundred and fifty combined harvesting machines, operated by steam, gasoline, horses and mules, and 60,000 men were required to garner the wheat crop, estimated at 60,000,000 bushels, in Washington, Oregon and Idaho last season. The value of this crop is placed at from $45,000,000 to $50,000,000.

RASH ALL OVER BODY.

Awful, Crusted, Weeping Eczema on Little Sufferer—A Score of Treatments Prove Dismal Failures—Cure Achieved by Cuticura.

"My little boy had an awful rash all over his body and the doctor said it was eczema. It was terrible and used to water awfully. Any place the water went it would form another sore and it would become crusted. A score or more physicians failed utterly and dismally in their efforts to remove the trouble. Then I was told to use the Cuticura Remedies. I got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and before we had used half the Resolvent I could see a change in him. In about two months he was entirely well. George L. Lambert, 139 West Centre St., Mahanoy City, Pa., Sept. 26 and Nov. 4, 1907."

  Man is no fish.

And so a street car line, you see,
  May business find,
No matter what conditions be

HELPLESS WITH RHEUMATISM.

The Experience of Many Who Do Not Know the Kidneys Are Weak.

Jacob C. Bahr, 18 Broadway, Lebanon, Ohio, says: "For three months I was helpless in bed with muscular rheumatism and had to be fed. My feet swelled, my legs were rigid, black spots flitted before my eyes and I was sore all over. Doctors didn't help me and I couldn't raise hand or foot. To please my wife I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, and in two weeks I was improving. Then by leaps and bounds I got better until well and back at work. After such mortal agony this seemed wonderful."

A Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs.

Constipation is the most unclean uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

Once more the International Live Stock Exposition, which will be held in Chicago from Nov. 27 to Dec. 10, has accomplished the seemingly impossible by again showing a most phenomenal increase in entries. Once more all past records have been demolished and once more we are brought to realize that interest is growing in this, the greatest of live stock shows—this leading exponent of the live stock industry—and that this great annual event is becoming more popular from year to year. Even though feeding operations have been exceedingly light during the past year, we still find an increased number of entries in the cattle department. The draft horse exhibit will be the greatest ever seen in this or any other country. Horses, whose lineage dates back into the dark ages, will be seen in the ring beside the most splendid specimens of the English and Scottish types, whose equals have never before been brought together in such numbers in the history of the show ring. The number of exhibitors in the sheep department exceeds that of any previous year, and in quality their exhibits will far surpass anything ever seen here in the past, as the entries show them to contain some of the choicest importations made in this country in recent years. In the swine department all the leading types will again be represented and the quality will be superior to that of any show ever seen on this continent. All these and many other new features give promise of making the coming exposition the greatest in the history of this splendid series of events, and no one, be he ever so distantly connected with live stock—the right arm of our basic industry, agriculture—can afford to miss this exceptional opportunity for education, entertainment and a pleasure trip in one.

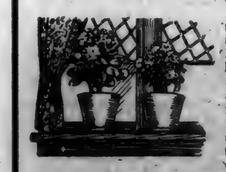
Plants never freeze in a home heated by Cole's Hot Blast

You know where plants never freeze it doesn't get cold.

Cole's Hot Blast maintains a continuous fire; it will hold fire from Saturday night to Monday morning; it will keep fire over night with a hat full of coal. With this stove you need only open a draft in the morning and the rooms are quickly heated with fuel put in the evening before. No other stove does this.



Cole's Hot Blast stove saves half the soft coal or slack or lignite, because it burns the gas as it arises from coal, and as gas is half the fuel in coal, Cole's Hot Blast makes soft coal, slack or lignite go twice as far as any ordinary stove.

$12 up

In an ordinary stove the gas (half the heat value) arises from the coal as the coal burns and the gas goes right on up the chimney. In Cole's Hot Blast the hot blast draft on top of the fire burns the coal from the top — burns the gas. Makes the coal last twice as long.

The unequaled fuel saving, the heat radiation, the even temperature, the holding of fire, are all the result of the patented features in the construction of this remarkable stove which cannot be used in making any other stove; and to the Patented Hot Blast draft which burns the wasting gases in the fuel. Soft coal, as you know, is half gas. The make-up of the stove is interesting.

Attempting to make some electrical connections on his car and failing to to pull down the connecting switch, Andrew Mong, a motorman on the Toledo & Chicago Interurban railway, residing at Kendallville, was electrocuted at 4:20 at Huntertown, Sunday afternoon in the presence of a number of citizens and his fellow workmen. The distressing accident occurred in front of the Interurban station and he met his death so quickly that there was no chance for him to escape. 23,000 volts passed through his body, making him unconscious. He was carried into the station and died in a few minutes Motorman Mong had only been running on this division but a short time and was not fully acquainted with the equipment that is used by the T. & C. I. company. He was about forty years old, and has a family which resides at Kendallville.

At the union meeting at the Christian church, last Sunday evening a large audience greeted Mrs. Perkins of Ft. Wayne, who spoke at length on temperance work in Indiana. Mrs Perkins showed great familiarity with the subject in hand and gave an interesting talk emphasising the fact that the legalized saloon is the greatest menance to the peace-prosperity of our glorious state of Indiana. She was followed by Rev. Brown, who dealt some hard raps to the arguments of the wet advocates. The program was further enlived by three excellent solos, one by Lester Blackman of Kendallville, a violin solo by Miss Fuchsia Hadsell of Peru, and a vocal solo by Miss Bessie May, the latter two together with Miss Nellie Blackburn are members of the Crescent Concert Company. The meeting was dismissed by Rev. McCain of this place.

The Webster New International Dictionary has just been issued and is being placed on the market by their agents. Mr. W. E. Metcalf of near Leo is representing the company in this territory and is being very successful in placing the new book with the different teachers of the township and city schools. The edition far surpasses any previous edition and it contains at least 200,000 new words over their last edition. In all there are 400,000 defined words and phrases. It can also be said that the general information of value to more people than any other dictionary. The book is a handsome volume and contains about 3,000 pages with 6,000 illustrations. The most pleasing feature of the book is that of the divided pages in which the upper portion of the page contains the important words while the lower part contains the less important words. The information in this book would certainly be of interest to a teacher and the book is beautifully bound and would adorn any library.

Merritt Sechler and lady friends of Butler, spent Sunday with his parents at this place. Upon their return home in the evening they met with quite an accident near the creek bridge east of town. Just as they were approaching the bridge from the west, another rig came on the bridge and in their attempt to pass Mr Sechler's horse became unmanagable and at once backed them over the embankment on the south. The buggy was damaged considerable and one of the ladies was injured but not serious.

Monday, November 15th., at the home of Mr. Nelson Scholes, was the scene of a happy gathering in honor of his 90th birthday. Friends and relatives numbering twenty assembled at his home and partook of a bountiful dinner, which was greatly enjoyed by all. Those present were Mrs. John Swaidner and daughter of Hicksville, Lucinda Braybrook, Lorenzo Swaidner and wife, Emma Abel and daughter Gertrude Woodcox, Charles Tustison and wife, Susie Scholes and daughter Mary, Ida Williams and son Mark, Ole Braybrook and wife and Earl Tustison and wife. A post card shower was one of the main features of the day. He received twenty-four beautiful birthday cards. This event came as a surprise to Mr. Scholes and was greatly appreciated by him.

Culture Club

The Ladies of the Culture Club entertained their husbands and friends November 10, '09, at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Leighty. Promptly at 8:00 o'clock the program commenced and music, speeches, and readings were rendered to which all listened attentively. At the conclusion of the program the gentlemen were ushered upstairs to indulge in a shooting contest. Mahlon Baker being the best marksman won the prize. While the gentleman were thus engaged, the ladies were in another room doning masks, the gentlemen then drawing numbers matched them with the masked ladies, in failing to guess who their partner was, they were fined. Much merriment was caused by the guessing. Then all returned downstairs where the rooms had been transformed into a banquet room with the tables beatifully decorated to which a two course luncheon was served consisting of, first course, chicken sandwich, potato salad, mixed pickles, beet salad, nuts and fruit, second course, ice cream, cake, marguerites and coffee. After luncheon several fine selections were rendered on the piano by the Misses Lola Nimmons and Flossie Copp. The out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beams of Spencerville and Miss Lola Nimmons of Butler. At a late hour the guests departed voting the ladies royal entertainers.

Take Audience by storm

The people of St. Joe and vicinity are indeed grateful to the Coburntown Farmers Band for the splendid entertainment furnished by the Crescent Concert Company, last Saturday evening. This entertainment was one of the best, if not the best of its kind ever given in St. Joe, and to say that the large crowd which greeted them most thoroughly enjoyed it, is putting it mildly. Miss Bessie May, soprano soloist, captivated the audience by her perfectly natural manner, and the ease in which her selections were rendered made her work exceedingly interesting to all. Miss Blackburn, the pianiste and Miss Hadsell, violinist, have appeared before St. Joe audiences a number of times and have always been strong favorites, acquitting themselves in their usual pleasing manner, arousing the enthusiasm which could not fail to delight the heart of any artist. Miss Carrie Moon, the reader, gave her selections with such an intensity of feeling, perfectly adapting herself to the spirit and theme of each selection, moving her audience at will from laughter to tears. Thus proving herself to be one of the most versatile readers that ever appeared before an audience at this place.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Fourteen Killed in Trolley Crash.

A runaway car crashed into crowded passenger car on the British Columbia Electric railway's interurban line near Vancouver, B. C. Fourteen persons were killed, including the motorman and conductor of the freight car. The passengers were mostly workingmen bound for New Westminster. Seven were injured, two perhaps fatally. Every person in the passenger car was killed or injured. The passenger car left the Vancouver station just behind an electric freight train consisting of a locomotive box car and flat car laden with heavy timbers. Three miles out, at the head of a grade, which the freight cars had just ascended, the coupling of the lumber car broke and with tremendous speed it started back toward the city. When the runaway lumber car crashed into the passenger car the heavy timbers slid forward and ripped the passenger car level with the floorr.

Crossed Wires Cause Big Fire.

Fire at Terre Haute, Ind., destroyed the Coliseum Theatre and half a block of the downtown district and seriously injured two firemen. It is believed to have been caused by crossed wires in the Coliseum. The building burned so rapidly that all efforts of the department to check it were in vain, and there was difficulty in saving the surrounding property. A falling wall caught two firemen, Arthur Ballinger, severely injured internally, and John Bayless, leg broken. They were got out immediately, but both were badly burned. The livery barn owned by June Harlan, separated from the Coliseum by an alley, was destroyed, though the horses were all got out alive. The loss on the Coliseum is put at $17,000 and on the barn at $3,000, exclusive of vehicles and harness, most of it covered by insurance.

New Five-Cent Piece.

Dies for a proposed 5-cent piece, bearing the head of George Washington, to take the place of the coin now in circulation, have been prepared by the engravers of the United States mint in Philadelphia, Pa. If the Treasury Department adopts this coin, it will be the first in authorized circulation to bear the head of the first President of the republic.

Lafayette Fire Causes Hotel Panic.

Guests at the Hotel Lahr in Lafayette, Ind., were frightened so that a panic was narrowly averted when a fire broke out in the Milwaukee block, on Columbia street, gutting the portion occupied by the Duffy-Means Candy Company, entailing a loss of more than $20,000. The fire was confined chiefly to the candy factory.

King Edward Is Sixty-Eight.

Hamburg Belle, Worth $50,000, Dead.

Though brought south to escape the rigors of a northern winter, Hamburg Belle, the famous trotter, died at the stock farm of her owner near Thomasville, Ga., of pneumonia. The mare had just been delivered at the farm. The animal was bought by Mel Hanna, of Cleveland, Ohio, a few months ago for $50,000.

Attempt to Rob Train.

An attempt to rob New York Central train No. 24, the American Express, between Lyons and Syracuse, N. Y., was frustrated and two men were arrested at the point of guns. A third is believed to have fallen under the train and was killed.

Waiter Left Fortune of $500,000.

Tips and his savings were so wisely invested by James Thielman, head waiter at Delmonicas, in New York City, that when he died recently he left an estate valued at half a million dollars.

Grace Van Studdiford Divorced.

Judge Wuerdeman has granted a decree of divorce to Grace Van Studdiford, now a comic opera star, from Charles Van Studdiford, at St. Louis, Mo. The suit was filed several weeks ago.

President Taft at Home.

WRECKERS DERAIL A TRAIN.

Nickel Plate Fast Passenger Crashes Into Building Near Cleveland.

East-bound passenger train No. 2, from Chicago, on the Nickel Plate road, was wrecked by train wreckers Friday night west of Willoughby station, a few miles from Cleveland. Two men were fatally hurt and at least a dozen others suffered serious injury. Near the track were found a crow bar and monkey wrench evidently used by the train wreckers to accomplish their purpose.

Running at perhaps fifty miles an hour, three of the coaches were derailed and the engine overturned and demolished. The engineer was probably fatally injured and the fireman seriously hurt. One man's back was broken and many others suffered minor injuries.

The three cars derailed were the smoker and two other coaches immediately behind the engine. Nearly every passenger in these was injured. The baggage car dashed into a hoop mill at the side of the track and demolished it. Portions of the falling building landed on the wrecked engine and were set afire. The flames communicated to some of the coaches, but the Willoughby fire department responded and quenched the flames.

IDENTIFIED AS MAIL ROBBER.

Man Held for Express Hold-Up Accused of Daring Deed in 1908.

Charles D. Howell, charged with holding up the clerks in the Great Northern Express office in Seattle, Wash., and stealing $12,000 a short time ago, was identified the other day as the bandit who impersonated a postal inspector, boarded a Great Northern mail car at Bonners Ferry, Idaho, March 15, 1908, and rifled the registered mail. J. H. Hoagland, a hotel man of Bonners Ferry, and J. W. Nystuin, a mail clerk, identified Howell. The bandit boarded the westbound Oriental limited as it pulled out of the Idaho town, and, holding up the two mail clerks at the point of a revolver, locked one of them in a clothes closet and tied the other to a chair. Then he rode 109 miles to Spokane, devoting four hours to rifling mail and loading and unloading sacks along the way.

SAFE BLOWER GETS $10,000.

Loots Strong Box in Residence After Struggle with Aged Woman.

Cash and bonds amounting to nearly $10,000 were stolen from the home of Schuyler Ranier, aged 72 years, in Burlington, N. J., by a masked bandit. The robber, after locking the aged farmer's housekeeper in her room, blew the safe open with dynamite, hastily gathered the contents, and departed without leaving a trace of his whereabouts. Mrs. Jane Nickson, an aged woman, the only occupant of the house at the time, is in a critical condition from shock and her desperate struggle with the bandit.

THEATER BURNS; MAN MISSING.

Fire in Terre Haute Leads to Injury and Perhaps Loss of Life.

One man is believed to have been burned to death and three were seriously injured in a fire that destroyed the Coliseum Theater and June Harlan's livery stable in Terre Haute, Ind. The man unaccounted for was a stable hand. Arthur Ballinger and John Bayless, firemen, were caught by a falling wall. Fred Osborn, stableman, was trampled by a horse. Osborn and others dashed among the plunging horses in the stable and drove them all out. The total loss is $25,000.

ELEVEN DIE IN SEA COLLISION.

Two Vessels Go Down Off Block Island and Crews Perish.

Belated news of a disaster at sea, in which probably eleven lives were lost, was brought to New York Tuesday. Six of the victims were members of the crew of the barkentine John S. Bennett, bound from New York to Halifax with a cargo of coal, and were drowned early Monday morning when the vessel was sunk in a collision off Block island with a four-masted schooner, supposed to be the Merrill C. Hart of Thomaston, Me. The schooner also is believed to have been lost, with all her crew of five men.

Name New Kansas Town Taft.

Because William Howard Taft's special train was held up a few minutes by a block signal five miles west of Kingsley, Kan., during the last Presidential campaign, the new town of Taft has just been placed on the map and, though not a week old, already has a population of three.

Storm Causes $500,000 Fire.

Lightning struck and set fire to the Gulf Refining Company's 55,000-barrel tank of naphtha at Port Arthur, Tex. The oil tanks of the Texas Company, containing about 325,000 barrels of crude oil, were set on fire also by lightning. The total loss is $500,000.

Ball Player Dies of Hurt.

From injuries sustained in a baseball game last April Walter Brazill, aged eighteen, son of John J. Brazill, died at his home in Toledo, O. He injured his knee in sliding for a base. He died after much suffering.

Boat Bottom Drops Out; 2 Die.

While fishing at Frankfort, Ky., Patrick Cushing and James Sullivan were drowned in the Kentucky River. The bottom of their boat dropped out. Two companions managed to swim ashore.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Dr. Robert Smith, aged 85, one of the three Mexican War veterans in the county, fell in the street near his home in Greenfield and suffered injuries that may prove serious.

It became necessary to break a bone in the left ankle of Clifford Pope, aged 5 years, son of Mrs. William Joiner, of Columbus, when two surgeons performed an operation to straighten a crooked ankle. The ankle had been diseased since infancy. The operation was successful and the child's foot was placed in a cast.

Alfred E. Branson, a photographer of Rays Crossing, just east of Shelbyville, takes great pleasure in picturing nature in all its varied and interesting moods. On a recent excursion into the large woods on the farm of Jacob Keppie, a mile south of the little village, he found a hornets' nest. The nest is fifteen inches long and thirty-six inches in circumference. It was attached to a small shrub about three feet in height, and it has many little live occupants.

A remarkable oil well was drilled in by the Murphy Oil Company on Fred Butler's farm near Petersburg, estimated at 2,500 barrels daily. On being shot a column of oil rose ten feet above the casing for several minutes, and gradually higher until it knocked the pulley from the top of the derrick, broke one of the legs and came near wrecking it. The flow continued for a half hour, oil running over the ground from the well in a great stream. It is the best well in the county.

Armed to the teeth and looking more like walking arsenals than schoolboys, Theodore Adler, aged 12, 1451 East Fifty-seventh street, and Charles Olsen, aged 12, 5640 Lake avenue, of Chicago, were captured by the Hammond police while they were on their way to the Calumet sand dunes to hunt Indians. The police say the lads stole money to enable them to make the trip. They were returned to the Hyde Park police station.

Some little one who has been inspired to take time by the forelock has just written the first letter of the season to "Santa Claus," the missive having turned up at the Fort Wayne postoffice within the past day or two. Each year brings a flood of letters of this kind, but they rarely start coming so long before Christmas as in the present instance. Under the law the Postmaster is required to forward them to the dead letter office at Washington.

The annual fall flower show of the Northern Indiana Hospital for the Insane was held recently. Gustav Minx, a florist, who last year developed what is said to be the only green chrysanthemum ever grown in the country, was in charge. The floral display consisted mostly of chrysanthemums of different varieties. Hundreds of Logansport and Cass County people visited the hospital and inspected the display. The patients were permitted to attend the show and enjoy the flowers.

Nellie Jackson, a young girl living in Logansport, narrowly escaped electrocution when she leaned against an electric light pole on a street corner in the vicinity of her home. The girl took hold of a wire cable used in raising and lowering an arc light, and she received a shock of 2,200 volts. She was knocked to the ground and afterward removed to her home in a dazed condition. Examination showed that the girl's hand that had grasped the cable was badly burned. The city electrician found that the cable had come in contact with a heavily charged wire.

The Spiceland Academy has in its possession a tooth of a mammoth. Recently while excavating for a ditch on his farm in Spiceland Township, along the Blue river valley, William Beard unearthed the specimen, and he presented it to the academy. The tooth is similar to several which are exhibited at the home of the Henry County Historical Society in Newcastle. In a number of instances teeth of the mammoth and of the mastodon have been found along Blue river, leading to the belief that both these animals in prehistoric times were numerous in that vicinity.

During the oil boom at Marion several years ago one of the best oil wells in the neighborhood was that located on the grounds of the Marion malleable iron works. Several years ago the oil became so low that the well was abandoned. When the plant was rebuilt a year ago the old oil well was converted into a water well, which has since furnished the water used at the plant. The water has been forced from the well by an air compressor. It was noticed a few days ago that the tank was filling up faster than usual, and after the power was turned off the water continued to flow. A large stream poured over the top of the tank, which is 85 feet above the ground, and flooded one of the buildings and the surrounding ground.

Because of the scarcity of corn huskers in Bartholomew County at this time many farmers have been compelled to enlist the services of their wives and daughters in the work of husking the large crops of corn before winter sets in. Farmers are paying from 2 to 3 cents a bushel for husking corn.

The death of Cadet Byrne will not bring about any radical change in football at Notre Dame, according to President Rev. John Cavanaugh. "I venture to say that more people have died of pneumonia contracted while viewing a game than have lost their lives on the field. I believe, too, that there are many more deaths from automobile accidents than there are from football," said Father Cavanaugh.

Two girls bitten and forty dogs infected represents the work of a rabid dog in Cayuga, Vermillion County. Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the State Board of Health, who was appealed to by the health officer of that place to advise as to how to handle the situation, told the officer that he had not only the right to kill all animals suspected of having been infected but that he had the right to call on the Sheriff of the county to assist him.

"Uncle Joe" Cannon, speaker of the House of Representatives, is making an effort to buy the franchise of the South Bend club of the Central League and then transfer the club to Danville, "Uncle Joe's" town. Speaker Cannon believes a good ball team would do more to advertise Danville than anything proposed in years. There are several citizens of Danville in readiness to buy stock in the club, but "Uncle Joe" will control over half.

Six logs were cut from a poplar tree, about four miles east of Scottsburg, on what is known as the old Shea farm. The diameter of the butt of the tree was forty-eight inches and at the small end of the last cut, which was seventy-four feet from the ground, the diameter was thirty-three inches. This is unusual as trees which have a diameter of thirty-three inches seventy-four feet from the ground are no longer plentiful in Southern Indiana. Twenty years ago it was not uncommon to see logs of this size taken to the mills, but now they are very scarce.

This is the last week for the Hagenbeck & Wallace shows on the road this season. At the winter quarters, east of Peru, there is much activity in anticipation of the home-coming next week. The Wallace farms, constituting 1,500 acres of bottom land, have yielded bountiful crops this year, and hundreds of tons of hay and thousands of bushels of corn have been stored at the winter quarters for feeding during the next six months. The shows have been unusually successful this year in a financial way and have had no accidents of consequence. This is the first time since the shows have been organized that they have not been home on election day.

As a result of heroism in protecting a woman from a mad dog, Leonard Ark, 13 years old, received serious injuries at Terre Haute. The dog, frothing at the mouth, was running down Wabash avenue, and was headed for a woman, who stood paralyzed with terror. The boy jumped in front of her and caught the dog, who leaped and bit him severely in the stomach. A transfer-wagon driver named Sartor jumped from his wagon and beat the dog to death with a pole from the wagon. It is understood that the dog had attacked several horses before he came upon the woman. It also attacked a number of people, and its appearance in the street created a panic.

S. C. Hanson, who for more than twenty years has been superintendent of the city schools of Williamsport, died at his home there from apoplexy. He was stricken suddenly and soon lapsed into unconsciousness, which continued until a few minutes before his death. Hanson was an author and publisher of school songs. He was an instructor in music at Teachers' Institutes, having served in that capacity in many counties in Indiana and neighboring States. Hanson is survived by a son, Wayne Hanson, connected with the Y. M. C. A. at Indianapolis, and another son who is superintendent of schools in Burlington, Ia. Two younger sons live in Williamsport, while a daughter, Mrs. Edgar Webb, resides in Attica.

J. L. Green and Ben Whicker, of Portland, have demonstrated that the raising of ginseng can be made profitable. They have sold thirty pounds of this year's crop for $176.70, at $6.40 a pound. Four years ago the men began in the ginseng business planting one-fourth of an acre in beds, suitable sheds on the greenhouse order being erected. A year ago they increased the size of their garden and sheds. It took four years from the time of planting before the root fibers were ready for the market. The sale represents the product of four beds 5x60 feet. The quarter of an acre has thirty-three beds, making an average of $45.85 a bed. On this basis the thirty-three beds will net them $1,578.61, or at the rate of $6,318 an acre. Next year the two men will have an acre of ginseng ready for market, which, at the present price, will net them a small fortune.

The widow of a soldier named Wiley committed suicide at Madison by hanging herself from an apple tree with a sheet.

George F. Ware, a mussel digger, living at French Island in the Ohio river, a few miles above Evansville, brought a pearl to the city which is valued at $1,000. He was offered $750 for the stone, but refused it, holding out for $1,000. The pearl is regular in shape and resembles a miniature doorknob.

NEW HEAD OF PHILIPPINES.

W. Cameron Forbes Named Governor General of Islands.

W. Cameron Forbes, of Massachusetts, vice governor general of the Philippines, has been named by President Taft as governor general to succeed the present governor general, James Smith, whose resignation has been accepted to take effect Nov. 11, at the expiration of his leave of absence.

The reason for Mr. Smith's resignation lies in his desire to resume the practice of law. Mr. Forbes is a grandson of Ralph Waldo Emerson. He was appointed by President Roosevelt in 1904 a member of the Philippine commission and secretary of commerce and police. This appointment was made upon the recommendation of President Taft, who had high regard for Mr. Forbes' ability. As an official in the Philippines Mr. Forbes showed judgment and tact, and the President is confident that his administration as governor general will be a success.

STEEL PLANT TO GO UP.

McClintic-Marshall Concern Buys 50-Acre Site at Indiana Harbor.

Indiana Harbor, the Standard Oil town, which sprang, like its neighbor, Gary, from the lake front sand dunes of Northern Indiana, was given a boom Monday which was such as it probably never felt before. Announcement was made that Honore and Potter Palmer, Jr., have negotiated the sale of a tract comprising fifty acres in Indiana Harbor to the McClintick-Marshall Construction Company of Pittsburg, Pa., manufacturers of structural steel. The purchasing company is to erect a giant structural steel plant on the ground at once. The plant and the dock and railway shipping facilities incident to it will occupy the entire space, and the new Western home of the Eastern concern is to be established at a cost of half a million dollars, aside from the purchase price of the land.

KILLED WHEN TRAINS HIT.

Passenger and Light Engine Crash While Going in Same Direction.

Four persons, all of them railroad employes, were killed and six passengers seriously and a score slightly injured in a collision between Pennsylvania Railroad train No. 104, from Philadelphia, and an engine running light on the elevated tracks of the railroad in Jersey City. The engines and all the cars, except the rear one, left the rails, and the smoking car and both engines were overturned. The wrecked train was running at fair speed. Near Brunswick street an engine running light on the adjoining track, in the same direction, and the passenger train crashed together. An investigation by railroad officials led to the declaration that the accident was probably caused by a broken rail.

SLAYER IMPLICATES A WOMAN.

Kansan Claims She Told Him How Much Poison to Use.

Following a confession that he murdered Mrs. Mary Short in the hope of gaining possession of her property, Fred Fanning in Topeka, Kan., implicated Mrs. Minnie English in the crime, and she was arrested as an accomplice. Fanning in his original confession said he put poison in Mrs. Short's coffee. Now he declares Mrs. English told him how much poison to use, and that he gave her $1,460 of Mrs. Short's money. Fanning had prepared to go into the restaurant business with Mrs. English.

$4,000,000 TO MOTHERLESS BOY.

Lad of Ten on Georgia Plantation Shares Standard Oil Millions.

Hunt Tilford Dickinson, a 10-year-old motherless boy, now with his father on a Georgia plantation, has inherited $4,000,000 from the estate of his granduncle, Wesley Hunt Tilford, a former vice president of the Standard Oil Company, who died last March, leaving an estate worth more than $11,000,000. The will gives $7,000,000 outright to Henry M. Tilford, his brother, and the balance is divided among other relatives.

Autoist Kills and Speeds On.

Harvey L. Anderson, president of the Anderson Hardware Company and one of the most widely known business men in the South, was struck and instantly killed by an automobile in Atlanta, Ga. The driver of the car is unknown, as he did not stop when Mr. Anderson was struck, but increased his speed and escaped before the arrival of the police.

Outlaw's Son Is Divorced.

Robert James, a son of Frank James and nephew of Jesse James, was divorced in the St. Louis Circuit Court by Mary Sandboat Jones. James did not contest the suit, in which Mrs. James testified he had choked her and threatened her with a revolver.

Italian Killed in Drunken Melee.

Two factions of Italian miners, filled with "blind pig" liquor, terrorized Stevenson, Minn., in a fight, during which one was shot to death and three others wounded. Two were arrested.

Edward Is Sixty-eight.

King Edward of England on Tuesday celebrated his sixty-eighth birthday at Sandringham Palace, surrounded by most of the members of his family and a few intimate friends.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The Weekly Review of Trade by R. G. Dun & Co. says: Trade conditions impart much confidence to new enterprise and a wider drawing upon capacity in the principal industries. Transportation returns compare favorably with previous high records of tonnage moved, and from some quarters come complaints of delayed deliveries from scarcity of cars. Equipment concerns find pressure upon their facilities increasing, another flow of hurry orders adding more than expected to the heavy work on hand. Weather conditions favored increased shopping in the retail lines here and at interior points and also gave stimulus in factory production and distribution of finished products, breadstuffs, raw materials and mine and forest products. Current activity includes much buying of holiday wares, fancy goods, jewelry and furs. Wholesale dealings in general merchandise exceed those at this time last year.

Bank clearings, $274,773,698, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908, which included only five business days, by 21.4 per cent and compare with $204,526,512 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 37, against 21 last week, 24 in 1908 and 37 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 6 last week, 7 in 1908 and 10 in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Except for the fact that unseasonably warm weather tends to retard the fullest development of retail trade in heavyweight and winter goods, the general trade and industrial report this week is one of widespread and increasing activity. Jobbing trade in dry goods, millinery, shoes, clothing, hardware, and, in fact, most lines of distribution, is active; holiday demand is broadening and spring trade reports are very good, increases being general in nearly all lines. The same is true of industrial operations. All this, it might be remarked, occurs with prices of commodities at a high level and with reports of stocks of raw materials and of manufactured goods in no apparent way burdensome or holding forth promise of early becoming so.

Business failures for the week ending with Nov. 4 in the United States were 212, against 217 last week, 205 in the like week of 1908, 226 in 1907, 146 in 1906 and 166 in 1905. Failures in Canada number 24, which corresponded with 24 last week and 33 in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION.

Quickly Cures Rheumatic Pains, Also Splendid System Builder.

Go to any good prescription druggist and get the following and mix them: If he does not have these ingredients he will get them from his wholesale house.

"One ounce compound syrup of Sarsaparilla, and one ounce Toris compound. Add these to a half pint of first-class whiskey, and use a tablespoonful before each meal and at bed time. The bottle must be well shaken each time." This simple remedy is one of the most effective known. The restorative action will be felt after the first few doses.

Love.

It is hard to preserve equanimity and greatness on that debatable ground between love and esteem. There is nothing so stable and unfluctuating as love. The waves beat steadfast on its shore forever, and its tide has no ebb. It is a resource in all extremities and a refuge even from itself. And yet love will not be leaned on.—H. D. Thoreau in Atlantic.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. "The Auld Brig o' Doon."

Lord Roseberry has done well to protest against the proposed demolition of the Brig of Ayr. The town council of Ayr calls it rebuilding. But as Lord Roseberry says, the resources of engineering should be adequate to preserve a structure which is almost sacred. Indeed, were there no sentiment left for Burns in the land he did so much to celebrate, the accustomed canniness of the Scot should suffice to save a landmark that is yearly coined into good money. A TRAGIC BLUNDER

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XVIII.—(Continued.)

Agatha was looking at him strangely, but he did not appear to notice her. Lord Netherville took up his hat and prepared to leave. He took very little interest in Miss Garland's love affairs, and could not in the least understand why his cousin should take them to heart.

"I know nothing about it; the girl is a stranger to me!" he answered lightly. "I was only repeating the gossip of the day to amuse your wife. Goodbye, Agatha. How your grey hair alters you, Rupert," he added, as he left the room with the master of the house. "No one could possibly mistake us for each other now! What a pity you got that knock over the head to spoil your beauty! You know I always believe that blow was intended for me."

Rupert had gone with his cousin outside the room. Netherville was going down the staircase. Rupert followed him down.

"By the way," he said, when he got down to the hall, "I heard something about those pearls the other day; those I was bringing down to give to Agatha, you know. I daresay she told you about them. Of course you know that I was engaged to your wife at that time, Rupert?"

"Oh, yes, of course, I know all about it," answered Rupert, carelessly.

"I was a good deal cut up at the time she threw me over; but I've no doubt she was right, old man. She chose the best man of the two. I am glad I have been to see her. I have pretty well got over it now, or you know I shouldn't have come. You don't owe me any grudge, I am sure! And I hope you will let me be friends with her?"

"My dear fellow, of course!" replied Carroll, cordially.

He did not go upstairs again after his cousin had left, but turned into his own little den on the ground floor, and throwing himself into an arm chair, he remained plunged in the most gloomy and miserable thoughts of Irene and of her probable fate. But it did not occur to him to think about Agatha upstairs.

Agatha had got up from her sofa, she was standing in the middle of the room. There was a tempest at her heart, a tempest half love, half jealousy, and it was the jealousy that caused the love she had vainly striven to stifle to burn up into a fiercer, steadier flame. There was a long mirror opposite to her; she saw reflected in it the image of a pale, gaunt woman, with shrunken cheeks and haggard eyes.

"I have grown hideous!" she said aloud, slowly, "perfectly hideous! A happy woman—a wife who loves and is loved again, keeps her looks and her youth and her freshness, but I am not loved, and I have lost it all—all! There is nothing to win him now, he will never love me! And this other woman, this Miss Garland, who is the most beautiful girl in London—it is her whom he loves! Why did he start and turn round so excitedly when Netherville said she was going to marry some rich man? Why did he cry out that she must not be allowed to marry him? If she had been a stranger, would his face have flushed and would his voice have trembled, as they did? And had she been only a mere acquaintance of the past, should I not have heard her name before? No; I see it all now, it is this beautiful Miss Garland, who is in London now—I always knew that the woman he once loved would come between us again! Once loved! Ah! but he loves her now—now! Oh! what am I to do? What am I to do?" She flung herself face downwards upon the sofa in a paroxysm of anguish.

Jealousy, that horrible fiend that can torture the soul with superhuman pain, was tearing at her heart. All at once she realized that her husband might meet this unknown woman at any moment, and that his love would doubtless then be fanned into fresh life by a renewal of intercourse with her.

He might even now be planning to see her! How was she to keep him? How guard that frail possession that the law had given her for her own, but that love had never ratified? Where was he now? Had he gone out with Netherville? Gone away at once, perhaps—to her!

The horror of the fancy took away her breath. She ran swiftly and softly downstairs, her light steps making no noise upon the thick carpet as she went. She breathed again when she saw that his hat and stick were in their place. Then softly she crept to the door of his study. She knew he must be there, and alone.

She opened the door noiselessly. Rupert sat with his back to her, near the table, his head was laid upon his folded arms, his face was hidden. A terrible shock overwhelmed her, he was weeping!

She closed the door very softly again, and crept away slowly upstairs. She was very cold, her teeth chattered, her limbs trembled beneath her.

"It is too late," she said to herself in a miserable stifled whisper. "There is nothing to be done. Oh, if I could only die!"

CHAPTER XIX.

Lady Garland was not at all backward in letting the world know of a great success in the matrimonial market which her niece had achieved. The following notice appeared in the Morning Post, and was speedily reproduced in all the society papers:

"A marriage is arranged and will shortly take place between Joseph Taunton, Esquire, of Grove Hall, Shropshire and 65 Grosvenor Square, and Irene, only child of the late Frederick Garland, Esquire, and niece of Lady Garland, of Eaton Place."

Irene was to be married before the end of the season—on the 29th of July. She acquiesced very quietly in this arrangement, that was entirely settled between her future husband and her aunt.

One day Mr. Taunton told Irene what his own wedding present was to be. He proposed to give her a diamond tiara and a diamond necklace. A selection of tiaras and necklaces were to be ready for her inspection at the shop of that most fashionable of West End jewelers—Mr. McGillup. On a certain morning Irene and her aunt were to meet him there to select the jewels, and Mr. Taunton was to take the ladies on to the Amphitryon Club to lunch afterwards.

It so happened that Lady Garland had to be fitted with her own dress for the wedding that morning, and that the dressmaker kept her waiting; so that, fearing to be late for their appointment with Joseph Taunton, she sent Irene on in the carriage, intending to join her as soon as she could. When Irene arrived at McGillup's, the shop was empty; Mr. Taunton also was late.

McGillup bowed, and began laying out the tiaras and necklaces on the counter for her inspection; and Irene sat down and begged him not to trouble himself until Mr. Taunton arrived, as she could not decide anything without him. So she waited quietly, seated by the counter, with the jewels shining and gleaming in their cases before her.

"These are part of my price!" she thought, as she looked idly down at them; "a portion of the sum for which I have sold myself! Well, I may as well enjoy them. I suppose I have earned the right to them. They are beautiful, too. I love good diamonds. How they sparkle! how they shine! and yet—and yet—the spray that came dancing over Chatswell dasher in the moonlight was far more beautiful! and I would give all the glittering stones gladly for one single drop of that enchanted water—for one word from that voice that is dead to me for ever!"

"Would you like the paper, madam?" said Mr. McGillup to her.

Irene had seen the morning news, and did not particularly care to read the newspaper; but she took the folded sheets from Mr. McGillup's hand, and began mechanically to read the first thing that came uppermost in the long printed columns, and it so happened that it was upon the list of houses to be let or sold that her eyes rested idly. Suddenly she read a familiar name.

"Chatswell—on the Upper Thames. To be sold, by private sale, or by auction on the 10th inst. A bijou cottage residence, situated on one of the loveliest backwaters of the river."

Then followed a minute description of the house, the rooms, the gardens, the outhouses. Her heart beat tumultuously and wildly; the words danced before her eyes. It was her old home, the peaceful cottage in which she had lived from childhood to womanhood; where she had loved and where she had lost, all that life had held most dear to her!

And it was to be sold! Sold to strangers! It would belong to others—never again to her—never, never!

Then all at once a bold and audacious idea sprang up in her mind. A private hansom stopped outside, the door of the shop opened, and Mr. Taunton's short and inelegant figure darkened the entrance. She sprang breathlessly to meet him, with the paper in her hand.

"Joe!" she cried, calling him, as she very rarely did, by his Christian name in her excitement, "I don't want the diamonds—I don't, indeed! There is something I want you to give me instead—something that I want so much, and that it would make me happy—so very happy to have. Look here!" and she showed him the advertisement.

"You want this? This cottage, Irene?" he asked, rather puzzled by her breathless eagerness.

"Yes, yes; instead of the diamonds. It won't cost more, will it? And I should like it—oh, ever so much better! It is my old home—my mother died there! She is buried in the churchyard close by. Oh, Joe, do give it to me for a wedding present instead of the diamonds!"

"My dear girl, of course you shall have it, if you fancy it. What's a little trumpery cottage like that to me? But you can't possibly have it instead of the diamonds. You must have a tiara and a necklace. How are you to be presented next season without them, I should like to know? I mean Mrs. Joseph Taunton to have the best jewelry that money can buy, and to out all the other women out. But I'll tell you what I will do. I'll give you this little place for a birthday present; it's your birthday next week, isn't it? I was going to give you a horse; but if you would like this better, my dear, you shall have it instead."

"Oh, ever so much better!" she cried, gratefully. "Oh, Joe, you are indeed good to me!"

And she was nearer to loving him at that moment that she had ever been before. He was as good as his word. On the morning of her birthday, a large blue envelope was brought to her by express messenger; it contained the title deeds of a ninety nine years' lease of the bijou cottage residence at Chatswell-on-Thames, and was made out in her name as a free gift from the purchaser.

She little knew, as with trembling hands and tear-blinded eyes she eagerly scanned the precious papers, that the first gleam of returning happiness of life lay lurking within their prosaic folds! Had Joseph Taunton known what that birthday present was to lead to, perhaps he would never have given it to her!

CHAPTER XX.

One morning while Rupert was reading the newspaper, at breakfast time, Agatha saw his face suddenly change; he turned pale and the newspaper fell out of his hand to the ground. Presently he hastily gulped down his coffee, and making some trifling excuse, he left the room and went along the narrow passage to his little study, shutting the door behind him.

Agatha rose from her place, and went and picked up the newspaper. A sure instinct, the instinct of unhappy love, told her that there must be something more than usually upsetting to Rupert's peace of mind in the columns of the newspaper. She was not long in finding out what it was.

"A marriage is arranged and will shortly take place between Joseph Taunton, Esq., and Irene, only child of the late Frederick Garland," she read.

The words seemed to be printed in letters of gold before her eyes. It was a respite for her; for if Miss Garland were married, then indeed Rupert would be divided from her forever. "Even if I were to die, it would do him no good, it would bring him no nearer to her!" she thought with exultation.

For the first few moments she experienced only a sense of keen and rapturous joy. But soon a reaction set in, and she began to torment herself anew. What was he doing now in his study? Was he heartbroken at the news? Was he filled, as she was, with jealous misery? Had he fled from the room to hide his anguish from his wife's eyes? The thought was torture to her. She went outside the dining-room door.

Miss Carroll, who managed all the house-keeping, was downstairs in the kitchen ordering dinner. As Agatha stood there, hesitating and wondering hardly daring to follow her husband into his room, yet longing to know what the effect of this news was upon him, suddenly the closed door opened, and he came out. When he saw his wife standing there, he called, out to her:

"Have you got any stamps, Aggie? I haven't got one left."

"There are some on my dressing-table upstairs that you can have," she answered, moving towards the staircase.

"Oh, thank you. Don't you go for them, my dear, I will get them of course," and he ran lightly upstairs.

She waited till he was out of sight, then ran quickly along the passage and entered his room. A letter lay upon the blotting pad. The ink was still wet. It was addressed to Miss Garland. The envelope was only just fastened.

She took it up—yet she hesitated To ouen and read a letter addressed to some one else was repuguant to her, it went against all the prejudices of her education. She had been taught that such things are dishonorable and discreditable, and altogether impossible to right-minded and well-conducted persons. Yet—there are certain primary instincts of human nature which can sweep away all these barriers of civilization at a blow, if they are only allowed to have their sway—and jealousy was assuredly implanted in the heart of women as well as of man, long before discretion and good breeding taught us how to control and conceal it.

Spain's Old Order Changeth.

The Cafe Fornos is no more. It closed its doors recently and forever. For those who know Madrid this is interesting news, as the Cafe Fornos was not only the best establishment of its kind, but the rendezvous of all well-known people, from society leaders to politicians, journalists and tourists.

It was opened about 1870 in the calle Alcala, the Paris edition of the New York Herald says. Soon afterward calle Sevilla was widened and Fornos' corner became the center of Madrid life. As El Imparcial says, politicians, litterateurs and newspaper correspondents soon made of Fornos their home. The cafe was a continuation of the congress lobby, of the theater foyer, of the ministers' parlor, of every place where Madrid gossips. King Amadeo used to frequent the place, which is connected with many an anecdote concerning important events in the political history of Spain.

Since Madrid changed its habits and is less out of doors at night, Fornos lost much of its clientele. Moreover, the rent of the place had been increased 22,500 pesetas per annum. These are the causes of the decision which deprives Madrid of one of its most picturesque sights at night.

Just as Deserving.

"So you were deeply touched by the poem young Mr. Guffsum wrote to you?"

"Yes," answered Maymie.

"But it was not a good poem."

"I don't care. It was just as much trouble for him to write it as if he had been Shakspoare."—Washington Star.

The Contract.

The Patient—What! You refuse to allow my claim? You told me when I insured that I'd get something if I was sick, didn't you?

Insurance Agent—Well, you must have gotten something or you wouldn't be sick, would you?—Puck.

Caller—I would like to see something in the way of a check.

Tailor—Er—yes—excuse me—are you a customer or a bill collector?—Boston Transcript

ORIGIN OF RESTAURANT.

Said to Have First Appeared in England About Time of Shakespeare.

In primitive times, the only places in London where the public could be entertained with food had been the cooks' shop. The famous East Cheap was a great thoroughfare, down which the stalls of the butchers alternated with those of the cooks. You chose a joint at the flesh market and you carried it next door to be cooked for you by a certain hour. If you wished for wine, you must bring that with you, for the cooks sold no liquor, although they seem to have provided, as time went on, more and more of the natural accompaniments of meat, such as bread, vegetables and pastry. This habit continued until well into the reign of Elizabeth, and so long as such an inconvenient custom prevailed there could have been no real comfort for any citizen who chose to dine abroad. He must have had as much trouble with porterage and baskets as a country party has to-day at a picnic. But about the time that Shakespeare came up to London a remarkable change took place in the customs of the town, and the practice of public hospitality and entertainment was singularly facilitated. The nature of this change lay in the sudden development of the tavern and the consequent withdrawal of the cookship. The worshipful company of Pastelars, as the cooks were called, ceased to enjoy the monopoly of providing hot meals.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

Selfishness—Selfishness is the rock upon which domestic bliss generally goes to pieces.—Rev. John L. Scudder, Congregationalist, Jersey City.

Missing the Mark—All the tragedies of life are contained in these three words "Missing the Mark."—Rev. Alfred Henry Porter, Baptist, Louisville.

Money and Morals—If American fathers would spend less time making the morals of their families their children would be better off.—Rev. W. W. Bustard, Baptist, Boston.

Knowledge of God—There is one kind of knowledge that cannot be too much sought after, and that is the knowledge of God.—Rev. Dr. Broughton, Congregationalist, Atlanta.

The Problem of the City—Every day the world is growing better and the great problem of the city will slowly but surely be solved by the word of God.—Rev. Josiah Strong, Methodist, New York City.

Final Results—Many of the final results of your life and teaching will report themselves to you long years after you come before the judgment seat of God.—Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Giving to the Lord—He who gives nothing to the Lord has no account with the Lord for which he can reasonably expect a blessing. The Lord cannot well bless nothing.—Rev. L. M. Zimmerman, Lutheran, Baltimore, Md.

The Nation's Safety—Our safety as a nation is not in our soldiers, but in our ships, not in our wealth but in our righteousness. The nation and people that do not serve God shall perish.—Rev. S. D. Paine, Methodist, Jacksonville.

Knowledge of God—Faith in God is not an academic problem. It is found in the daily pursuits of life. We grow in the proportion and are just as great as we are great in the knowledge of God.—Rev. F. W. Hinitt, Presbyterian, Danville, Ky.

Divine Law of Love—There is but one fundamental law of a stable human society and this is the divine law of love. He who builds outside of this law, builds that which must surely crumble into the dust.—Rev. C. C. Pierce, Baptist, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Press—The press ought to be the informer and guide of public opinion. It is the daily teacher of the nation, instructing not only the young, but all ages. The press is a people's university that never shuts its doors.—Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Hebrew, New York City.

Why Christ Came—The great purpose of the coming of Jesus Christ was to elevate manhood, to make men true and pure and loving, to be like Him. We want men and women of character to-day; no matter about the church to which they belong.—Rev. S. D. Paine, Methodist, Jacksonville.

The Stars and Stripes—Ours is peculiarly a flag of freedom, and no true man can look upon its effulgent stars and ruddy stripes without being inspired by their prophetic meaning. Those thirteen stripes represent the traditional principles of liberty—the birthright of our nation.—Rev. Kenneth Brown, Presbyterian, El Paso, Tex.

The Home—We are rapidly becoming a nation of boarders. There is too little of the home life; we lose sight of our families; we are not in close touch with our parents. There is something indescribably beautiful about the word "home," with all the associations which it calls to mind.—Rev. George Bailey, Presbyterian, Washington.

Definite Location.

Every visitor at the new capitol at Harrisburg, Pa., who gets as far as the registration room, is expected to write his name in a big book, together with his birthplace and present residence, says the Troy Times. Not long ago, when a crowd of excursionists visited the grounds and building, a stout girl started to register.

She paused, pen poised in the air, and called out to an elderly lady, comfortably seated in a big chair, "Mom, vere vas I borned at?"

"Vat you vant to know dat for?"

"Dis man vants to put it in der big book."

"Ach," answered the mother, "you know vell enough—in der old stone house."

STEADILY GREW WORSE.

A Typical Tale of Sufferings from Sick Kidneys.

Mrs. L. C. Fridley, 1034 N. Main St., Delphos, Ohio, says: "Five or six years ago I began to suffer with kidney trouble and grew steadily worse until my health was all broken down. For weeks I was in bed and could not turn over without being helped. My back was stiff and painful, I was tired and languid, and when I was able to get around I could not do my work. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills helped me so much that I kept on using them until rid of every symptom of kidney trouble. During the past three years I have enjoyed excellent health."

Designed for a Profession.

It was impossible to shake James Martin's self-esteem or satisfaction in any way. He had not been the Willowville shoemaker for twenty-eight years to acquire modesty. "I'm glad to hear your boy Willy's got a chance to teach in the college your money put him through," he said loftily to a summer resident as he sewed in the tongue of her shoe. I always thought he'd be a good one for such a job."

"You did?" said the lady, indifferently.

"I certain did," and James Martin looked at her from his seat on the bench as a pinnacle of wisdom. "I said to a number of folks after one or two conversations with him as to his prospects when he's just through high school, I said, 'Take a young feller like him that can't tell kid from pebble-goat without you point out the difference, and best thing for him would be a so-called profession,' I said, 'where he could make use of books, have 'em handy, and not trust his own intellects, brain powers, nor judgment except in extreme cases, sech as would seldom or never occur.'

"That's what I said then, and I say it now, ma'am."

Clerk's Queer Blunder.

In a recent hearing before a committee of the London county council one of the participants quoted Shakespeare against his opponent, who, he said, "roared as gently as a suckling dove." The clerk of the committee, who may have prided himself on his knowledge of natural history, entered the remark on the minutes in this fashion: "Mr. Balfour Brown remarked that his learned friend had roared as gently as a suckling pig."

SOME HARD KNOCKS.

Woman Gets Rid of "Coffee Heart."

The injurious action of Coffee on the heart of many persons is well known by physicians to be caused by caffeine. This is the drug found by chemists in coffee and tea.

A woman suffered a long time with severe heart trouble and finally her doctor told her she must give up coffee, as that was the principal cause of the trouble. She writes:

"My heart was so weak it could not do its work properly. My husband would sometimes have to carry me from the table, and it would seem that I would never breathe again.

"The doctor told me that coffee was causing the weakness of my heart. He said I must stop it, but it seemed I could not give it up until I was down in bed with nervous prostration.

"For eleven weeks I lay there and suffered. Finally Husband brought home some Postum and I quit coffee and started new and right. Slowly I got well. Now I do not have any headaches, nor those spells with weak heart. We know it is Postum that helped me. The Dr. said the other day, 'I never thought you would be what you are.' I used to weigh 93 pounds and now I weigh 158.

"Postum has done much for me and I would not go back to coffee again for any money, for I believe it would kill me if I kept at it. Postum must be well boiled according to directions on pkg., then it has a rich flavor and with cream is fine."

Nervous Collapse

"I have traveled for thirty years continually. I lost a great deal of sleep, which together with constant worry left me in such a nervous state that finally, after having two collapses of nervous prostration, I was obliged to give up traveling altogether. I doctored continually but with no relief. Dr. Miles' Nervine came to my rescue—I cannot describe the suffering which this Nervine saved me. Whenever I am particularly nervous a few doses relieve me." A. G. C. LIBBY, Wells, Me.

There are many nervous wrecks. There is nervous prostration of the stomach, of the bowels, and other organs. The brain, the kidneys, the liver, the nerve centers are all exhausted. There is but one thing to do—build up the nervous system by the use of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. Its strengthening influence upon the nervous system restores normal action to the organs, and when they all work in harmony, health is assured. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

As was reported last week, that the parents of Chas Thomas of near Coleman's Corners, had received word that he was very low and in a few days word came to the effect that he had died and was buried. Some two years ago Mr. Thomas spent some time in Marshalltown, Iowa, and then came home and last spring he returned, having secured a position at that place. The cause of his death was Cerebro Spinal Meningitis and as soon as his death occurred the State Board of Health ordered him to be buried immediately and within three hours he was laid at rest. Arrangements are being made to have him brought home after January 1, 1910, at which time the Board of Health will have its meeting. While this act may seem strange to a great many people, yet it is thought to be contagious in some states, and such orders are given to prevent the disease from being spread.

Leaving the question "Does Prohibition prohibit" to be best answered by the fear of the liquor dealers who claim it does not it is interesting to note that many states report an appreciable decrease in tuberculosis and that the Department of Vital Statistics at Washington asserts the crusade against the White Plague is already showing unmistakable progress, and results. The United States was not the first by any means to attack in a general way the march of this dreaded disease but it is probable that there is no country in which so much popular attention has been directed toward its prevention or in which education on the subject has been so widely diffused. Nearly every state in the Union has state and local societies organized to distribute information about the disease and to look after those cases among the poor and ignorant which owing to the singular character of the infection are the greatest public menace. With the spread of the benignant gospel of fresh air as a cure for tuberculosis come the opening of houses and especially sleeping rooms to the outside air and a new enthusiasm for the out of door life. To be sure these are running into fads and hobbies and wild manias but the beneficent result is apparent in the statistics of all but three states in the Union which report lowered mortality from tuberculosis. The three states referred to are those best known as health reports for consumptives and draw their increased quota of sufferers from other states. It is not too optimistic to believe that the time is not so far distant when tuberculosis will have ceased to be a scourage.

Ashville, N. C., Nov. 12, '09.

Dear Friends of THE NEWS:

We left the city of healthful waters the morning of the 10th., for Chattanooga. There is one good thing I must say about Spring City and that is I did not hear an oath or curse word while there. Dr. Tyler, the Presbyterian minister, told me that the people of the south did not swear half as much as the people of the north. We visited Chickamauga Park, Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountains, which are all splendid in their different ways and cannot be described by letter. There are many other places of interest in and around Chattanooga. We reached Ashville, N. C., yesterday morning the 11th. This city of about 25,000, is called the "Land of the Skies", over 2,200 feet elevation. Many wealthy people make this their home, among whom is Geo. W. Vanderbilt. He has a house here called "Biltmore", 375 feet long and 150 feet wide, with 12,000 acres of ground there and 120,000 acres of hunting ground and 132,000 acres in all. I expect to visit his place soon and will write of it later. Mr. Vanderbilt did not meet us at the train or call on us yet, but perhaps he did not hear of our arrival. We have only been here two days but like it very much. Think it is a very healthy place. We are very nicely located, have two rooms on a nice clean street and keep house to suit ourselves. Have rooms at the parsonage of the Lutheran preacher, so we will have to be good. We are both quite well and my Asthma is getting better fast. With best wishes to all we are truly yours.

Mr. and Mrs. M. T. Bishop.

Should woman vote? Doubtless this question is now asked oftener and with more seriousness even than during the palmy days of Cady B. Stanton and Susan B. Anthony, those dauntless war mares of the cause. (Now let no editor in Wyoming or Colorado quote us as insulting woman by this metaphor. There can be no reproach in sex and there would have been manifest impropriety in calling them war horses.) Of course woman should vote. Why not. Voting has done its limit of harm in this most devoted of all countries. Additional votes of men or women cannot make us more certainly the most lawless and mal governed of all great civilized countries. Government is nothing more nor less than a mammoth corporation. The minor corporations of the country are wisely governed by directors, chosen by stockholders who vote in the ratio of their several holdings but this government corporation is governed by a mob of stockholders whose votes have no proportion to their interest in the corporation and who far from being able to direct a nation in its foreign and domestic relations fail to make both ends meet in their petty household. Oh yes! let women vote.

Garvel Bank Caves In

While assisting in loading gravel at the Culbertson pit Thursday, Philip Carper, secretary of the DeKalb county Mutual Fire Insurance company and one of the best known men in this vicinity, was quite seriously injured, three tons of dirt caving in upon him, covering his body almost entirely and rendering painful injuries to his legs and back. Roy Prosser, who witnessed the terrible accident, hastened to extricate the body of Mr. Carper from its perilous position and he was taken home. Dr. Hines was called and cared for the injuries. An examination disclosed the fact that Mr. Carper's back and hips were badly sprained and otherwise bruised and several weeks treatment will be required to restore the man to health. It is considered quite fortunate that the afflicted man escaped as luckily as he did as had he been a few feet farther under the ridge it is thought that death would have been inevitable. As it is he will recover in a few weeks; at least this is the hope of his innumerable DeKalb county friends. —Courier.

good health, with its blessings, must understand, quite clearly, that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best, each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to living aright. Then the use of medicines may be dispensed with to advantage, but under ordinary conditions in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time and the California Fig Syrup Co. holds that it is alike important to present the subject truthfully and to supply the one perfect laxative to those desiring it.

Consequently, the Company's Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna gives general satisfaction. To get its beneficial effects buy the genuine, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and for sale by all leading druggists.

Man, the New Creator.

What is Man?

There is a word of prophecy concerning him. If Niagara suggests the old gods, surly and mean to us-ward, steel-making utterly contemns them, is the opinion of Eugene Wood in an article on steel-making in Success Magazine. Thor with his hammer, Jove with his thunderbolts, Hercules with the original Big Stick—they couldn't hold their job at steel-making. "Go to the office and get your time," would be what the "pusher" would tell them. The only mythic figure that the steel industry suggests is that bold and resolute, that unconquered and unconquerable spirit, whom Milton's reluctant pen was forced to make the hero of "Paradise Lost." The flame, the fervent heat, the rolling smoke remind us of him. But most of all the mighty works that are done therein recall that prophecy of his (if Eden's serpent be the allotrope of Lucifer): "Ye shall be as gods"—and more also.

What is Man? The New Creator.

One Distinction.

Irate Caller—Your paper accused me this morning of running over a man with my motorcycle. It isn't true. It was an automobile.

Editor—Well, what's the difference?

Irate Caller—The difference? About $250!"

DAWDLER BOUND TO FAIL.

Wasting Two Hours a Day Means Losing One Year in Every Twelve.

Dawdling is one of the chief sins of men and women that fail, says the San Francisco Bulletin. There are only twenty-four hours in the day, and it is possible to dawdle away five or six of them while hardly noticing it.

The dawdler commences in the morning before he gets up. His alarm clock rings at 6 o'clock and that is the hour at which he ought to rise. But he lies abed, stealing catnaps, for a quarter of an hour, and then jumps up in a hurry and proceeds to dress. It was just as hard to leave the bed at 6:15 as it would have been at 6, and the result of the loitering has been the loss of fifteen minutes out of the day.

Remembering that he is late, the dawdler pulls on his first garments in a great hurry, but his pace soon slackens. He yawns and stretches himself and spends half or three-quarters of an hour in his ablutions, shaving and attiring. At breakfast he reads the paper leisurely, and the meal takes up another half hour. Then he leaves the house to go to his office, where he arrives thirty minutes later than he ought.

Although late, he does not plunge briskly into his work. There are several other papers to glance through and over these he wastes the major portion of an hour. And when, at length, he lays aside the papers and turns to his duties he does not keep at them assiduously.

Thrift is not an Egyptian mystery known only to a few favored initiates. Everybody sees in what thrift consists, but not everybody having the knowledge puts it into practice.

By dawdling two hours a day, one wastes a twelfth of his entire life. One month out of the year, one year out of twelve, goes for nothing. This waste, remember, is in addition to all holidays and vacations. What man, having his way to make in the world, can afford to drop a month out of his year? What man can afford, at the end of every eleven years to cease all work for a twelve month? Dawdling wastes time in small portions, but the total loss is enormous and costly.

Two Great Leaders.

Disraeli wit was too much for Gladstone. The great Liberal had but one adjective for his Tory opponent, and that was "devilish." Never during the years of their opposing leadership had the two any social relations. Each made light of the other's literary efforts. Some one asked Lord Beaconsfield to define the difference between a misfortune and a calamity, and unhesitatingly it came. "If Mr. Gladstone should fall into the Thames, it would be a misfortune. If any one should pull him out, it would be a calamity."

The best of all the Gladstone-Disraeli stories tells how once at a London dinner party the ladies at the table were asked which they would marry if they had to marry one or the other, the great Liberal or the great Tory. All declared promptly in favor of Beaconsfield save one, who hastened to explain that she had rather wed Gladstone that she might elope with Disraeli and so break her husband's heart. This happening was of course retold to Disraeli, and so pleased was he over it that he suspended a cabinet debate on the chances of a continental war in order to relate it.—Warwick James Price in Criterion.

Mahogany Ties, Marble Bridges.

The rails of the Mexican Gulf railroad are laid on mahogany sleepers and the bridges are built of white marble. In west Mexico is a line with ebony sleepers and ballast of silver ore drawn from the mines beside the track. The engineers constructing these railways had no other material on the route and found it cheaper to use these seeming extravagances than to import the ordinary material.

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so?

The general health of woman is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes and reddens the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription." Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held as sacredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

Emancipated Woman—But why won't you marry me? Give me a definite reason. Dethroned Man—Oh! just because!—Puck.

Examiner—Now, children, what is the difference between "pro" and "con?" Bright Boy—Please, sir, they're spelt different.—Punch.

"Placed your order for an aeroplane yet?" "No, I'm waiting to find out what the 1910 style of house mortgage is going to be."—Detroit Free Press.

"You can't tell what sort of a cook a wife will make." "And you can't tell what sort of a wife a cook will make, and there you are."—Washington Herald.

"Why did you accept George?" "He was so much more original than the other fellows." "In what way?" "He was the one that asked me to be his wife."—Puck.

Servant (who has been sent to chastise a stray cat for stalking chickens)—I couldn't—catch 'im—mum—for the nearer I got to 'im—the further 'e got away.—Punch.

Cashier—You'll have to bring some one to identify you before we can cash this check. Got any friends in the town. Stranger—Not one, I'm the tax collector.—Exchange.

"When you first saw Niagara Falls, did you feel that almost irresistible impulse to throw yourself over the precipice that so many experience?" "No. I hadn't seen my hotel-bill yet."

"Owd George's wooden leg's been giving him pain lately." "Don't you be talkin' so foolish, Willum." "It's sure enough. 'Is owd woman been a-whoppin' 'im wi' it."—London Opinion.

"It is too bad that Peary did not know before his last dash for the pole that Cook had been there ahead of him." "Why?" "Because he would have been hot all the way there and back again."—Houston Post.

"You have an enormous appetite," said a thin man enviously. "What do you take for it?" "In all my experience," replied his plump friend, "I have found nothing more suitable than food."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Mr. Brown and his family were standing in front of the lion cage. "John," said Mrs. Brown, "if those animals were to escape, whom would you save first—me or the children?" "Me," answered John without hesitation."

Beautiful Girl—Gardener, don't make a flower bed there. It will spoil our croquet ground. Gardener—Can't help it, miss. Them's my orders. Your father says he is going to have this garden devoted to horticulture, not husbandry."

"You say it was your 'double' that stole the chickens?" "Yassuh." "You know I gave you thirty days once for chicken stealing?" "Ah remembah, suh." "Well, this time you get sixty. That's the court's double."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"Back from your two weeks, I see." "Yep." "I presume you got engaged a number of times?" "Naw; things don't go like that in real life, somehow. I got engaged the first week all right enough, but it took me all the second week to break it off."—Washington Herald.

"Jones," said the veterinary surgeon, who had called to attend Jones' pet dog, "you should take better care of this canine's teeth." "Why," asked Jones, "do you think they are becoming decayed?" "No," answered the veterinary, "but just as I came in he put most of them in my leg."—St. Louis Star.

"And to think, to think," quoth she, "that such heavenly bliss that fell to my lot might have escaped me forever! Dear Bob! Did I ever tell you he had proposed to me twice?" Then the unsympathetic auditor assumed an air of innocence. "Didn't you hear him the first time?" she inquired with raised eyebrows.

Two ladies, previously unacquainted, were conversing at a reception. After a few conventional remarks the younger exclaimed: "I cannot think what has upset that tall blonde man over there. He was so attentive a little while ago, but he won't look at me now." "Perhaps," said the other, "he saw me come in. He's my husband!"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"But, darling," murmured the love-lorn youth, "every night for two weeks I have been on my bended knees before you. Have you no pity?" "I certainly have, Horace," spoke up the pretty flirt, as she reached for her handbag; "here's a whole quarter. Go have your trousers pressed. After so much bending they must be baggy at the knees."—Wasp.

A commuter was walking up and down the platform waiting for the train that always seemed to be delayed. "This is a terrible road," he said, addressing a prosperous-looking bystander. "I've heard a great many complaints about it," was the reply. "Yes," went on the commuter, "nearly every morning I'm late to business, and when I get home at night the dinner is cold. How do you find it?" "Oh," returned the other, "I have no kick coming. I'm the president of the road and I always travel in an auto."—Life.

Physicians Recommend Castoria

CASTORIA has met with pronounced favor on the part of physicians, pharmaceutical societies and medical authorities. It is used by physicians with results most gratifying. The extended use of Castoria is unquestionably the result of three facts: First—The indisputable evidence that it is harmless: Second—That it not only allays stomach pains and quiets the nerves, but assimilates the food: Third—It is an agreeable and perfect substitute for Castor Oil. It is absolutely safe. It does not contain any Opium, Morphine, or other narcotic and does not stupefy. It is unlike Soothing Syrups, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, etc. This is a good deal for a Medical Journal to say. Our duty, however, is to expose danger and record the means of advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge, Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health, by regulating the system—not by stupefying it—and our readers are entitled to the information.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. B. Halstead Scott, of Chicago, Ills., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria often for infants during my practice, and find it very satisfactory."

Dr. William Belmont, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "Your Castoria stands first in its class. In my thirty years of practice I can say I never have found anything that so filled the place."

Dr. J. H. Taft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria and found it an excellent remedy in my household and private practice for many years. The formula is excellent."

Dr. R. J. Hamlen, of Detroit, Mich., says: "I prescribe your Castoria extensively, as I have never found anything to equal it for children's troubles. I am aware that there are imitations in the field, but I always see that my patients get Fletcher's."

Dr. Wm. J McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have in my years of practice found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Dr. J. R. Clausen, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "The name that your Castoria has made for itself in the tens of thousands of homes blessed by the presence of children, scarcely needs to be supplemented by the endorsement of the medical profession, but I, for one, most heartily endorse it and believe it an excellent remedy."

Dr. R. M. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Physicians generally do not prescribe proprietary preparations, but in the case of Castoria my experience, like that of many other physicians, has taught me to make an exception. I prescribe your Castoria in my practice because I have found it to be a thoroughly reliable remedy for children's complaints. Any physician who has raised a family, as I have, will join me in heartiest recommendation of Castoria."

Second Suburbanite—That so? They seem to live well enough.

Kept His Word.

He was a little man, but he had a loud voice and evidently wanted everyone to know what he said. He and a companion—who, be it said to his credit, seemed ashamed of the company he was in—stood in the hotel rotunda. The little fellow was talking about Ireland, and he said many hard things concerning the country and the people.

A great big man stood by listening to the little fellow's vaporings. He merely smiled, until the little fellow said in a very loud tone:

"Show me an Irishman and I'll show you a coward."

Then the big fellow slipped up and touching the little fellow on the shoulder, said in a heavy bass voice:

"What's that you said?"

"I said, show me an Irishman and I'll show you a coward," said the little fellow, whose knees were shaking under him.

"Well, I'm an Irishman," said the big man.

"You are an Irishman? Well," and a smile of joy flitted over the little fellow's countenance as he saw a hole through which he could crawl, "I'm a coward." And he set off at a run.

Do Bargain Hunters Smile?

"I went out shopping the other afternoon," said a well known pastor of New York city, "and, having in mind the hymn 'Brighten Your Way With a Smile,' I looked about to see if there were any smiles on the faces in the big department store.

"In all that hurrying and pushing and worrying real, genuine, hearty smiles were not to be found. I saw one smile, but it looked like a plant that had been wintered in a cellar. It was bleached and wan."—New York Press.

How unaccountable the flow of spirits in youth. You may throw sticks and dirt into the current and it will only rise the higher. Dam it up you may, but dry it up you may not, for you cannot reach its source. If you stop up this avenue or that, anon it will come gurgling out where you least expected and wash away all fixtures. Cataclysm on Mars.

The Journal of the British Astronomical Association says that the obliteration of the usual markings on the surface of the planet Mars during the September observations by a gloomy yellow veil indicates a gigantic catastrophe of some kind. The change may be connected with the abnormal electrical conditions of the sun.

Drys Get Saloon Permits.

A novel way to prevent the opening of saloons in a town recaptured by the liquor element was discovered and put into effect at Fairfield, Texas, where the prohibitionists were the first to make application for licenses under the law limiting the number of saloons. These being granted by the court, no more being available, the liquor men were simply crowded out, and the prohibs kept their permits in their pockets and sat tight.

Itching Torture Was Beyond Words—Slept Only from Sheer Exhaustion—Relieved in 24 Hours and Cured in a Month by Cuticura.

"I am seventy-seven years old, and some years ago I was taken with eczema from head to foot. I was sick for six months and what I suffered tongue could not tell. I could not sleep day or night because of that dreadful itching; when I did sleep it was from sheer exhaustion. I was one mass of irritation; it was even in my scalp. The doctor's medicine seemed to make me worse and I was almost out of my mind. I got a set of the Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent. I used them persistently for twenty-four hours. That night I slept like an infant, the first solid night's sleep I had had for six months. In a month I was cured. W. Harrison Smith, Mt. Kisco, N. Y., Feb. 3, 1908."

Revised Upward.

One evening at family prayers the head of the house read that chapter which concludes with, "And the wife see that she reverence her husband." After the exercises had closed and the children had gone to bed, the New York Evening Post says, he quoted it, looking meaningly at his wife.

"Let us see what the Revised Version says on that subject," said she, "I will follow the new teaching, if you please."

The Revised Version was produced, and her chagrin may be imagined as the head impressively read, "And let the wife see that she fear her husband."

The Good Citizen.

"WET" or "DRY"

Mr. Editor:-

There is nothing more desirable for DeKalb-co in both Rural and City Districts than a good citizen. The good citizen is admired by all, he at once becomes a model by which the life and character of the younger generation is fashioned; and, therefore, is useful to all. The good citizen, therefore, is a standard by which life and character is regulated, and holds the position which is both delicate and profound.

The good citizen, in his relation to human life, should be like the magnetic needle in its relation to the pole; he should always direct his thoughts and aspirations toward the highest point, or ideal, in human life, nor should he waver from his position when threatened by impending danger or calamity. There is an inspiration for him in the very fact that he is able to assume a high standard, and that he is able to retain his position no matter how the elements around him may howl.

Now the standard of good citizenship is to be found in the exercise of four qualities of human life that ring out above the mart of our busy life, and which at once classify the citizen as good or bad; these are the Law-abiding, the Sanatory, the Economic, and the Moral. The test of loyalty is to be found in remaining faithful to these fundamental elements no matter what the situation or condition in life may happen to be.

And now, in the coming local option election, a royal test will be found by which to classify the majority of DeKalb Co's, citizens. Are they good or bad citizens? This is the question which will be answered at the poles on the 27th. inst! And, to determine this, the time is past for sentimental expression; there is need for practical exposition by which a correct mental attitude may be developed and maintained.

LAW ABIDING.

No one will question the fact that a good citizen is a law-abiding citizen. This fact is too evident to demand any words of proof. But the good citizen will not only be law-abiding, but he will merge his energy into a glorious effort to prevent lawlessness in his city or community. He will make every attempt needful to preserve peace and tranquility. He not only needs to punish the person who has transgressed the law, but he must protect his fellowman from the bet that is laid open to entice, and from which he has the power to save him. And if a person fails to do this he cannot be called a good citizen. When, then, the good citizen faces a pending proposition such as the continued expulsion of the saloon, or the reinstatement of that enemy of law and order, he cannot but cast his lot with the former. The time has passed for leniency on this subject; every right minded person must acknowledge that the saloon is an enemy of law and of order, and hence, an enemy of the best interests of human society. Not only is the saloon keeper not law-abiding himself but, also, his patron. Every time a man patronizes such place under cover he is as much a criminal as the man who made it possible for him to break a link in the legal code. Both are liable to arrest. Both would be arrested, were the law enforced. And, therefore, knowing the past history of the lawlessness of the saloons and of many of their patrons, and the danger of as much or more such lawlessness in the future, should the saloon return, every good citizen will do right only by raising his voice in protest, and in casting his vote against it. To be a good citizen one will have to prevent the re-instatement of this enemy of law and order, and of human society.

SANATORY.

The good citizen is sanatory. He has a horror for anything that smacks of dirt and slime and filth. He has his eyes open for any new plan or invention that will reduce unsanatory conditions in his own house and home, in his own city, and in the homes of his fellowmen. "No man liveth unto himself." He cannot sit amid cleanliness and allow his fellowman to wallow in the dirt, when he is able to raise his neighbor to a higher state of cleanness by a simple act of silent consent at the poles. We state, "at the poles", for the reason that a right act at the poles in the coming election means the prevention of much unsanatory influence if the saloons are kept away. Who has not seen the dirt and filth that is evident in the best regulated saloon, as well as the very unhealthful conditions existing around the homes where men and women are patrons of the archfriend of dirt and slime and filth? The street, the person, the home, every aspect of human life reassumes an appearance of dirt and slime and filth simultaneously with the return of the saloon. And this the good citizen will prevent if he will carry out the highest instincts of good citizenship.

ECONOMIC.

The good citizen is a practical economist. In private and public affairs he has a thought for the economic conditions of life. Not only are his own affairs of interest to him, but also the affairs of his neighbors. And wherever he is able to ameliorate the hard conditions of his fellowman in this particular sense he is at once ready to lend effective assistance. And now, men of DeKalb Co., let us indulge a practical instance; a young man with too much good in him to be a victim of the institution that makes financial wrecks of men, gave me a story of his own life this summer that demands the attention of every man who claims to be a good citizen. During this last summer he claims he saved the first money of his life, started his first Bank Account, was for the first time able to buy what his family needed and pay for it, and was the first time in his life that he knew what it was to be a husband and father in his home. "My wife and babe and I are happy, and the absence of the saloon is the cause for our happiness", he concluded. This is only one instance of the thousands we might quote. And tell me, men of DeKalb County, are you not glad that your votes were instrumental in bringing about these economic conditions in this home, and in many others, and that you have helped to make some other person acquainted with the real comforts of life? The good citizen will have this instinct to do good; the bad citizen will desire the return of the saloon so that homes may be wrecked.

MORAL.

Moral integrity is the root of human felicity. If all were moral all would be safe. The saloon, the red light district, the brothel, the police, the court-all would be abolished were all moral. But immorality may be held at bay by the exercise of proper influence and effort on the part of the good citizen. And since the liquor traffic is the root of all the damnable indulgences of society the good citizen will not tolerate its return. Some one may say that the moral conditions of the county are not any better today than they were when the saloon was here; but here is where we make a great mistake. On investigation we are convinced that the moral atmosphere is considerably renovated. This fact we acquire by contact with the individual. Many men have told us that they are not tortured with the harrowings of passion to-day as they were when inveterate tippiers, and women tell us of the changed conditions in the home. We concede that some men become intoxicated sometimes, but the mean average is largely in favor of the abondoned saloon. And the men who do become intoxicated sometimes are the ones who live in the lower moral atmosphere. That the absence of the saloon is conducive to a better moral atmosphere is so infallibly true that the right thinking person simply cannot deny it with impunity. And the better the moral atmosphere the better the society, the home, the individual, the business interests and the collective peace and happiness of man.

Here, then, we have the facts that tell, and which will classify the good citizens of the county. And when the election returns are made public property let it be said of the men of DeKalb Co., that they are law-abiding, sanatory, economic, moral-that they are good citizens.

Herrick-Perry Nuptial.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alvie Perry in the north part of town, on Thursday evening, November 11, at 6:00 o'clock their daughter Miss Hazel and Ray D. Herrick were united in bonds of holy wedlock by Elder Fred A. Thomas, of Newville. This was one of those quiet home affairs so suggestive of peace and happiness to those directly interested. About twenty-four of the immediate relatives and friends were there. The presents were beautiful and practical, consisting for the most part of silverware. Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Burley were bridesmaid and groomsman with Mrs. Chas. Benjaman playing the wedding march, while the bridal party came in and took their places promptly at the right time. When the officiator pronounced them man and wife, congratulations followed in rapid succession, and then all repaired to the dining room where a sumptuous dinner was served, which received ample justice by all present. A good time was enjoyed by those present. The contracting parties are numbered among the very best young people and held in highest regard. THE NEWS joins their many friends in wishing them a long, happy and prosperous journey together.

A guest.

The Infare Dinner.

The Infare dinner was given the young people at the home of Mr. and Mrs Orange Herrick on last Sunday, to which about forty friends and relatives partook of the bounteous dinner prepared for them.

Coal Strikes and Fuel Famines No Longer Frighten.

Readers of this paper are beginning to see that the Original Cole's Hot Blast Heater, sold in this town only by us, is the ideal stove under all conditions. It burns soft coal, hard coal, lignite, wood, cobs or any other fuel without any change of parts. It burns any fuel you can get. This is possible because the stove is air tight, giving a perfect control of the draft due to many patented features not found on any other heater.

The Cole Manufacturing Co. of Chicago is selling 60,000 of these stoves a season, and no wonder. This stove will hold fire from Saturday night until Monday morning with soft coal, hard coal or lignite which makes an even temperature all the time so that the house is not first heated and then chilled, a certain cause of colds and most of the sickness that comes in the winter, and by keeping fire over night it does away with kindling and rebuiding of fires each morning, as is the case with other stoves.

The smoke proof feed door, which is at the top of the stove, is a delight to the woman who has always been annoyed by the smoke and gas and dirt from ordinary soft coal heaters. Who can calculate the amount of dusting, curtain washing and carpet sweeping done away with by use of Cole's Hot Blast Stove?

But this heating wonder touches the pocket book because it is guaranteed to cut the fuel bill a third over any lower draft stove of the same size. People who have been paying from $30.00 to $40.00 a winter for their coal will really find that the Cole's Hot Blast cuts the fuel bill in two. While the makers only guarantee a saving of a third, in fuel, it is a fact that when the stove is operated with care and according to directions it will reduce the fuel expense one-half. Any number of cases are reported every season where the stove has saved its cost in fuel in one single season. This is because the hot blast draft burns the gas from the soft coal, which is half of the heating value. In ordinary stoves the fire burns from the bottom, the gas arises and goes right on up the chimney. With Cole's Hot Blast the draft is fed to the fire from the top which burns the gas as it arises and uses it instead of allowing it to pass up the chimney. This would not be possible were it not for the form of draft and the air tight construction which holds back the gas and gives perfect control to the draft.

We have received a letter from the President of the Cole Manufacturing Co., authorizing us to sell the stove on the most remarkable guarantee ever made, and every reader of this paper will do well to see us before finally deciding on a heater this season.

MR. JOHN S. BOOTS

One of the Oldest Residents of the County Dead. His Tombstone has been Erected for Fifteen Year.

John S. Boots was born in Smithfield township, Jefferson County, Ohio October 5, 1822. A son of James and Sarah Stringer Boots, his father of Scotch and Holland and his mother of English descent. His father died in 1835 and his mother in 1877. His parents moved to Richland County (now Ashland County, Ohio,) he remained with them till manhood, and April, 12, 1849, married Eliza Ambrose, a native of Bedford County, Pennsylvania. She being born February 22, 1823, a daughter of John and Barbara (Folk Ambrose. May 6 following, Mr. Boots started for the west in search of a place to locate, he entered his present farm and returned to Ohio, and June 20 he started with his young wife for the wilds of Indiana. To them were born eight children, four sons and four daughters, Sarah J. living near Spencerville, Indiana, Amanda S., James A. and William R., remaining at the home, Ida and John L., of California. Two having died in infancy. August 26, 1886, Mrs. Boots died and February 22, 1868, Mr. Boots married Matilda Hall, a native of Seneca Co., Ohio. She being born March 18, 1835, a daughter of John and Sophia (Harper) Hall. To this union were born three children, Perle, who resides at the home, Elsie C., of Stuben County, Indiana and Myrtle, of Oklahoma. Mr. Boots has been one of the most enterprising and progressive men in the commnnity where he lives. To his efforts are due the credit of placing our public highways second to no other in Northern Indiana, in evidence thereof the North eastern Indiana Agricutural and Horticultural Societies each gave $25 for the best roads and after a careful inspection by expert judges, Mr. Boots won both prizes for his district No. 5. He has been a very positive and decided man in his opinions and his out spoken manner often offends, but nevertheless he is highly esteemed and respected for his upright character and honest integrity. In former years, the school house located so close to his home was the pride of his life, as a school director he has been a very efficient worker and in all his relations to the school, township and county, has been a public spirited philanthropic benefactor. It can be truthfully said of Mr. Boots that no man has spent more hours with the sick and afflicted. It never was too cold or too hot or stormy for Mr. Boots to visit the sick and administer to their wants. His sympathy for the sick and afflicted knew no bounds, he was an obliging neighbor. While his death will be keenly felt by those closely connected with him in life, yet it is a gratification to those that have watched his rise and progress in life to know that he lived to a ripe old age and enjoyed the fruits of his many years of incessant toil and hard labor. He leaves to mourn their loss nine children, seven grand children, three great grand children, two brothers and two sisters. Three brothers and four sisters preceded him in death. Mr. Boots may have his faults, but who is there among us that has none.

With Enthusiasm Over a Wonderful Discovery.

A well-known scientist recently introduced to the people of Ft. Wayne a discovery resulting from years of hard study, extensive travel and much experimenting that has become the talk of thousands and has set that city on fire with enthusiasm over the many wonderful things it has done. Scores of people who have suffered for years with some chronic ailment have been restored to perfect health after using this discovery a short while. The discovery is principally composed of a collection of roots that are soaked in hot water, then the juice is extracted from them. It is called Root Juice. Many say that the energizing effects of one swallow of the juice is almost instantaneous. It seems that it relieves almost any trouble of the stomach, bowels, kidneys and liver and that its soothing, healing and tonic action on the digestive and secretory organs is so rapid that even some of the worst cases of indigestion, constipation and nervousness, kidney troubles and rheumatism are perceptibly benefited from the very start. The great remedy will be demonstrated at Milliman's Drug Store, here in St. Joe.

To Enlarge Cemetery

And will make it a More Desirable Burial Ground.

For some time there has been a feeling among the citizens of St. Joe that there ought to be some organization in charge of the cemetery at this place. We are pleased to learn that the K. of P. lodge, No. 400, of St. Joe have taken up the matter and at their lodge meeting of November 10, a motion was made and passed that the Chancelor Commander appoint a committee of three to negociate with Mr Curie for the purchase of the present cemetery and additional land to enlarge the same. The committee appointed was: H. M. Widney, Dr. R. S. Sheffer and C. A. Patterson. After several conferences with Mr. Curie, they finally purchased the present cemetery and additional land as follows: commencing at a point directly south of the west line of Widney Ave., then west to a point 200 feet west of the west line of the present cemetery then south to a point below the old apple orchard on the river bluff, then over to river and up river to west line of Widney Ave., for which the K. of P. lodge will pay Mr. Curie $650. They propose to lay out the additional land in lots leaving a plat for a Soldiers and K. of P. monument. Walks and drives will be graveled and improvement in the cemetery will be carried out and the cemetery made as beautiful as it will be possible to be made. Plans are being considered at the present time. It is proposed to incorporate in such a way as to provide means to forever care for the cemetery that it may be a beauty spot where rests our several dead. Great credit is due the K. of P. lodge, No. 400 of St. Joe for taking hold of this much deserved improvement, and we would further say to the public that there are plans to be formulated in which John C. Carnes, Post No. 144 of this place will be known in this most laudable enterprise. When all arrangements are made and an understanding between the G. A. R. and K. of P's. is affected, the public will be fully informed. In the meantime we hope every citizen of St. Joe and locality will aid the promoters of this much needed improvement.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Try to Destroy Church.

Sacred Heart church at Clinton, Ind., was partially destroyed by dynamite. The church, built at a cost of $50,000, was dedicated July 13 last. The congregation is composed largely of Slavs and Hungarians and it is thought that the explosion followed a quarrel between the races as to which should have control of the affairs of the parish. Rev. Father Maher, formerly chaplain at St. Mary's-of-the-Woods, has been priest in charge for the past six years and through his efforts the church was built. The damage by the explosion will reach $5,000. Three hundred sticks of dynamite, enough to have blown up the neighborhood, were found in different parcels around the church. Most of the fuses had been clumsily set and failed to explode the charges. Thirty sticks of the explosive had been arranged in a tower of the church adjoining the home of Father Maher. After the explosion a policeman found this parcel of dynamite with its fuse still smoking. If the charge had been exploded the parsonage would have been destroyed and Father Maher killed.

Lion Tamer Is Badly Injured.

Just as she had finished singing and was tripping to the wings in a theatre at Springfield, Ohio, Miss Bertha Allgower, an actress of Columbus, Ohio, was attacked by a lion which she had been putting through a number of tricks. The animal leaped upon her and bore her down. One of its huge paws struck her leg, the claws cutting three deep gashes, about four inches long and nearly an inch deep. With tail switching and roaring with rage, the beast stood over the woman's helpless form. A. Camm, one of the actors, seized a prodding iron and ran to the woman's assistance. He beat back the lion and drove him through the door of his cage. The actress was carried from the stage in a fainting condition. Her wounds are not serious.

Great Schemes to Defraud Farmers.

Schemes to defraud the farmer and the would-be farmer, meaning the city man who is attracted to the country by glaring advertisements, are receiving the attention of the Department of Agriculture and it is probable that Secretary Wilson in his forthcoming annual report will sound a note of warning to the over-credulous. Tracts of almost pure sand left after the cutting of pine trees are being advertised as farming lands of the finest description; undrained swamps are described as priceless lands and all sorts of inducements are held out to attract purchasers of these alleged worthless lands.

Vast Merger of Wire Companies.

A dispatch from Boston, Mass., says: A long stride toward the complete control by one corporation of all wire communication in the United States was made in the acquisition by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company of the control of the Western Union Telegraph Company. In order to make the absorption complete the incorporation of a new billion dollar company, it is said, will be necessary to include the $592,475,400 of bonds and stock of the American Telephone Company, and the outstanding $165,000,000 of bonds and stock of the Western Union.

Henry Colerick Dead.

The Hon. Henry G. Colerick, a life long resident of Fort Wayne, Ind., and one of the best known and most brilliant lawyers in Northeastern Indiana, was found dead on a couch at the Baltes Hotel. It is believed that a blood clot on the heart was responsible for Mr. Colerick's death.

Negro Kills Another at Cairo.

Henry Small shot and killed Wm. Pope at Cairo, Ill., as the outcome of an argument over the lynching there last week of Will James, accused of the murder of Miss Annie Pelley. Both men are negroes. There is considerable feeling against Small, who is under arrest.

HEROIC DOCTOR SAVES MANY

Fire Is Smothered and First Rescuers Afterward Sent Down Find No Bodies, Alive or Dead.

The most appalling mine disaster in the history of the United States occurred Saturday afternoon in the little town of Cherry, Bureau County, Ill. A fire that started in the main shaft of the St. Paul Coal Company's works choked out the lives of 300 men working there. Thirteen rescuers who went down into a blazing shaft were roasted alive to a man. A few score of survivors, blackened by smoke and singed by flame, crawled from reeking crevices in the earth to tell an incoherent story of almost inconceivable horrors in the corridors below. The rest—there were 565 human beings in the mine when the fire broke out—perished in the flame-swept works.

Saturday night the exits of the mine, from which smoke and flame had belched since 1:30 in the afternoon, were battened down. This heroic remedy was decided on as a last means of extinguishing the fire in the works beneath. Above a seething furnace, in which three-fourths of the male population of the community is imprisoned, the town waited in silent dread for the dawning of the morning. When day came the hatches were to be opened and the toll of death begun. The cry of the widow and the orphan rang dolefully on the ear.

The fire broke out at about 1:30. Engineer John Cowley, who is in charge of the elevator running from the surface to the higher of the three veins in the mine, had descended with a load of six bales of hay. On the way down the hay was ignited by his torch. Reaching the level below him he dragged the bales out of the car and attempted to hurl them into the sump of the second shaft, at the bottom of which is a pool of water. Before he could do so both the first and second shafts were afire. A strong draft coming up to the surface turned the two shafts into red-hot flues. Almost before the danger could be realized the mine was ablaze everywhere, and the main avenues of escape cut off.

The Cherry disaster, like every great disaster in America, developed its men of the hour, its heroes. There is in Cherry one man who is deserving of all the glory that the highest personal bravery and self-sacrifice merit. He is Dr. L. B. Howe, the St. Paul Mining Company's physician. To him twenty-five of the rescued miners owe their lives. Escaping by a miracle from a red-hot lift in which twelve of his companions were roasted like quail on a griddle, he returned six times alone into the seething inferno of the shaft, and each time came to the surface with a group of men he had saved. He desisted from his efforts only after it had become apparent to every one that to descend in to the shaft again would be certain death.

Exploration of the mine was begun Sunday. Volunteers, equipped with oxygen helmets, essayed to explore the shaft. Two of them in a bucket were lowered three times down the air shaft. They found no bodies, living or dead. At a depth of 370 feet the temperature of the mine was found to be practically normal—94 degrees—indicating that the fire had burned itself out.

Mine Still Burning.

Fire in the Cherry mine continued Monday and Tuesday to block all efforts at rescue of the 300 or more entombed miners or recovery of their bodies. The pit remained sealed, and, although every effort to fight the fire was made, it probably will be several days before the shaft can be opened with safety. Temperature taken at the top of the burning mine Tuesday registered 108 degrees Fahrenheit. This was in the wet surface sand and indicated that the fire below is intense.

Meanwhile the hopeless mourners were giving part of their attention to the rites over the victims whose bodies had been found. Funerals of eight of the miners were held Tuesday, and the surviving miners and families of the dead filed through the streets behind the hearses, which were driven in line. Several of the dead were taken in funeral trains to Ladd and other near-by towns. Special funeral trains were ordered and hearses were provided from Ladd, Spring Valley, La Salle and Mendota. Officials of the mine workers' unions took an active part in the burial ceremonies.

HEROES LAID TO REST.

Men Who Died in Effort to Save Others in Cherry Mine Buried.

Heroes of the Cherry mine disaster who lost their lives by going into the burning shaft to save the men entombed below went to their last resting place Tuesday, to be followed soon by those for whom they sacrificed their lives. Tender hands lowered the bodies into the earth, while thousands of people in churches and homes in and near Cherry offered prayers. The funerals made keener the grief not only among their own kin, but among the relatives of the men still in the mine, kept from human reach by the sword of the fire demon.

The ranks of the Cherry lodge of the Knights of Pythias were thinned out, only fifteen of the sixty members responding to the roll call before the funeral of their comrades. The absent forty-five are among the victims of the mine fire. A carload of coffins arrived in a special train from Chicago. The railroad company gave a plot of ground for cemetery purposes. The ground is just back of the small frame church in Cherry, which since the disaster has been filled with weeping women and children, praying for the safety of those for whom no hope is cherished any longer by the mine officials.

DRIVEN FROM HOMES BY FLOOD

Suffering Is Caused in Eastern Kansas by High Water and Cold.

Many rivers and smaller streams in eastern Kansas are higher than ever before at this season of the year because of torrents of rain during three days. The small towns of Frankfort, Centralia, Vliets and Vermillion are flooded and many residents sought shelter on the high lands Monday night. The weather was cold and raw, causing much suffering among the people driven from their homes. At Lawrence the Kansas river is higher than it has ever been at this time of the year, and in the lowlands near there many persons have been forced to leave their homes. At Salina, Manhattan and Junction City the unusual rains are causing anxiety. At Salina the Western Star mill dam across the Smoky Hill river is threatened. The Smoky Hill and Republican rivers are unusually high and still rising.

Tornado Hits Kansas Town.

With the restoration of telegraphic communication it was learned that the town of Shook, a small station on the Missouri Pacific Railway, forty miles southwest of Wichita, Kas., practically was destroyed by a tornado. The station was demolished and the general store and a grain elevator were blown from their foundations. No lives were lost.

Claimholder Loses Big Purse.

J. L. Purcell, a claimholder near Brushie, S. D., was held up by a masked bandit and robbed of $3,472. Purcell was en route from Huron, S. D., with his horses and household effects in an emigrant car attached to a special freight train.

21 SAVED IN A SHIPWRECK.

Tug, After Two Days' Trial, Reaches Steamer Hoyt in Lake Superior.

After two days of endeavor to reach the steamer Hoyt, which was driven on a sunken reef by the storm on Lake Superior Saturday off Otter Island, the tug Helm from Duluth, finally got to the wreck and took the crew of twenty-one aboard. The crew suffered terribly Sunday night. A gale from the northeast was accompanied by a blinding snow storm and waves six feet above the decks. The steamer will probably be a total loss.

WIDOWS AND ORPHANS AT CHERRY.

HOW DEADLY FIRE DAMP WORKS

Gathers, Without Odor, About Roof of Mine, Ready to Ignite.

Fire damp or coal gas is the most insidious danger that the coal miner faces. It is an exceedingly light, colorless and odorless gas, generated by the decay of vegetable matter. It burns with a nonluminous flame, and is only dangerous as an explosive when mixed with five times its volume of air.

Coal gas, escaping into a mine shaft from cracks in the coal vein, finds its way silently into the upper chambers of the mine, its small specific gravity carrying it up over the heavier air in the corridors. Having reached a point from which it can ascend no farther, the gas begins to gather along the roof of the corridor. Miners working beneath this cloud of gas may remain for hours without knowing the danger just above them.

After a while the gas begins to mix with the air, and to sag down toward the mine floor. Then a lighted match or an unprotected miner's lamp will suddenly ignite it, causing an explosion that runs all over the mine wherever the gas is located.

The explosions are usually followed by heavy falls from the roofs of the corridors, the blocking of passageways and the imprisoning of those in the explosion area. With escape cut off the works take fire and the deadly after-damp, a gas caused by the explosion, settles down to smother to death everything living within its reach.

VILLAGE OF CHERRY.

Small Town Populated by Miners and Their Families.

Cherry, the scene of the disaster, is a small town in Bureau County on a spur track of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, three miles north of Ladd, twelve miles northwest of La Salle and nine miles north of Spring Valley. Until the railroad built an extension south about fifty miles from Davis Junction Cherry was nothing but a cross roads hamlet of ten or twelve families.

After the building of the railroad, however, extensive coal deposits were uncovered there and the mine where the men were killed is the property of the St. Paul Coal Company, a subsidiary organization of the St. Paul Railroad. It was opened about five years ago and employed nearly 500 miners. The families of these miners, with a few townspeople who own the stores and a few business enterprises, constitute the entire population of Cherry.

30 Drown; Loss Is $7,000,000.

The weather having abated, reports are being received of terrible destruction in the eastern and central parishes of Jamaica. The banana trade is almost ruined. The loss will amount to $1,000,000. Thirty persons have been drowned. Thousands of acres of land is under water and enormous damage has been done to private and public property.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The weekly review of Chicago trade by R. G. Dun & Co, says:

While trading defaults show decrease in numbers the liabilities involved have an increased average and reflect pressure in November settlements. Solvent payments through the banks, however, continue at a high level, and the general demand for money testifies to wider activities in both production and distribution. Failures reported in the Chicago district number 33, against 37 last week, 28 in 1908 and 26 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 11, against 10 last week, 10 in 1908 and 7 in 1907.

Weather conditions have favored an expanding distribution of store needs and retail trade here and at the interior makes gratifying progress, stocks of seasonable merchandise undergoing rapid depletion. The demand for holiday goods and heavyweight clothing is well maintained. Wholesale houses make large forwardings in Christmas wares, dry goods, men's furnishings and boots and shoes.

Bank clearings, $276,103,17, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 6.2 per cent, and compare with $196,244,459 in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Continued mild weather is helpful to building and outdoor construction work and facilitates fall plowing and winter wheat growth, but at the same time is a source of considerable complaint as to its effect on retail trade on heavy dry goods, clothing and heavy wearing apparel. In other wholesale lines, however, reports are still to a high degree favorable, holiday demand is especially active and spring business is being booked in good volume, except where, as in cotton goods, high prices and uncertainty as to future prices of raw material check selling operations. The general tone of affairs commercial is buoyant. In industry generally the report is still one of well filled order books and of full time run.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Nov. 11 were 221, against 212 last week, 267 the last week of 1908, 259 in 1907, 223 in 1906, and 198 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 24, which compares with 24 last week and 22 in the last week in 1908.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XX.—(Continued.)

She hated herself for yielding to the temptation, yet she was unable to resist it. She unfastened the letter easily and slipped it quickly out of its envelope—and read as follows:

"I have seen the announcement of your engagement, and though I have no right to address you, I am writing to implore you to see me once more. Perhaps you have forgotten me, or perhaps you hate me—it would not be wonderful if you did—yet if you knew all, you might forgive, or at least, pity me, for I am the most unhappy man on earth.

"I will go to Burlington House tomorrow afternoon and wait there between 5 and 6 o'clock—will you meet me there? I will wait in the second room under Leighton's great picture. Look for me there, and speak to me, I implore you. I am a changed man. You will see at a glance that I am not the Rupert Carroll that you once knew, yet if you can bring yourself to say a few kind words to me for the sake of the past—I entreat you to do so."

The letter broke off there—there was no ending, and no signature. Agatha's breath came quick and short, her pulses throbbed—every nerve in her body tingled. Suddenly she heard her husband's step along the passage.

She thrust the letter back into its envelope, fastened it down again, and went quickly to the open window. When Rupert entered, her back was turned to him, and she was busying herself amongst some pots of mignonette and scarlet geraniums that stood on his window-sill, picking off the dead leaves. He looked a little surprised to find her there; and he threw an anxious glance at his writing-table, but apparently his letter had not been touched.

He stamped his letter and put it in his pocket—took his hat and stick, wished her a careless good-bye, and went out.

For some moments after he had gone, the unhappy young wife remained motionless, where he had left her. She seemed to be stunned with her misery—every word of Rupert's letter to this unknown woman whom he loved, seemed to burn itself into her brain. She cast herself down in his empty chair and buried her face in her arms. Then suddenly she sprang to her feet again.

The letter by this time was posted, and on its way—they would meet again—he would explain the past to her—tell her how and why he had forgotten her—the story would appeal to her for compassion and for forgiveness—she would love him anew and break off her engagement for his sake.

"Oh, no! no!" she cried aloud, wildly striking her hands passionately together. "It shall not be, they shall not meet, it will be death to all my hopes of ever winning his heart if they do—and even this strong tie which is to bind him and me together in the future will be as nothing to him if he sees this woman and explains everything to her. They must not, shall not meet. But how am I to prevent it?. How am I to make her still believe him false and unworthy of her! what can I do? I have no friend to help me, I am powerless."

She paced wildly about the room. Suddenly a thought flashed through her brain. No friend?—yes, she surely had one—one who had told her only the other day that to his life's end he would always help her and stand by her. Netherville would see this woman for her—prevent this interview.

"Ah!" she cried, as a sudden inspiration came to her, "what a fool I am! Why of course the likeness between them!—of course! Why did I not think of it before?" She rang the bell violently and in the reaction of her delight she laughed aloud. "The Victoria at once, I want to go out," she said to the servant.

Twenty minuthes later the carriage stood at the door. Agatha jumped into it almost with girlish alacrity.

"To Lord Netherville's rooms in Victoria street, as fast as you can drive," she said to the coachman. And Miss Carrall only came upstairs from the kitchen just in time to see her drive away from the door.

CHAPTER XXI.

The afternoon was sultry. There was thunder in the air, but no rain had fallen yet. The ladies, however, in every variety of diaphanous summer toilettes looked anxiously up at the lowering skies, and began to hurry away from Lord's Cricket Ground, where the most popular match of the year was being played.

"Can't you take me somewhere and give me some strawberries and cream?" said the petulant, yellow-haired beauty who was hanging on to Lord Netherville's arm.

"I am afraid not. I have something I must do as I told you before, between 5 and 6 to-day. I think I thoroughly explained to you, Mrs. Vine," he continued with a little emphasis that bordered on the disagreeable, "that I could only be at your orders until half-past four—delighted to have escorted you to the match, but it is twenty minutes to 5, and I have only time now to put you into your carriage and to hurry off myself."

They were standing outside in the crowded road, looking out for Mrs. Vine's brougham. A small, ragged, and very grimy boy stood close to them.

"My eye!" ejaculated the little gutter child when he saw them. He was staring with all his might and main at the well-dressed man close beside him.

"Where are you going?" asked Marion Vine, as Netherville tucked her pale blue skirts into the brougham.

"To Burlington House," he said pretty loudly to the cabman, and the hansom, too, drove off.

The ragged urchin took to his heels and the middle of the road. There was a crowd, and the carriages moved slowly in file. Very soon he caught up the neat brougham with the dark-colored liveries.

"Gi'e us a bob, lady," said the small, shrill voice, as the rough dark head appeared at the open window.

"A 'bob' indeed!" answered Marion Vine angrily, for she was dreadfully out of temper. "Why on earth should I, I should like to know?"

"For tellin' you where the black-haired gent is ag-goin' to, ma'am—wouldn't you like to know?" The grimy paws were clasped on the edge of the window, the cunning little face bobbed up and down as the boy ran, and there was a suspicion of an actual wink in the twinkling eyes. "Just one bob is the information and cheap at that."

"Where is he going?" she asked.

"Burlington 'Ouse—where the picters are kept."

The half-crown was dropped into Billy's expectant palm, and Mrs. Vine altered her orders to her coachman immediately.

Billy Watson fell back, chuckling.

"That's what comes o' 'aving yer ears hopen and yer heyes awake!" he ejaculated with satisfaction. "Billy, my boy, you wasn't heducated first-class for nothin'."

He turned back. Lord Netherville's hansom was following Mrs. Vine's brougham a little way off.

"Gi'e's a copper, m'lord!" he cried, running after it and clinging on to the splashboard at the imminent risk of his life.

"Get out, you young blackguard. Why should I give you anything?"

"I could tell you something about them as would have settled ye short off if yer hadn't had luck."

"Get off, or I'll call a policeman and give you in charge."

"You'd best give them in charge as knocked ye on the 'ead and left yur for dead under an 'edge and would have had your jools if ye had had them about yer."

"What?" The words arrested his attention. "What do you mean by that, you young beggar?" he asked. "I believe you must be the very boy who disappeared out of Mr. McGillup's shop! Do you know that Mr. McGillup has offered a reward for news of you, you young thief?"

"He ain't offered no reward to me, and I ain't a thief, but if I was properly paid I might tell where them as is thieves, is to be found."

"Oho! so you want to turn informer, do you?"

"I want to become honest, my lord," answered Billy, with a fervor that was not altogether hypocritical. "I don't want to be mixed up with criminals any longer. If so be as I could see my way to a tidy little sum as 'ud 'elp me to start in business for myself, why, then I'd break off for ever with them as 'as led me astray."

Lord Netherville was silent for a minute. He had no particular desire to reward Billy Watson himself, nor did he care about bringing the boy's late accomplices to justice, it was none of his business. But he had a shrewd idea that Rupert Carroll would be very glad to unravel the mystery of the attack which had been made upon him.

"Look here, boy," he said, after a short pause, "I can't wait now, and I daressay you won't believe it, but I have nothing to do with the assault your friends committed upon the gentleman you mention; it was not me at all, it was another person altogether whom they knocked over."

"Oh, go along," grinned Billy, disbelievingly, "I know'd it was you. I seed you."

"Well, you are wrong as it happens; however, I haven't time argue it out with you now, but if you will come to this address—my rooms in Victoria street—at 9 o'clock this evening, you shall tell your story to a gentleman whom it interests far more than it does me."

He gave him his card and tossed him a shilling.

"I knows the address, sir. I'll be there, never fear."

But Billy Watson never did go to Victoria street, for reasons which shall hereafter be explained. Netherville told his cabman to drive on quickly, and soon disappeared down the road.

Billy strolled along leisurely, whistling gaily to himself. His little, claw-like hand well thrust into the depths of his ragged trousers' pocket, clutched the two silver coins with greedy joy. He had had a good afternoon's work already. At this rate he might soon hold up his head in the world again.

Billy Watson had fallen very low since he had been made by his tyrants to abscond from Mr. McGillup's shop. He had had a rough time of it—blows, and kicks had been his daily portion, and starvation and raggedness had become his normal condition.

Billy had begun to wonder if it would not pay him better to turn upon his employers. He was rather afraid of it—afraid of calling down their vengeance, and afraid, too, with an instinctive shrinking, of the police that he had dodged himself so often and so successfully.

He bethought him he might be able to "square" things in an amateur fashion to his own benefit, much better than by deliberately giving his friends up to justice. Mr. McGillup might think it worth while to pay him something—Lord Netherville, too, might like to have that old affair cleared up—for a consideration. If he could only scrape together a few pounds, he would cut and run and set up somewhere else.

He would not have been quite so delighted perhaps had he been aware of the proximity of some of his old friends.

"What's he up to now?" growled Jim, who was lounging at an adjacent street corner, "a' talking to gents in 'ansoms and a' swaggerin' as if he was a lord!"

"Young 'un requires watching, I expect," rejoined Shuffler. "I tell you what, Jim, that there boy knows too much. He could tell a tale or two. If that boy chose he could get us all clapped into jail; he wants watchin', he does."

"Well, I'd watch him now, if I was you."

"That's 'zactly what I means to do. You go off and give the tip to the Marquis, and I stops 'ere and keeps my heye on Billy for the rest of the day—that's what I means to do."

Jim went off as he was told. Shuffler followed Billy at a respectful distance, and by-and-by, overcome with an unwonted sense of repletion, Billy went to sleep on the door-step of an empty house, and whilst he slept, Shuffler reclined against a lamp-post hard by, and watched over his slumbers with the devotion of a mother.

* * * * *

In the second room in the Burlington House, between 5 and 6 o'clock that afternoon, there was played out a rather curious little incident. The actors in the short chapter out of this comedy in human life, appeared upon the scene one after the other.

The first to arrive was Lord Netherville, who planted himself upon a vacant seat exactly opposite Leighton's famous picture. It was the picture of the year, about which everybody was talking, but of which he took no more notice than if it had been a signboard.

"A precious fool I am!" he thought. "To come here without the slightest idea what I have come for; just to obey blindly and unreasoningly what she has told me to do. And what is the meaning of it? Nothing, so far as I can make out, save the purposeless caprice of a woman, who doesn't know what she wants herself, I expect! I hate doing things like this, and putting myself into positions that I don't understand. And yet, I can't help myself! I would do anything in the world for Agatha! although she jilted me shamefully. Heigho! it's a mad world, my masters! What possible good can my sitting here do to Agatha? I am to remain here for an hour, she said, doing nothing! It's the stupidest thing I was ever required to do! However, it was not much to ask certainly, and after having promised her somewhat grandiloquently to do anything on earth for her always, it was simply impossible to refuse the very first thing she ever asked me to do for her, however childish and trifling the request may seem to be to me! Hallo! what is the meaning of this?" he exclaimed suddenly, looking up towards a lady who was pushing her way through the crowds towards him, with a heated and rather angry face. "Marion Vane, by all that's wonderful! How on earth did she know where I was going? She couldn't have followed me; her brougham was well ahead of my hansom. Now this might be awkward—for Agatha especially told me I was to be here quite by myself. Why, Mrs. Vine! Where on earth do you spring from?" he inquired aloud, as the golden-haired widow reached him, and planted herself down breathlessly on a seat by his side.

Just in Time.

After suffering a roaring toothache for over a week, Tommy consented to visit the dentist's.

"But he'll kill me!" asserted the nervous youngster, on the verge of tears. "I know he'll kill me!"

But it was a case of "two evils."

He went with his "nanna," and when he returned, greeted his mother beamingly.

"Not dead?" bantered mamma.

"No," answered Tommy, "'cos just before the dentist killed me the toof come out!"

A tramp was walking down a street selling almanacs. Said he to an old matron:

"Will you buy an almanac?"

She declined, but the tramp said:

"Almanacs are cheap this year, but they will be dearer next."

"Oh," said the matron, "I had better take half a dozen at once!"

Painful Memory.

"I suppose you often sigh for the scenes of your childhood?"

"Yes, I do," answered Mr. Pecksniff, "but when I get to thinking about the old home place the woodshed looms up so vividly that I try to think about something else."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

THE THANKSGIVING PUMPKIN.

Ah, on Thanksgiving Day, when from east and from west
From north and from south come the pilgrim and guest,
When the gray-haired New Englander sees round his board
The old broken links of reflection restored.
When the care-wearied man seeks his mother once more,
And the worn matron smiles where the girl smiled before,
What moistens the lip, what brightens the eye
That calls back the past like the rich pumpkin pie?

O fruit loved of boyhood; the old days recalling;
When wood grapes were purpling and brown nuts were falling;
When wild, ugly faces we carved in its skin,
Glaring out through the dark with a candle within!
When we laughed round the cornheap, with hearts all in tune,
Our chair a broad pumpkin, our lantern the moon,
Telling tales of the fairy who traveled like steam
In a pumpkin-shell coach, with two rats for her team!

Then, thanks for thy presence!—none sweeter or better
E'er smoked from an oven or circled a platter!
Fairer hands never wrought at a pastry more fine,
Brighter eyes never watched o'er its baking than thine!
And the prayer which my mouth is too full to express,
Swells my heart that thy shadow may never grow less,
That the days of thy lot may be lengthened below,
And the frame of thy work like pumpkin vine grow,
And thy life be as sweet, and its last sunset sky
Golden-tinted and fair as thy own pumpkin pie!

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

THE RED MAN'S THANKSGIVING.

How Reservation Indians Enjoy the Day—A Pony Smoke Popular.

Interest in Thanksgiving day and its observance is just as intense these days among the reservation Indians as in college towns where great football games are scheduled to occur. Especially is this true in the Southwest, where the Indians have had an opportunity to become thoroughly civilized of late years. The white people find no more enjoyment in this day of universal cheer than do these same dusky redskins.

It is a day of feasting, playing and gaming, with a big dance at night. Such sport only comes once a year to them nowadays, when they have had to forsake the scalping knife for the plow. Their wild nature revolted at the idea of work, and it has been with much difficulty that the government agents have made farmers out of the young braves. A day of rest and amusement is considered good for their better nature, and the government authorities are willing that Thanksgiving day shall become a festal time for the reservation wards of the nation.

The Osages hold a big feast at Pawhuska, their capital city. All members of the tribe are invited to take part in the festivities. At the beginning and end of each meal, and there are many, the aged missionary who lives among them is invited to deliver a short prayer, thanking the Great Spirit for the good things which the agent has sent them. The food is cooked by the squaws, and, while it could be prepared in a much cleaner and more tasteful manner, the cooking is an improvement over that of a few years ago.

The Apaches and Cheyennes are in the habit of holding a pony smoke. Often the Osages indulge in this expensive festival. A pony smoke is a friendly meeting of two tribes and is especially appropriate for the occasion. The tribe giving the smoke is supposed to bear all the expenses. They provide the best game and vegetables in the market for their guests, and at the end of the first day's meeting they present a good pony to the head of each family visiting them. As a tribe consists of from 300 to 500 families, the expenses soon mount high. The Osages, being the richest reservation Indians, can better afford to hold pony smokes, and they generally invite several hundred guests from the Poncas, Tonkawas and surrounding tribes. Those accepting the ponies are supposed to return the gift with equally expensive ones later on, but few of them are in the position so to do.

The Poncas hold every Thanksgiving as a beef issue day. If the agent does not come forward and present them with a herd of cattle for this occasion they mortgage their property and buy cattle of some neighboring ranchman. A beef issue is the most typical and also the most picturesque of Indian Thanksgiving celebrations. For years the government has forbidden the issue of beef after the manner of an old time issue, but on especial occasions they are allowed the amusement of killing their own meat. It is said by the government officers who succeeded in having the practice stopped that beef issues tend to make the Indian wilder and more difficult to civilize.

A hundred cattle are turned loose in a large pacture. The young men of the tribe are mounted on mustangs and have shining guns. With the good wishes of the squaws and medicine men ringing in their ears, they ride out to kill the cattle. The beasts have no chance for life whatever. The chase is accompanied by an undue amount of wild yelling, while excitement grows intense in the camp. The smell of fresh blood makes the squaws wild, as it were. After all the cattle have been shot down then the killers give a signal which means that all of the tribe are at liberty to rush forth and secure their portion. A half beef is awarded to each squaw. The beef is cleaned and cooked on a fire on the open plain, while the medicine men dance their approval and the warriors sing in their glee. The feast follows with more dancing, and the whole day is thus spent, ending late at night with a final gorge.—New York Tribune.

Making the Proclamation.

There is a good deal of form and ceremony about the making of the Thanksgiving proclamation. It is composed by the President himself and in most instances written out in his own hand. When this is done the document goes to the State Department, where it is carefully copied in ornamental writing that is almost like engraving on the official blue paper of that department. The next thing needed on the document is the great seal of the government. This seal is kept by the clerk of pardons and commissions, and it is very carefully guarded under lock and key. Its keeper will not produce it without a special warrant signed by the President, and an impression of the seal is quite a ceremony in itself. When the proclamation has been thus duly signed and sealed many copies are made of it by clerks, and one is sent to the Governor of every State in the Union. It is also given out then to the press agents, who telegraph it all over the United States. Each Governor, as he receives it, issues one himself for his State.

Requiesent in Peace.

I'm the ghost of the gobbler
Who used to be so great;
They took my poor, neglected bones
And plied them on a plate.
Reader, shed a kindly tear
For my unhappy fate.

This is the common fate of all
Upon the world's great chart;
They've got to leave a pile of bones—
The stupid and the smart.
Even when Napoleon died
He left a Bonaparte.

We are merely puppets,
Moving on a string;
And when we think that we are IT,
The ax will fall—"Gesing!"
O grave, where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?"

—Cincinnati Post.

A THANKSGIVING IDYL.

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High. To show forth thy loving kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night. * * * Serve the Lord with gladness; come before His presence with singing. Being enriched in everything to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God. * * * O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever. To him which led his people through the wilderness; for his mercy endureth forever."

This can usually be said of every man who can play the piano well: He can't do anything else.

Doomed Man's Last Words

Fascinating Description of Scene in Court Room When Murderer Laid Bare the Curse of Drink.

The following sad story of the life of one whose life was blighted, and who was brought face to face with the gallows for the crime of murder, was published in the Pittsburg Press, and should bring the awfulness of the curse of strong drink vividly to our minds:

"Prisoner at the bar, have you anything to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon you?"

A solemn hush fell over the crowded court room. Not a whisper was heard anywhere, and the situation had become painfully oppressive when the prisoner was seen to move. His head was raised, his hands were pinched and the blood rushed into his pale, careworn face. His teeth were firmly set, and into his haggard eyes came a flash of light. Suddenly he rose to his feet and in a firm, low voice said: "I have, your honor. You have asked me a question, and I ask, as the last favor on earth, that you will not interrupt my answer until I am through.

"I stand here before this bar, convicted of the wilful murder of my wife. Truthful witnesses have testified to the fact that I was a loafer; a drunkard and a wretch; that I returned from a long debauch and fired the fatal shot that killed the wife whom I had sworn to love, cherish and protect. While I have no remembrance of committing the fearful, cowardly and inhuman deed, I have no right to complain or condemn the verdict of the twelve good men who have acted as jurors in this case, for their verdict is in accordance with the evidence. But, may it please the court, I wish to show that I am not alone responsible for the murder of my wife."

This startling statement created a tremendous sensation.

"I repeat your honor, that I am not the only one guilty of the murder of my wife. The judge on his bench, the jury in the box, the lawyers and pastors of the church are also guilty before Almighty God and will have to appear with me before His judgement throne, where we all shall be righteously judged. If twenty men conspired to the murder of one person, the law power of this land will arrest the twenty, and each will be tried and convicted for the whole crime. I have been made a drunkard by law. If it had not been for the legalized saloons of my town, I never would have become a drunkard; my wife would not have been murdered and I would not be here now, to be hurled into eternity, had it not been for the human traps set out by the consent of the government. I would have been a sober man, a tender father and a loving husband. But today my home is destroyed, my wife murdered, my little children—God bless and care for them—cast on the mercy of a cold and cruel world while I am to be murdered by the strong arm of the state. God knows I tried to reform, but as long as the open saloon was in my pathway, my weak, diseased will power was no match against the fearful, consuming, agonizing appetite for liquor.

"For one year my wife and children were supremely happy, and our little home was a perfect paradise. I was one of those who signed a remonstrance against reopening the saloons in our town. The names of one-half the jury can be found today on the petition, certifying to the good character of the rumseller, and also falsely stating that the sale of liquor was necessary in our town. The prosecuting attorney in this case was the one who so eloquently pleaded with this court for the license, and the judge, who sits on the bench and who asked me if I had anything to say before sentence of death was passed upon me, granted the license.

"I began my downward career at the saloon bar, legalized and protected by the votes of this commonwealth, which has received annually a part of the blood money from the poor, deluded victims. After the state had made me a drunkard and a murderer, I was taken before another bar—the bar of justice—by the same power of law that legalized the first bar, and now the law power will conduct me to the place of execution and hasten my soul into eternity. I shall appear before another bar—the judgment bar of God—and there you who have legalized the traffic, will have to appear with me. Think you that the Great Judge will hold me, the poor, helpless victim in your traffic, alone responsible for the murder of my wife? Nay, I in my drunken, frenzied condition have murdered one, but you have deliberately and willfully murdered your thousands, and the murder mills are in full operation today, with your consent. All of you know in your hearts that these words of mine are not the ravings of an unsound mind, but God's truth.

"The liquor traffic of this nation is responsible for nearly all the murders, bloodshed, riots, poverty, misery wretchedness and woe. It breaks up thousands of happy homes every year, sends the husband and father to prison or the gallows and drives countless mothers and little children into the world to suffer and die. It furnishes nearly all the criminal business of this and every other court, and blasts every community it touches. You legalized the saloon that made me a drunkard and a murderer, and you are guilty with me before God and man, for the murder of my wife. Your honor, I am done. I am now ready to receive my sentence and be led forth to the place of execution, there to be murdered according to the laws of the state. You will close by asking the Lord to have mercy on my soul. I will also close by solemnly asking God to open your blind eyes to the truth, to your individual responsibility, so that you will cease to give your support to this hell-bound traffic."

Last week teams were hired and work was commenced on the road, east of town. The road is being straightened and in order to do this the south side is being cut off and placed on the north. They expect to raise the road to a heighth where it will be out of reach of high waters. The improvement is one that has long been needed and as long as the money holds out the marshal has been ordered to work.

"History shows that the high cost of living is the beginning of every national decline." In these words, according to advices from Washington, James J. Hill, the railroad magnate, describes what he considers to be one of the greatest menaces to the United States. He insisted that the great statesmen of our day should turn their attention for a moment from intricate legislative questions to the prices which are being paid for articles of food and dress. These prices he claims are exorbitant and fall entirely on the masses while the rich do not suffer from them. His words will no doubt be listened to with attention throughout the country.

But one county option election can be held in two years. For instance, should the "drys" win in this election the county would remain "dry" until the "wets" took the initiative and circulated petitions calling for an election but they couldn't do so inside of two years. In other words the "wets" will have the burden of work in making the county "wet" after it it has been voted "dry" or just the reverse is true, but as the county votes on the 27th so it will remain for two years so far as the option law is concerned. Of course, there is the remonstrance law still on the statute books.

Out of Darkness.

Corunna is about to emerge out of darkness into light. Mr. M. J. Reynolds, one of her leading business men, was in town Monday and he expects the new lighting system will be completed early next week. The system adopted is known as The Pilot Acetylene Gas Plant. Seven hundred feet of pipe has been laid and there will be twenty street lights and also a capacity for about 300 twenty-four candle power lights for indoor service. The generating machine is automatic, and an average of one man for one hour each day will be all the labor conneted with the plant after it is once started. It is estimated that for each cubic foot of gas the lights will burn for ten hours, and hence the expense will be nominal. Mr. Reynolds believes the town will be satisfied and materially benefitted by this new improvement. —Waterloo Press. That is what St. Joe is in need of and the matter has been talked over by the council but no investigation was ever made.

Ten Doctors Said He Would Die

"In 1903 we wrote you regarding my husband, who was suffering from heart trouble. He was superannuated by the North Georgian Conference. Ten doctors at different times said he would die. You advised Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Restorative Nervine; we did as advised, and improvement was apparent from the very first. He recovered and the Conference in 1904 gave him a charge. He never felt better, although he has very heavy work and does a great deal of camp meeting work. I am so glad we took your advice and gave him the medicine, and feel that I ought to let you know of the wonderful good results from its use."

There has been some dispute in regard to hunting rabbits without license. The game laws that govern now were passed and are published in the acts of 1907, commencing on page 378. Section 8 of the law found on page 382 has this language: "Provided, further, that any bonafide resident of the state of Indiana, may hunt rabbits in the township in which he resides without securing such hunting license." So you see the law requiring a license is only for the hunting of such wild animals, fowls or birds as are protected during any part of the year, and rabbits are not at any time protected but it is unlawful to hunt them at any time from the first day of October to the tenth day of November, but it is not unlawful to kill them at any time."

Indiana Grain Prizes.

Again Indiana has an opportunity to beat the world in the quality of its corn and other grains. The state has won on corn at two national shows and has the distinction of producing the best corn in the world.

The premium list of the National Corn Exposition, just received, shows 120 prizes for Indiana corn ranging from $1 to $50; 30 for wheat and 30 for oats. These are open to Indiana only.

In the world classes, where Indiana wins honors, there are 110 prizes for which the state may compete in exhibiting flax, rye, buckwheat, beans, peas, Kaffir corn, sorghum and broom corn.

Prizes ranging from $1 to $150 for world beaters in the grass section may be won by Indiana as 170 of these premiums are offered for clover seed, clover in sheaf; timothy seed and sheaf; alfalfa seed and sheaf; of wild hay; millet seed and sheaf.

But in the corn classes is where Indiana expects to win distinction. The $1,000 trophy offered by the Indiana Corn Growers association is now held in the state from which it was offered. It can be kept if Indiana again shows the best ten ears in the world. A new trophy has appeared, worth $1,000 and offered for the best single ear in the world. Indiana wants it also and may come home with it. Exhibits must be in Omaha, November 27, the exposition opening December 6 and closing December 18. Prof. G. I. Christie of Lafayette, is in charge of the exhibit which the state agricultural college will make in Omaha and it will be one of the most attractive among the twenty-five state exhibits.

Taxes paid by DeKalb Co. Saloons. Pauper Expenses

The liquor element is crying out so loudly concerning the taxes that the saloons of DeKalb county paid while said saloons were running that we desire to turn the searchlight on these claims.

For the year ending March 1st, 1907, forty-one liquor licenses were issued in DeKalb county. All their owners were supposed to be visited by the tax assessor and their stock and fixtures assessed for the purposes of taxation in the year 1908.

Seven of these saloonkeepers either did not get on the tax list at all or else failed to give in any saloon stock and fixtures to the assessors. The thirty-four remaining saloons give in stock, fixtures, eating rooms, cash registers, etc., valued at a total of $9,231. This was divided as follows: Eight Auburn saloons, $2,350; Garrett, eleven saloons, $2,730; six Butler saloons, $1,350; five saloons in Waterloo, $890; three in Ashley had $641, and one in Auburn Junction whose stock and fixtures were valued at $315.

The entire taxable property of DeKalb county is in the neighborhood of $16,000,000. Thus it can be seen that only a little over one-half a mill of each dollar of taxable property in DeKalb county was saloon property. These thirty-four saloons should have paid $241.69 taxes—a very small sum, and one which is more than equalled by many a taxpayer in DeKalb county. However, $74.59 of this small amount went delinquent and is still unpaid. Thus, from the thirty-four saloons of DeKalb county in 1908 were paid only $167.10 for saloon stock, fixtures, eating rooms, etc.

Aside from their license fees these saloons paid almost nothing. The $4,100 in county licenses is more than overbalanced by a single item of expense to the county, 90 per cent of which is caused by the saloons. That one item is the cost of the county poor farm. The new infirmary had just been erected at a cost of $30,000. Three hundred and twenty acres of land belong to the county, on which the infirmary is located. This land with its improvements is worth $30,000. This sum, added to the cost of the infirmary, makes a total of $60,000, which, placed at 6 per cent. interest, amounts to $3,600 a year. In addition to this the county is taxed $4,000 a year for the care of its county poor. This makes a total cost for the county poor of $7,600; 90 per cent. of this is $6,840. $4,100 of county license fees deducted from the $6,840 leaves $2,740—the amount the saloon has cost the county, in one item alone, annually, over and above what the saloon pays in revenue. This does not take into account jurors and bailiff fees, the board of criminals, the cost of the insane and the cost of the township poor, a large per cent. of which is traceable directly to the liquor traffic.

Mr. Taxpayer, if you want to reduce your taxes, vote "Yes" in favor of prohibiting the saloons in DeKalb county. LOCAL OPTION LEAGUE.

SKIN TROUBLES CURED.

Two Little Girls Had Eczema Very Badly—In One Case Child's Hair Came Out and Left Bare Patches—Cuticura Met with Success.

"I have two little girls who have been troubled very badly with eczema. One of them had it on her lower limbs. I did everything that I could hear of for her, but it did not give in until warm weather, when it seemingly subsided. The next winter when it became cold the eczema started again and also in her head where it would take the hair out and leave bare patches. At the same time her arms were sore the whole length of them. I took her to a physician, but the child grew worse all the time. Her sister's arms were also affected. I began using the Cuticura Remedies, and by the time the second lot was used their skin was soft and smooth. Mrs. Charles Baker, Albion, Me., Sept. 21, 1908."

How to Make a Weak Back Better.

Women who suffer with backache, bearing-down pains, dizziness, constant dull, tired feelings, will find hope in the advice of Mrs. M. I used about everything said to be good for kidney trouble, but Doan's Kidney Pills brought me the first real help and three boxes cured me."

Animal Antipathies.

"In some towns they won't let us show," said the circus animal trainer, "unless we have no camels with us. Camels are a serious drawback to shows. Horses are so much afraid of them that lots of towns won't let a camel enter their gates.

"A horse won't go near a piece of ground a camel has stood on. The very smell of a camel in the air will make a horse tremble and sweat, and this fear isn't only found occasionally in a horse here and there. It is found in every horse all over the world. Queer, isn't it? I often wonder why it is. Cattle hate dogs in the same way, and cats hate dogs so too. Here, though, we can account for the hatred. Dogs in primitive times fed on cattle, no doubt, and even to-day here and there they kill and feed on kittens.

"Horses love dogs. I'm sure I don't know why. Dogs fear no animals but pumas and leopards. You can take a dog up to a lion's or a tiger's cage, and he will show no fear, but take him up to the cage of a puma or a leopard and he will tremble and moan and slink away out of sight.

"All very puzzling, isn't it?"—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Knew of One.

"Suggestion? H'mph! Did you ever hear of a real cure effected by 'suggestion'?"

"I personally know of one. I once suggested to a young fellow that if he didn't want to have a big dog chasing him off the premises he'd better quit coming to my house, and it cured him of the habit."

CAREFUL DOCTOR

Prescribed Change of Food Instead of Drugs.

It takes considerable courage for a doctor to deliberately prescribe only food for a despairing patient, instead of resorting to the usual list of medicines.

There are some truly scientific physicians among the present generation who recognize and treat conditions as they are and should be treated regardless of the value to their pockets. Here's an instance:

"Four years ago I was taken with severe gastritis and nothing would stay on my stomach, so that I was on the verge of starvation.

"I heard of a doctor who had a summer cottage near me—a specialist from N. Y., and as a last hope, sent for him.

"After he examined me carefully he advised me to try a small quantity of Grape-Nuts at first, then as my stomach became stronger to eat more.

"I kept at it and gradually got so I could eat and digest three teaspoonfuls. Then I began to have color in my face, memory became clear, where before everything seemed a blank. My limbs got stronger and I could walk. So I steadily recovered.

"Now after a year on Grape-Nuts I weigh 153 lbs. My people were surprised at the way I grew fleshy and strong on this food."

AMERICA'S LARGEST AND MOST BEAUTIFUL SCOTTISH RITE CATHEDRAL

Consecrated and Dedicated at Fort Wayne, Indiana, Wednesday Evening, November Seventeenth, 1909.

The Cathedral is designed in a modification of Sixteenth Century Gothic Architecture, united with that Medieval spirit closely associated with Masonic Guilds.

To the uninitiated as well as the initiated, there is presented a certain relationship that cannot be misunderstood, which truths are intended to delight the eye, and the deep inculcations to develop the soul.

The building covers an area of 80 ft. in width by 130 ft. in depth, with the exception of the front, which has a width of 88 feet, and a vestibule projection of 13 feet, with the steps starting directly from the sidewalk, making the full depth of the building occupy the full depth of lot, 150 feet.

The building is thoroughly fire-proof in its construction, has an exterior of Indiana Oolitic limestone, with a combination of smooth and rock face. The roof is constructed of steel and concrete and covered with red tile. The height of the building above the sidewalk is about 85 feet. The four corners are emphasized with low towers or pavillions, which provides space for stairways and elevators, and are entirely separated from the other parts of the building. The approach to the building is up a broad flight of five steps into a vestibule, 30x11 feet, continuing five additional steps to the first floor, which has an elevation of 6 feet above the sidewalk. The entrance directly is into a Gothic hall, 30x17 feet. At the right is the passenger elevator. At the left is a stairway, six feet in width, leading to the basement and to the floors above.

In the basement of the building, which has an elevation of five feet above the sidewalk, is the check room, 48x21 feet, a Men's Toilet Room, Billiard Room and Bowling Alley.

On the first floor is the Banquet Hall, size 77x82 feet, and a ceiling of 16 feet, with a balcony at the front for visitors and at the rear for musicians. The Banquet Floor and Gallery provides a seating space for one thousand.

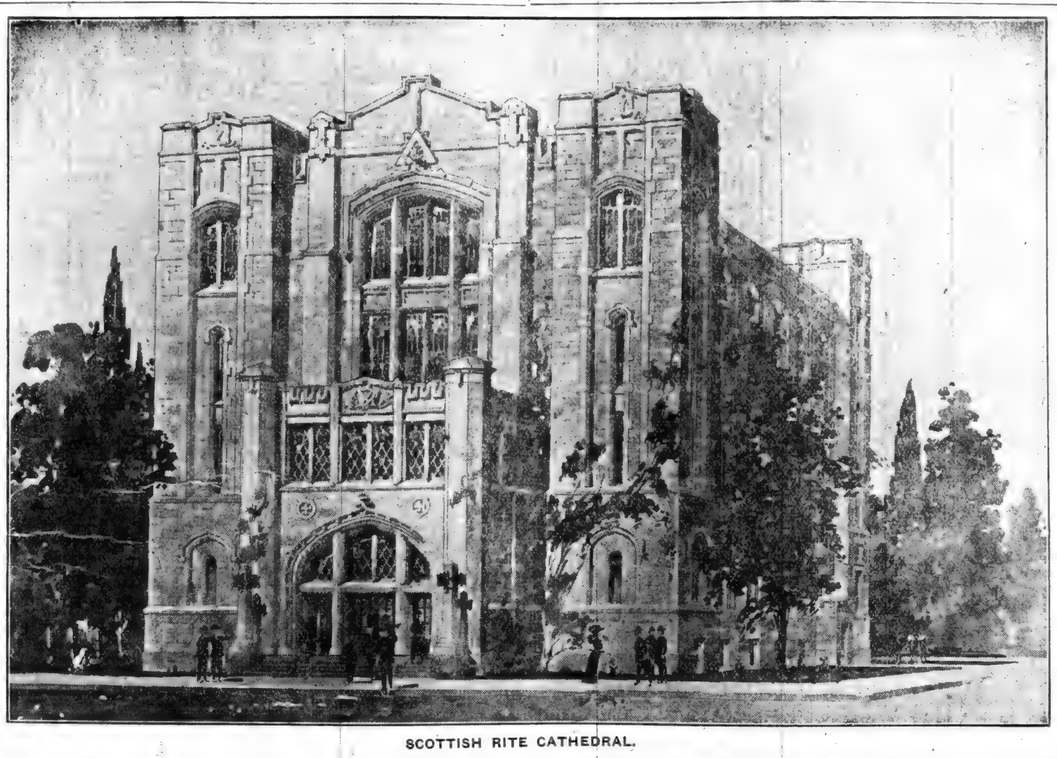
Immediately in the rear of the Banquet Hall, is the Kitchen, 60x24 feet, provided with the necessary cold storage and dish pantry, and all modern conveniences.

The second floor is adapted to the social features of the building, and provides for a Ladies' Parlor, 23x33 feet.

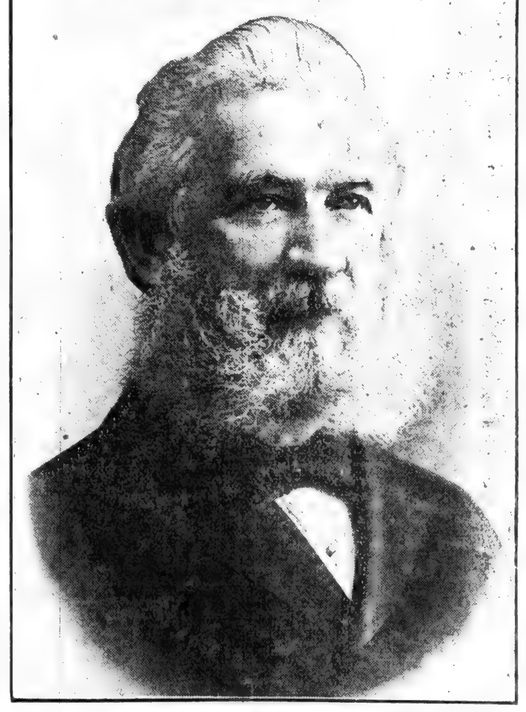
In the center of the building, including the "Approach" over the front entrance, is the Library, 30x62 feet. Directly back of the Library and Ladies' Parlor is the Social Room, 54x48 feet, and in immediate connection with the Social Room is the Lodge of Perfection Room, or business room of the Bodies. All these rooms open en-suite with large sliding doors. In connection with the Library and Stair Hall is the Secretary's Office, 22x17 feet.

The Consistory Auditorium is on the third floor, and is provided with a scenic stage, 60x24 feet in depth, with a full depth of the stage of 32 feet and a proscenium opening of 35 feet. This stage has an elevation of two feet above the floor, with a floor working space in front of 41x56 feet. In connection with the stage, are Property Rooms, Fly Galleries and a thorough equipment of stage scenery. The Auditorium is 75x84 feet, and is arranged on three sides in an amphi-theatre form, the first tier of seats being at an elevation of four feet above the floor, and they then rise in tiers two and one-half feet each to the height of six tiers on the sides and to the height of eight tiers at the end. This arrangement provides for the seating capacity of five hundred and fifty. On this floor underneath the amphi-theatre is provided space for Candidates' Room, Assembly Room, and Ritual Work Rooms. There is a 14-foot wide corridor across the front of the building, connecting Stair Hall and Elevator Hall, with a private entry room between Corridor and Consistory Auditorium. The Consistory Auditroium has a height of 35 feet, provided with a groined and arched ceilings, carrying with it the characteristics of the Cathedral.

The entrance vestibule has a dark Tennessee Marble wainscoating 7 feet high and groined ceilings in the Vestibule and Stair Hall. Roman Mosaic Floors, with Masonic Emblems, and all floors throughout the building except in the Banquet Hall, Social Rooms and Stage Floor will be Marble Granito and cement.



SCOTTISH RITE CATHEDRAL.



SAMUEL CROCKER LAWRENCE, 33°,
Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander.

The heating system is by vacuum steam. The ventilation is controlled by an automatic temperature regulation system.

The windows are designed to harmonize with the architecture and Masonic spirit of the building, with ornamentation and emblems symbolic of Scottish Rite Masonry. The memorial windows on the west side of the first floor are emblematic of the progress of man from youth to old age, and the several Masonic virtues, particularly those of Life, Truth, Justice, Faith, Hope and Charity.

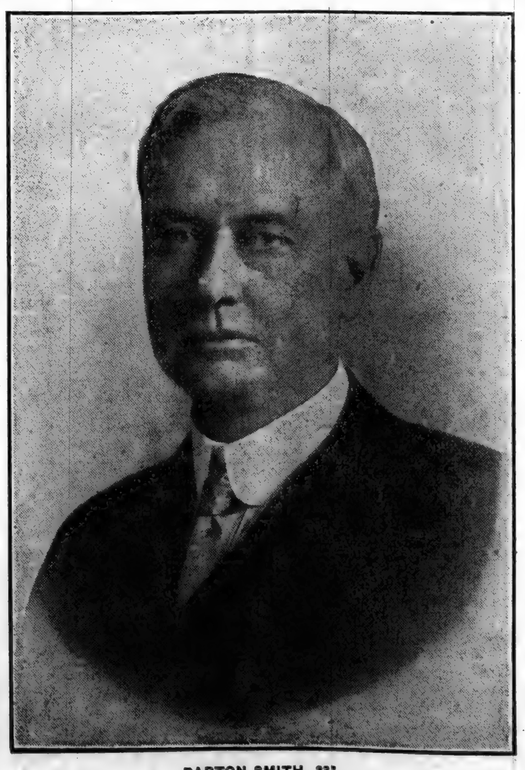
Over the inside vestibule doors, forming a part of the Entrance Hall, is a large memorial art glass transom, with the emblem of an active 33° Mason and figures of Faith and Hope.

The decoration of the Arch forming proscenium to stage, is laid on a field of gold, yellow and spiritual color, with interlacing vines, symbol of fraternity, the wild rose, typifying the Rose Croix or Faith, and oak leaves, the victories and strength of the Crusaders, mingled between are represented the titles and emblems of all the degrees, from the Fourth to the Double Eagle of the Thirty-second, which crowns the apex of the opening, each typified with its individual colors, supported on either side with chivalric figures of Sts. John and Sts. Andrew. A large mural painting, with allegorical figures, symbolizing Charity, occupies a place in the Entrance Hall over the doors to the Banquet Hall.

At the north end of the Consistory Amphi-theatre is the grand organ, which in size and volume is equal to any of the large organs in the country, and is provided with an echo organ and a set of twenty chimes.

The mystic imagination uses nature only as an alphabet with which to spell spiritual meanings; it creates such forms of wonder, mystery and beauty as are sculptured on the walls of Egyptian temples, it assembles the stones of a Cathedral according to laws as organic as those which determine the course of the stars.

Architecture thus becomes a living art, for architecture deals in visible symbols, and visible symbols form the language of Scottish Rite Masonry.



BARTON SMITH, 33°,
Puissant Grand Lieutenant Commander.

OWES HER LIFE TO

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Vienna, W. Va.—"I feel that I owe the last ten years of my life to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Eleven years ago I was a walking shadow. I had been under the doctor's care but got no relief. My husband persuaded me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it worked like a charm. It relieved all my pains and misery. I advise all suffering women to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—MRS. EMMA WHEATON, Vienna, W. Va.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases of any similar medicine in the country, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every such suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

The Doctor's Gift.

Dr. Robert Glynn-Clobery, a delightful old character described in "Reminiscences of Cambridge," was a fellow of King's College, where he resided. During a long illness he attended a poor man, of whose family party a pert, talkative magpie made one, and as the patient observed that Dr. Glynn-Clobery always, when paying a visit, had some joke with the bird, he thought that perhaps the doctor might like to possess it.

Accordingly, when the poor man was well again, with overflowing gratitude, but with no money to pay a bill, he thought he could do no better than make his kind friend a present of the magpie; and so the prisoner in its cage was conveyed to his rooms in King's College.

The bearer met with a kind reception, but was desired to carry the bird back with him.

"I cannot," said the doctor, "take so good care of it as you can; but I shall consider it mine, and I entrust it to you to keep for me; and as long as it lives I will pay you half a crown weekly for its maintenance."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets, small, sugar-coated, easy to take as candy, regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels and cure constipation.

Remedies are Needed

Were we perfect, which we are not, medicines would not often be needed. But since our systems have become weakened, impaired and broken down through indiscretions which have gone on from the early ages, through countless generations, remedies are needed to aid Nature in correcting our inherited and otherwise acquired weaknesses. To reach the seat of stomach weakness and consequent digestive troubles, there is nothing so good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a glyceric compound, extracted from native medicinal roots—sold for over forty years with great satisfaction to all users. For Weak Stomach, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Pain in the Stomach after eating, Heartburn, Bad Breath, Belching of food, Chronic Diarrhea and other Intestinal Derangements, the "Discovery" is a time-proven and most efficient remedy.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The owners of the John Day estate, south of Connersville, purchased fifty head of Dorset sheep for their ranch from John Nash, of Tipton, paying $1,000 for the flock.

The first hunting accident of the season in Wells County occurred when Clifton Fisher, the 20-year-old son of Thomas Fisher, a farmer, shot himself while climbing over a fence with a loaded shotgun. The charge tore off part of the right ear.

Ernest May killed a large eagle on his farm, a few miles northeast of Seymour. The bird measured seven feet from tip to tip and weighed twelve pounds. The eagle is brown and white in color, but ornithologists have been unable to agree on its classification.

The Rev. T. T. Smith, a minister from Lexington, Ky., who is visiting friends at Brazil, caught a sunfish that had two mouths. The fish was caught in Eel river, near Reelsville. It was normal in every manner except that it had a second mouth, perfectly formed, immediately below its regular mouth.

Freak ears of corn are attracting unusual attention at Owensville this season. An ear of corn resembling a dumbbell was found by V. V. Montgomery. There is no grain on the cob where the two small ears join. Another freak is a forked ear of corn. The ear is well developed and near the center of the cob a prong shoots out well filled with grain.

Mrs. Mary Pfiefer, wife of Theodore Pfiefer, of Evansville, has taken out a hunter's license. She is the first woman to receive one. Mrs. Pfiefer is a good shot and says she will take several hunts with her husband this season. Miss Margaret Sihler, sister of former County Clerk Charles Sihler, says she will take out a license and try her hand at hunting.

William Hodapp, a farmer living near Seymour, has an original way of catching hawks, which have been killing his chickens. On a post near the place where the hawks were in the habit of coming he placed a steel trap which securely holds the pilfering birds. He has already captured six hawks by this means, and says the others are much more wary than formerly.

Frank Mason, a farmer near Terre Haute, was found dead sitting on a milking stool, with a broken neck and wounds on the head. The Coroner returned a verdict that death was from unknown causes. It was hard to believe he remained on the stool after the cow had kicked him to death, and yet there was no evidence that any one had killed him, and then placed his body sitting on the stool.

While Clarence Wade and his father, Phillip Wade, were hunting together near Muncie, Clarence thought he saw a rabbit in the bushes and let fly with both barrels, with the result that he brought down the elder Wade, the shot entering his legs. The injured man was taken to a hospital, where his wounds were declared not to be serious, barring complications, although considerable flesh had been torn away by the shot.

The Hagenbeck & Wallace shows have arrived at their home in Peru from Dyersburg, Tenn., where they closed the season. The second section of the train had a wreck in Illinois and did not arrive home until fifteen hours after the first section. The elephants seemed to be glad to get home again. As they passed down Broadway they seemed to recognize the buildings, and after they had crossed the river bridge they made a bee line for the winter quarters and it was all the keepers could do to keep up with them, even on a run.

The 14-year-old daughter of William Bassett, living southeast of Morocco, was suddenly attacked with sharp pains in the back, between the shoulders, and a doctor was called. In making an examination the physician detected a foreign object beneath the skin. An incision revealed the presence of a sewing needle an inch and a half long, which was removed with difficulty. The presence of the needle in the girl's back can not be accounted for except on the theory that she swallowed it accidentally some time ago, and that it worked its way through her body.

After Prosecuting Attorney Harry W. Long had appeared in the City Court at Muncie against William Dildine, a farmer, charged with intoxication and had caused the man to pay a fine, Long thought there was something familiar about the face of the defendant. He asked: "Aren't you the old Billy Dildine, of Washington township, who used to be my schoolmaster, and who used to whale us kids for acting up and playing hookey?" "I'm the same and you sure have got even," was the old man's response. Dildine cheerfully paid his fine, amounting to $11.

Superintendent Larue, of the Southeastern Hospital for the Insane, was robbed of jewelry valued at $1,000 cash and $25 in cash. The burglar gained entrance to Larue's bedroom by forcing a window.

Many dealers in turkeys for shipment east are advising farmers to hold their turkeys for the Christmas trade, urging that they will thus make better money, as the fowls are at present little more than bones and pin feathers.

James Wilson, aged 15, of Evansville, went hunting and shot himself in the right hand while trying to get through a barbed wire fence. It is feared amputation will be necessary.

While hunting near New Albany, Harley Kinchelo, aged 15, was shot in the breast by Elvis Sanders. Fifty shot were picked form the injured boy and his condition is still regarded as serious.

Charles Call shot a snow-white crow near the railway station in Morocco. Hunters report having seen this bird with other crows frequently in the last three years, and it had been shot at a number of times. It was presented to Dr. L. H. Recker, who will have it mounted.

In looking up an old record in the County Clerk's office at Greenfield recently, a marriage return by James Conoway, Justice of the Peace of what was then Harrison Township, was discovered. The date was 1849, and read: "This is February, the 16th day, Married by me, Squire Conoway, Joined together two evil weeds—John Kingen and Mary Ann Meads."

Bud Hungerford, living southeast of Shelbyville, has been missing a number of chickens recently. He went to his poultry yard shortly after dark when he heard a noise among the chickens. Opening the door of the henhouse he found a large possum that had been committing the thefts. The possum tipped the scales at fifteen pounds after the farmer killed it.

Dandelions in bloom are unusual for November, but they are now seen in profusion on the courthouse lawn and on private lawns of Newcastle. The yellow blooms made their appearance as if by magic. From the country districts come reports that frogs are croaking merrily and that grasshoppers are chirping and frisking about in the grass. Old residents do not recall when the weather was so balmy and spring-like in November as it has been recently.

Van B. Pearcy, a well-known liveryman of Martinsville, died suddenly while attending to business at the barn. He is survived by a widow and family of grown children, brothers and sisters. He had been associated in the livery business for some time with his son Robert. This makes the second sudden death in the Pearcy family recently, as his brother, George Pearcy, died a few weeks ago, at his home east of Martinsville, suddenly from heart trouble.

Officials of the engineering department of the Pennsylvania have announced that large shops to cost $2,000,000 would be erected at Terre Haute, the work to begin in the spring. The works will be car and machine shops and will employ four thousand men. A large roundhouse now under construction, will have twenty-five stalls, and the new works will be placed alongside it. The road has purchased a tract of 120 acres east of the city and extensive yards will be laid out.

While playing with a number of companions around a bonfire in Mishawaka, Arthur Stevens stumbled and fell into the flames. His hair caught fire as did a celluloid collar he was wearing. A woman living nearby ran to her home and obtained a shawl with which she smothered the flames. A physician was hurriedly called and it was found that all the hair had been burned from the head of the boy and that his face was badly scarred. It is thought, however, that the burns will not prove fatal.

The Board of Trustees of the State Soldiers' Home instructed John W. Rinear, treasurer of the Board, to return to the Treasurer of State the sum of $8,000 representing the unexpended balance in the 1909 appropriation for the maintenance fund of the home. This is the first time that such an amount has been saved and the members of the Board and commandant congratulated themselves on the showing made. The Board received fifty-five applications for membership and approved forty of them.

Nathan N. Spence, a Civil War veteran and justice of the peace at Muncie, believe that he is justly entitled to the title of the marrying squire of Eastern Indiana. Since February, when the power to perform marriage ceremonies was given Spence, he has united in marriage 102 persons. The men whom he has married range in age from 17 to 83 years, and the women from 16 to 72 years. The man who was married at the age of 83 took on himself at that time the care of his eighth bride. Six of his former wives were dead, and a divorce separated him from his seventh. "Not one of the 101 persons whom I have united in marriage in the last few months has applied for a divorce," remarked Justice Spence, "but still I suppose I oughtn't to brag—they haven't had much time."

Francis Joseph Reitz, president of the City National Bank of Evansville, has announced that he would build two additions to the home of the Little Sisters of the Poor there to cost about $100,000.

Gordon Thurston, of Shelbyville, a month ago gave his horse a small chew of tobacco to cure an ailment from which the animal was suffering. Since then the horse has acquired the tobacco chewing habit and uses almost a package of "scrap" each day.

...MORTUARY...

A Record of the Deaths During the Past Week.

Jacob A. Shaffer.

Jacob A. Shaffer was a man of sterling worth, of noble character and upright life, in whom the community had unbounded confidence. He was born in Dortstown, Wayne county, Ohio, March 5, 1850. Came to Indiana when a young man. On March 5, 1871, he married Amanda Coburn. To this union were born two children, Dallis, who died at the age of twenty and Alice, the wife of Newton Perry. On June 11, 1871, he confessed his faith in Christ and was buried with him in baptism by Cyrus Alton, and arose to walk in newness of life and continued steadfastly in both faith and practice, and was ever ready to do his part and as the master said of Mary, "He hath done what he could." A kind husband, tender, careful father, a good neighbor. In the death of Bro. Shaffer, the community has lost a noble citizen, the church a valued member and the family a strong hope, but we mourn not as those who have no hope. He leaves a wife, one daughter, three grand children, one brother and two sisters to mourn their loss. The funeral services were held at Coburn's Corners, Tuesday afternoon at 2o'clock conducted by Rev. J. A. Brown. Burial in the Alton cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We extend to our friends who administered unto us during the illness and death of our husband and father, our many thanks. The Family.

Alice Matildia Knight-Blair.

Alice Matilda Knight—Blair, was born in DeKalb County, Indiana, February 20, 1873, and died at her home November 11, 1909, aged 36 years 3 months and 29 days. Mrs. Blair was one of the twelve children of the family of William and Mary Ann Knight. Father, mother, two brothers and two sisters having preceded her over the river of death. Her husband, William Blair, one brother John; six sisters, Mrs. Rebecca Hildebrand, of Lagrange Indiana, Mrs. Sarah Belt of Grimes, Mo., Mrs. Emma Daily of Stroh, Indiana, Mrs. Minerva Baker, Mrs Dorcas Johnston and Esther, with many other relatives and a host of friends is left to mourn her departure.

Tillie, as she was known by every one, was loved and respected by all who knew her. She was converted and joined the Fairview M. P. church, March 9, 1890, under the administration of Rev. S. S. Stanton. She was married to William Blair, December 24, 1908

Her life was one of patient toil and implicit trust in God. She was a true christian, faithful to God, faithful to her beloved church, and faithful to her friends and relatives.

More or less afflicted all her life, she never complained but toiled patiently on. Since her greater affliction about two and a half years ago, she has been a constant sufferer, but she patiently endured hardship as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. She often expressed her desire to depart, as to her to die was gain. Again paralysis suddenly attacked her at noon Friday, November 19, and in a few hours of intence agony she departed to greet her loved ones on the other shore. There has gone out from us a good woman, a true christian. The funeral was held at Fairview church, Monday at 2 P. M. Rev. J. C. McCain officiating. Burial at Concord. Elza Kinsey funeral director.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to thank the neighbors for the kinkness shown during the illness and death of our beloved wife and sister. The Family.

Hunters sometimes get sassy when hunting on farms in this community without permission. This occurred a short time ago, but remember the land owners have some rights that ought to be respected to say the least.

We understand the business men of the little city of Grabill are arranging for a farmers institute in the near future. This is certainly a step in the right direction and one that should meet the approval of all. Cedar Creek township has not been well represented in institute work, if at all, and we are glad to know that an effort is being made to get in line with other townships of the county. We know the county institute officers are men who make things go, and an institute in new territory should be a grand success. Success to the effort and best wishes for the leaders.

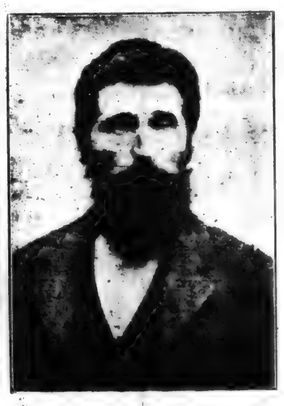
Mr. and Mrs. John Funk Celebrated Golden Wedding



COURTESY OF THE AUBURN COURIER

Mr. and Mrs. John Funk residing near Concord, appropriately celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Wednesday, November 17th, and a felicitious time was enjoyed by all who were present. Regardless of the inclemency of the prevailing weather elements many were present to partake of the festivities

It was a season of good cheer in which the family and other relatives of the Funks participated and the event will without doubt be long remembered.

The accompanying photographs give the likeness of Mr. and Mrs. Funk, he being seventy-three years of age, and Mrs. Funk, sixty-nine. They have resided in this county during the major portion of their lives and have been exemplary citizens, enjoying the fellowship of a large circle of friends.

A big dinner was served at the home Monday and all other things which go to make such an event a howling success were in evidence.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brink, Butler; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Larne, Mongo, Ind.; Mrs. C. A. McCully, Lagrange; Mr. and Mrs. James Astry, Allen County; Mr. and Mrs. John L. Lyons, Newville; Mr. and Mrs. J. Y. Davis, St. Joe; Mr. Oliver L. Funk and son Frank and daughter May, Auburn; Mr. and Mrs. Martin Miller and little daughter Evelyn, Ft. Wayne; Mr. and Mrs Perry Beber and daughter Bessie and son Robert, Garrett; Mr. and Mrs. E. B. The Doctor's First Question

"How are your bowels?" This is generally the first question the doctor asks. He knows what a sluggish liver means. He knows what a long list of distressing complaints result from constipation. He knows that headaches, bilious attacks, indigestion, impure blood, and general debility are often promptly relieved by a good liver pill. We wish you would talk with your own doctor about this subject. Ask him at the same time if he approves of Ayer's Pills. Do as he says. J.C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

The Cost of Election.

(Waterloo Press)

The report is being circulated by the wets that the cost of the election will be enormous and that it will increase the taxes to such an extent that it will be hard for the people to meet. Such talk is without foundation and merely wild guess work used for the sole purpose of inducing people to vote wet, while their moral sentiment would call for a vote for the drys.

Let us get at the problem. In DeKalb county there is $16,000,000.00 of taxable property. The estimated cost of the election placed at $1,800 would mean that the cost would be 11¼ mills on the hundred dollars valuation. Take this to be the case, the cost for the election would be so small that no taxpayer who has the better morals of the community at heart would object to several times the amount. This would mean that a man whose valuation is $500 would have to pay 6¼ cents taxes for his share of the county option election. If he is assessed at $1,000 his share would be but 11¼ cents. Where is there a man in DeKalb county who would not vote dry on account of his extra cost?

Take it on the other hand, the levy has been made for the coming years, out of which fund this cost of the option election will be paid, and the levy was reduced from 47 to 44 over three years ago. After paying the current expenses on January 1, 1910, three will be left on hand in the county treasury the sum of $35,000. Further, with the reduction in the levy on January 1, 1911, after paying the current expenses of the county, it is estimated there will be on hand the sum of $100,000 00. It is on this basis that the cost of paying a new courthouse is to be met. By stopping a moment to figure, it can easily be seen that the cost of the option election will not increase any levy for the reason that the levy is already made from which the cost of the election will be paid.

The above levy of 44 cents has been made after making an allowance of the loss of saloon revenue in the county. In addition to this there is no doubt but that the court costs will be lessened, and also that the cost of caring for the infirmary patients will be decreased from year to year with a dry county.

These figures are submitted for every taxpayer, and, Mr. Taxpayer, you are asked to take a pencil and figure it out yourself.

Buy Rubbers Here

We were most fortunate this year in placing our orders for Rubbers early before the advance in price and therefore are able to sell them now at what most dealers are paying for them. It will pay you to come to this store for this class of footwear this season. We are headquarters for first grade rubbers, showing a complete stock of Ball Band and Malden Brands.

These are both First quality and are sold with an absolute guarantee of being such in every way. Some stores try to palm off second and third grade rubbers at first grade price, especially when the price is high in the market. If you want to get the very best rubbers to be had, at the very lowest price this year, we are here with the first quality goods to supply you. Ball Bands and Maldens are at the top in quality and at the bottom in price here.

WE SELL

Douglas and Selz shoes guaranteed to be worth every cent you pay for them, or your money back, or a new pair of shoes to replace them. Is'nt that a fair Proposition?

DeKalb Goes Dry By 959 Votes

All Doubt Removed. Both Drys and Wets Fought the battle to a Finish. The Ladies must be given Credit for their great interest taken. The brewery Automobile of Wayne assist Local Wets Saturday. Given 5 Minutes to Leave Town In.

DeKalb County, which for weeks has been the battle ground for the saloon question, can now lay back and rest, the question being settled as far as she is concerned for two years at least. This campaign, it is claimed, has been one of the hottest ever raged in this state on the local option question and the result of the election is, perhaps more far reaching than we are apt to imagine. Both "wets" and "drys" have left no stone unturned that would further their cause, the former sending out circulars and using the newspapers, the latter, sending out speakers and using newspaper space. Although feeling ran quite high everything went on quietly as one could wish when toward the close of day a Mr. Weaver of Ft. Wayne, who had been hired by the "wets" to bring in wet voters, drove near one of the polling places with Mr. Jenkins, a farmer who lives near town. Mr. Jenkins had been in town during the day but had not voted. As he did not quite understand how to vote, he went home; upon learning this some faithful follower of the cause of Bacchus, informed Mr. Weaver of the fact, who at once drove over for him, being accompanied by two St. Joe men, one who left him at the railroad the other returning to the polls with him and Mr. Jenkins. When the machine was stopped at the polling place before Mr. Jenkins had alighted from the automobile his daughter began to implore him not to vote wet. Unheeding he be pushed forward to the booths and voted. The few women who happened to be near the polls protested against Weaver participating in this election and suggested that he be treated to a supply of eggs. Upon being advised that his presence was not needed in our midst by a few of our determined townsmen who gave him five minutes to leave town. He evidently thinking discretion to be the better part of valor slowly left our town. About thirty or more people witnessed the affair. This should be a lesson to outsiders not to meddle with political affairs outside their own territory. The people of St. Joe feel able to take care of their own voters, and resent any intrusion by outside brewery interests.

Big Demonstration Thursday

The demonstration given at St. Joe on last Thursday afternoon was one of the most gorgeous events of this kind ever given in this section, It was estimated that over 200 men, women and children formed the line of march. The parade started at the Christian church, and owing to the condition of the streets they were compelled to go on the walks, going west to Spencerville and then to Main Street and down on the north side until they reached the business part of town, when they were signaled by their leader, Elder J. A. Brown, to stop and appropriate songs were sung. Then going to the east end of town and back, to the Lutheran church where the large crowd listened attentively to a few brief remarks by Rev. Hicks of South Bend, after which Leon Kees sang a solo. Each child was given a flag, while the older ones carried banners bearing the following inscriptions: Vote for Mother, Who's Boy next Vote Dry, Aye! Aye! St. Joe Dry, Vote for God and Home and Native Land, The Cross is Greater than the S, Vote Yes for Us, Pay your Taxes in Money and Save your Girls and Boys, Vote Yes for Me Papa, Have You a Boy for the Saloon, Vote our County White, Fathers kill the Saloon don,t leave the Job for Us. The Water Wagon brought up the rear by Chas. Koch. Harry Kees furnished three teams and two wagons and great credit is due him. The demonstration was a success and some lasting impressions were made upon the minds of the spectators and the ladies are to congratulated for their noble efforts. They believe their time was well spent and victory crowned their efforts.

They desire to thank all those who participated in any way.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Dynamiters Wreck Thirty Buildings.

Six buildings were completely wrecked, twenty-five partly wrecked, windows destroyed in more than a hundred, houses shaken and plate glass windows shattered in fully fifty business houses, as the result of a dynamite explosion in the fruit and wine house of Joseph Mascari, 11 College street, in Danville, Ill. The losses will total $40.000. The police believe the explosion was a Black Hand attempt to destroy Mascari. Tony Palmisano, son of a wealthy Italian fruit dealer, and competitor of Mascari, was arrested charged with being concerned in the dnamiting. He is generaly regarded as the head of the Italian society in Danville. Palmisano was subjected to a rigid questioning, but maintained silence.

Two Killed at a Dance.

A dispatch from Mobile, Ala., tells of a bloody dance near Point Clear, Ala., in which two men were killed and four wounded. The daughter of Simon Nelson, at whose house the dance was held, refused to dance with a young man because she said he had been drinking. He began cursing and the fight started, Mack Kinzie being beaten to death and Bert Pierce shot to death. The wounded probably will recover.

Warrenton, Va., Swept by Flames.

Following a fire that threatened to wipe out the town, Warrenton, Va., is under martial law and four blocks of buildings are smoking ruins. Only the use of dynamite saved the town from complete destruction, for the drought of seven weeks had exhausted the water supply. The dynamiting of four buildings checked the flames, which finally burned out. The loss is $75,000 with $50,000 insurance.

Slayer of Children Electrocuted.

Teodoro Rizzo, who murdered Theresa Procopio, 7 years of age, and Freddie Infusino, 2½ years old, in a lonely culvert in Utica, N. Y., the night of Sept. 12 last, was put to death in the electric chair in Auburn prison. Rizzo walked calmly to the death chamber, holding a crucifix in his hands and with no sign of fear. Rizzo confessed his crime and expressed sorrow.

Huge Water Tank Bursts.

The huge water tank just east of Newman, Ill., burst. It held nearly 600,000 gallons of water at the time and flooded the engine house so deep that Station Master Winn came near losing his life. The tank was the property of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railway and fell directly across the tracks.

Six Miners Fatally Burned.

A few minutes before the night shift had entered the Florence mine of the Youghiogheny and Ohio Coal Company, near Martins Ferry, Ohio, fire damp exploded with terrific force, burning six miners. The men were rescued by comrades, but all will die. The mine was badly damaged.

Wright Company to Make Airships.

Capitalized at $100,000, the Wright Company of New York has been incorporated "to manufacture, sell and operate airships." The directors are Wilbur Wright, Orville Wright, of Dayton, Ohio; George A. Stevens, Henry S. Hooker and Alpheus F. Barnes, of New York.

Governor Hadley Injured.

Governor Hadley, of Missouri, who has been hunting in the Taney County hunting preserve, was forced to leave for Jefferson City on account of a badly swollen hand caused by a fall. Physicians advised the Governor to return to his home at once, as they feared blood poisoning might develop.

Banker Morse May Get New Trial.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals in New York has granted the motion of Martin W. Littleton, counsel for Charles W. Morse, to apply to the Circuit Court for a new trial for Morse.

Five Die in Tenement Fire.

Five persons were burned to death in a tenement house fire in Brooklyn, N. Y. Besides the dead, eight Italians were seriously burned and were taken to nearby hospitals.

Postoffice Robbed of $1,500.

The postoffice at Eaton, Ind., a small town south of Hartford City, was robbed of $1,500 worth of stamps. The combination of the safe was worked by the robber.

SOME RESCUED ALIVE FROM PIT AT CHERRY

Miners Thought Dead for Seven Days Are Snatched from Their Living Tomb.

WILD SCENE IN LITTLE TOWN

Heaps of Corpses Found Where It Is Evident Entombed Men Tried to Escape Flames.

Twenty-one men rose from the grave in Cherry, Ill., Saturday. Twenty-one men, pronounced dead days ago by all the mining experts in Illinois, rose from the depths of the St. Paul mine, where, with 310 others, they had been entombed for seven days, and when the people looked at them they were alive. Cherry saw a tragedy one Saturday. The next it witnessed a miracle.

But, just when the hopes of the waiting wives of the remaining entombed miners were at their highest, when the rescuers seemed likely to bring scores of other living men to the surface, the sickening news came that the mine was again on fire. At midnight a small fire broke out, cutting off the rescue work. Fire apparatus had to be lowered and a stream of water had again to be turned into the mine.

The news of the rescue of living men swept through the village like a telepathic wave. It transformed a community which was groveling in the deepest pits of woe into a community delirious with joy, intoxicated with hope. When the men came forth from the shaft they found the whole community gathered to give them welcome. When their eyes, accustomed for a wek to the inky blackness of a sealed-up mine, were able to take in the sights around them one of the first things that they saw was the piled-up coffins in which, by all the laws of science and engineering, they were to have been buried. When they were able to speak the first words that left their lips were words that brought up hope that hundreds of other men yet in the mine might be still alive. During the long watches of their own imprisonment they said they had heard sounds that made them sure that the crannies and corridors about them held living men.

TO SEIZE BLEACHED FLOUR.

Secretary Wilson Takes Drastic Action—Millers' Stocks Raided.

Open refusal of millers of bleached flour to heed the government's warning to cease the manufacture of that article of food has led Secretary Wilson to take drastic action. An order has been issued by him to inspectors of the department of agriculture to seize all the bleached flour in the country, and information has been received that as a consequence fourteen consignments, including several hundred carloads, were taken in the west. It is supposed that about $1,000,000 worth of bleached flour was manufactured in the last year and that most of what remains of it is in the east, especially in and about New York.

Police Captain Thwarts Burglar.

Michael Casey, captain of police in Toledo, battled in his home at daybreak the other morning with a negro burglar, who awakened Mrs. Casey by tugging at a finger ring on her finger. As the captain sprang from the bed, in response to his wife's scream, the negro fired two shots, the bullets burying themselves in the bed an inch above Mrs. Casey's head. The burglar escaped

RESIGNS PENSION OFFICE.

President Taft Accepts Notice of Warner That He Wants to Quit.

Vespasian Warner, United States Commissioner of Pensions, has tendered his resignation to President Taft and it has been accepted. The resignation went to Washington a few days ago and the acceptance was received by Mr. Warner Monday, in Clinton, Ill. He was appointed to the position by Roosevelt in 1904 and was reappointed by Taft.

Mr. Warner is in Clinton and has been for several months. His coming home was occasioned by the illness of his son, C. M. Warner, who has had charge of two large estates. The work was more than the younger Warner's constitution would allow, and he was obliged to quit. It was the purpose of the father to come home and relieve him for a few months in the hope of improvement, thinking then he might resume his duties as commissioner, but the ailment of the son has not yielded to medical treat

BOY'S CAPTOR IS KILLED.

Outlaw Shot After Refusing to Surrender to Posse.

The unknown tramp who, for twenty-four hours, held Harry Garrett captive in an upstairs room of the Garrett ranch house, near Boise, Idaho, threatening death to the boy should an attempt to arrest him be made, was shot and killed Friday morning at daybreak after the boy escaped. Wearied by his long vigil, the outlaw fell into a doze and his prisoner quickly seized the opportunity to jump from a window. Shots startled the watchers and a moment later the boy rushed from the direction of the house. The man had attempted to kill the lad, the men called on the desperado to surrender, but he refused and a volley of shots were fired through the floor from the room below.

STORM-TOSSED SAILORS ESCAPE.

Win Eighty-Four-Hour Battle with Elements on Lake Superior.

After being tossed about in a storm for eighty-four hours in a "dead" gasoline launch, without food for sixty hours and exhausted from exposure, Axel Oberg, his wife, two children and two sailors were cast on the rocks on the south shore of Lake Superior, thirteen miles from Duluth. A sailor and Robert Oberg, aged 12, told of their escape. Oberg started for Two Harbors from Duluth. The boat ran into a heavy storm, the entire cargo was washed overboard and the gasoline tanks flooded with water, making it impossible to operate the boat. The boat was driven twenty miles from its course. No one was injured.

NEW GOTHAM TUNNEL OPENED.

Pennsylvania Railroad Sends Train Through Bore Beneath City.

Burrowing beneath the Hudson river, under Manhattan island's skyscrapers and on below the East river's bed, a Pennsylvania train Thursday for the first time traversed the new tunnel route of that transportation line from New Jersey to Long Island. The trip marked the practical completion of a railroading feat paralleling in many ways in interest the opening of a transcontinental railway route. Considerable work remains to be done before the entire subterranean route is opened for regular traffic, but it is expected that the tunnels from New Jersey to Long Island will be ready for use by June.

Auction Sale Reveals Secret.

Andrew Klein and Joseph Bolts, Albany merchants, purchased jointly for $2.75 an old trunk at an auction sale of effects of murderers, suicides and victims of accidents, and found it contained bonds of a French traction line. They received word later that the bonds are believed to be worth $95 each, with accrued interest since 1903.

Facing Disgrace; Kills Self.

While Recorder McGovern and witnesses in New York were awaiting Justice of the Peace William C. Budenbender, the man who originally declared he had married Anna Gould and the Prince de Sagan, word was brought in that he had killed himself by shooting. Budenbender was accused of obtaining money by fraud.

Dies Writing of Accident.

"Accidental, slipped and—" was the contents of a note found in a dense thicket beside the body of I. B. Borland, former County Treasurer and a prominent politician, who had been missing from home in Franklin, Pa., since Friday. He had bled to death from a gunshot wound in the leg.

Four Volcanoes in Eruption.

There are now four craters on Teneriffe, throwing out incandescent matter, which frequently is accompanied by explosions. The flow of lava has covered nearly four miles and is still advancing. The nature of the ground prevents the damming up of the lava from the fertile land.

Three Frozen to Death in Colorado.

The bodies of Frank Loftus, William Hasty, and James Hays, all of Leadville, were found to-day four miles west of the Hill Top mine in the Horseshoe district of Colorado. They had been in a blizzard and were frozen to death

LIFE TERM FOR CLEMINSON.

Chicago Physician Is Convicted by Jury of Wife Murder.

Dr. Haldane Cleminson was found guilty of the murder of his wife, Nora Jane Cleminson, by a jury in Judge McSurely's cort in Chicago Saturday night, and his punishment was fixed at imprisonment for life. Only one juror stood between the accused Rogers Park physician and the gallows. The final verdict was reached after the twelve men had deliberated less than three hours and four ballots had been taken.

Mrs. Cleminson was found dead in her bed at the family residence, 6823 Wayne avenue, May 30. Her husband telephoned to Dr. Paul Hullhorst, of Rogers Park, and told him that burglars had entered his home, chloroformed him and his wife, and stole a gold watch. Cleminson said that he had been unconscious for several hours, and that when he recovered he found his wife dead. The case was reported to the police of the Rogers Park station, and an investigation resulted. Burned matches and bureau drawers were found on the floor, and $50 the physician said he had in his clothing and jewelry were missing. After Dr. Cleminson had been taken to the Alexian Brothers' Hospital an investigation of the burglary story led the police to believe it false. Their theory was strengthened when physicians reported that Cleminson was shamming illness.

BRIDE EAGER FOR LABRADOR.

Miss McClannahan and Dr. Grenfell Married in Chicago.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, Labrador missionary, and Miss Anna McClannahan, were married Thursday evening in Grace Episcopal Church in Chicago, by Rev. William O. Water. The man who was knighted for intrepidity in facing the terrors of the arctic circle declared he felt just as nervous as any more timid man in going through what seems the most trying ordeal of all. The Chicago girl who will soon be in the midst of the hardships of the northern region declared herself eager to reach the doctor's far-off home and know his people.

NEW YORK ABOLISHES FOOTBALL

Official Heads of Public School Take Action Against Game.

Football as a recognized sport by the official heads of New York public schools has been abolished. Action looking toward the elimination of the most popular branch of sport in the schools was taken by the board of superintendents of the New York public schools at a meeting held at the Board of Education Building. The action is more sweeping than any that has yet been taken against the game, as it included in its effect the abolition of the game at a large number of institutions.

GEORGETOWN LIBRARY BURNED.

Team and Driver Go Down Bank to University Fire in Washington.

A spirited team hitched to a hose cart dashed down a fifty-foot embankment and another fire horse fell dead after a heroic run with his mates at a fire which destroyed the library of Georgetown University, Washington, D. C. About fifty students were asleep in the dormitory over the library when the fire was discovered, but all escaped. The flames, which originated in the boiler room, consumed rare volumes worth at least $10,000.

DISSOLVE OIL TRUST IS COURT'S DECISION

Standard of New Jersey, Rockefeller's Head Company, Branded as an Illegal Monopoly.

GOVERNMENT IS THE VICTOR

Ruling of St. Paul Tribunal Regarded as Death Blow, but Corporation Plans Appeal.

The federal Circuit Court in St. Paul Saturday stamped the Standard Oil Company as an illegal corporation in restraint of trade, and a monopoly, and decreed its dissolution within thirty days. In its decision the court is believed to have dealt the Standard Oil Company what will prove to be its death blow, and to have placed a weapon in the hands of the government that will enable it to wipe out of existence all similar combinations. The company affected is the Standard of New Jersey, the king pin of all the Rockefeller oil concerns.

The government won a sweeping victory over the oil trust, for there is nothing in the decision to soften the severity of the blow. Every contention made by the government during its three years' fight against the greatest of industrial trusts was sustained by the court.

The decision is based upon the Sherman anti-trust act of 1890, the form of the company's organization, and the methods which it pursues in business being declared contrary to and in direct violation of Sections 1 and 2 of that act. Section 1 declares every form of combination and trust in restraint of trade and commerce to be illegal, while Section 2 prohibits any monopoly or attempted monopoly, or any combination or attempted combination, for the purpose of securing a monopoly of trade. The law, according to the court, is plain and explicit, and by inference it can readily be applied to nearly all of the great industrial combinations of the day.

The purpose of the government, should the Supreme Court uphold the decision, is declared to be that it shall be speedily applied to all combinations and trusts which have so markedly changed industrial conditions in the United States during the past decade. What will be the ultimate effect of the decision of the court, assuming that the Supreme Court of the United States, to which the case will go direct, concurs in the view held by the Circuit Court, is the question that is being asked on all sides. The attorneys for the government do not hesitate to say that it will revolutionize the industrial world of the country, and will eventually throw back into the hands of smaller corporations the business which the great combinations have absorbed. There will, it is claimed, be a recurrence to the industrial conditions of ten or fifteen years ago, when the man or the corporation with comparatively small capital could embark upon the sea of commerce with the assurance that he would get a fair run and that he would not be gobbled up by a greater and more powerful rival.

ASTOR YACHT REPORTED SAFE.

Word from Steamer Says Pleasure Boat Was at San Juan Nov. 15.

News reached New York Sunday from two sources that Colonel John Jacob Astor's yacht, the Nourmahal, for the safety of which fears have been entertained, was in port at San Juan. The first dispatch came from Willemstad, where the Red D steamer Caracas reported having seen the Nourmahal in the San Juan harbor on Nov. 15. The captain of the Caracas said the yacht bore no evidences of having suffered in the Jamaican hurricane in which it was feared the boat had been lost. The second report was received by way of Washington, where the government revenue cutter service was advised by wireless that the Nourmahal was safe in San Juan.

Gladstone's Son to Get Job.

The London Standard states that the report that Herbert Gladstone will be appointed governor general of South Africa is confirmed by the announcement that the liberal executive committee of Gladstone's constituency has requested T. E. Harvey to become the liberal candidate in the approaching election.

Mob Lynches Dying Negro.

After he had shot and fatally wounded City Marshal Walter Nichols and was in turn shot by Nichols, James Estes, a negro, was hanged by a mob at Delhi, La. Nichols was attempting to arrest the negro on a minor charge when shot. Estes was practically in a dying condition when he was lynched.

Kill Family with Ax.

Unknown murderers hacked to death with an ax eight persons in a farmhouse in the village of Bagulslawitsch, Germany, near the Russian frontier. The victims were a farmer named Wasielsewski, his wife, five children and his father-in-law. The murderers are believed to have crossed the frontier.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XXI.—(Continued.)

"So, sir, I have run you to ground!" she panted.

"I thought you were going to see your sister," he replied, mildly. "How did you know that I was here?"

"Ah! never mind that! Who are you waiting for, Lord Netherville?"

"Not anyone, as far as I know. I wish you would give up cross-questioning me, my dear lady, I really don't like it."

"And I wish you would give up telling me lies. Do you suppose I believe that you are speaking the truth, when you say that you are not here to meet anyone? If it is true, then come away with me, and let us have some tea."

"I can't do that. I want to stay here."

"Then come into the next room, at all events, and let us look at some of the other pictures together."

"I can't do that, either. I've got to stop where I am."

"Than I am right, and you have come to meet some woman here!" cried Mrs. Vine, angrily.

The situation was becoming comic, and yet Netherville really did not know how to parry her accusations. She was looking right and left, with quick, angry glances. All at once she cried:

"Ah—h? Now I know! Here comes the lady, of course! Why, it is that girl the men are all off their heads about this season!—that Miss Garland!"

"My dear Marion, don't be ridiculous. I don't even know Miss Garland. I have never been introduced to her."

"How can you say so! Why, she is coming straight up to you; she is smiling; she is actually holding out her hand. Oh! you bad, deceitful wretch! How can you say that you don't know her? She knows you, at any rate!"

Netherville followed the direction of her eyes. There, sure enough, was the beautiful girl, whom he knew only by sight, making her way through the crowd straight towards him. She held up her hand, as thought to attract his attention, and she smiled.

"You will introduce me to her at once, Netherville," whispered Mrs. Vine, authoritatively. "And introduce me, if you please, as the lady whom you are going to marry; that will avoid all misapprehensions on her part."

"Really, Marion, you are too bad. I can't introduce you to a lady I don't know; and as to the other matter, I've told you over and over again that, although I am very fond of you, yet I can't afford to marry you or any other woman who hasn't got money enough to clear off my debts. What nonsense this is. Why, there must be some mistake!"

It was only when Irene came close to them, through the crowd that parted to make way for her, that she perceived, for the first time, that the man she had come to meet was not alone. The same woman was with him—the woman she had seen him with before—her arm was twined familiarly through his, her shoulder rested against his. Surely she must be his wife!—for who but a wife would sit like that in a public place? He had brought his wife with him, then, to mock at her misery, and to glory over her discomfiture!

Her outstretched hand sank nervelessly down by her side—the smile upon her parted lips died away into dismay, the glad welcome in her lovely eyes changed into positive horror. She turned quickly away, and as she did so Netherville caught sight of the ashen-greyness of the fact that but a moment ago had been radiant with the loveliest colors of youth and of health. He sprang from the low seat.

"The poor girl is going to faint!" he cried, and, regardless of the remonstrances of the over-affectionate widow, he hurried after Irene's retreating form, as she tried feebly, with faltering steps, to make her way back through the crowd.

"Can I not be of use to you, Miss Garland?" he inquired, lifting his hat to her as he reached her side, and, forgetting altogether in the impulse of humanity that, as he had told Mrs. Vine, he had never been introduced to her, and had therefore no right to address her by name. "You seem to be ill; pray allow me to escort you to the door. Won't you take my arm?"

She lifted her eyes to his; there was in them such a depth of misery, such a world of reproach and despair, as made him draw back bewildered and dismayed. Why on earth did she look at him like that? What had he done in simply coming to her assistance, to arouse such a very tragedy in that beautiful pale face.

His own eyes became filled—not with the conscious guilt which perhaps she expected to see in them, but with a puzzled and half-frightened expression, that increased ever more and more when she began to speak.

"I, take your arm?—after this cruel insult!" she said, in a smothered voice.

"Insult, Miss Garland?—cruel insult!" he replied, repeating her words in utter amazement. "What on earth have I said or done to insult you? How can I possibly suppose that I would insult any woman—least of all one whom I have long admired at a distance, and have always heard spoken of in the highest terms? Why should my simple offer be taken as an insult?"

"Oh," she cried, passionately, "you said truly that you were changed; you are indeed right! I find you changed beyond belief—almost past recognition. It is the same face, indeed, but no longer the same—why, your very expression is altered! the tone of your voice, somehow, is no longer what it was, and as to your actions!—oh, how is it possible that you, of all men on earth, can trample on the feelings of a woman who loved you, and drag her down as you have done, through the mire of such bitter shame as this cruel meeting; that was evidently planned with no other object than to humiliate me in the eyes of the happy woman, for whose sake you deceived and deserted me?"

They were walking side by side towards the entrance, and as there words poured in a torrent from her lips, accompanied by gestures of despair, and by tears that filled her eyes almost to overflowing, Netherville kept stealing glances at his companion, at first of utter bewilderment, then by degrees, as she proceeded, with something of comprehension in them.

Daylight seemed all at once to pierce feebly through the dim fog of all this, to him, unintelligible rigmarole. Here was, doubtless, some tragedy of a man's ill-treatment of an unhappy woman, in which he himself had no part whatever—but if not him—then who? The answer in his own mind was obvious.

But an Englishman does not willingly mix himself up in another man's love affairs, even if that man be his own relative. His cousin was married, and married, too, to a woman whose happiness he held dear. Netherville had no intention whatever of giving his cousin away, neither for his own sake nor yet for Agatha's.

In answer, therefore, to the denunciations that were flung at his innocent head, Lord Netherville only made one observation, as he assisted the lady into a hansom cab outside the door of the Exhibition, but that observation to Irene's ears was a sufficiently startling one.

"My dear young lady," he said, "I am extremely sorry for your annoyance, but am I the right person to receive your confidence? Are you quite sure you are not taking me for somebody else?"

He lifted his hat politely, and the cab drove off. Irene uttered a faint exclamation of surprise, as she sank back into the hansom. She pressed her hands to her bewildered brain. What did he mean? Who was this man whose words and voice were those of a stranger, and yet whose likeness to Rupert Carroll was so strange and so startling?

CHAPTER XXII.

Carroll was on the point of leaving his office in order to meet Irene at Burlington House. He was putting his papers together somewhat nervously; dreading, yet secretly longing for, the interview before him, when that harbinger of evil and mischance, the telegraph boy, knocked loudly at the street door. The telegram was for him.

"Come home, Agatha very ill," ran the message, which in a moment put all thought of anything else out of his head.

His interview with Irene must of course fall to the ground. If he did not love his wife, he had at least never failed in his duty to her; and her state of health rendered him always scrupulously anxious to show her every attention in his power. He sent for a hansom, and prepared to go home as quickly as possible. But he groaned in spirit as he did so. What a fatality it was that separated him eternally from Irene! Again she would believe him to be false and untrustworthy.

With a bursting heart and an agony of apprehension, Rupert Carroll found himself at last in Chester Square. He opened the door with his latch-key and rushed up the stairs, not knowing what he might encounter, or what terrible news he would be met with. Naturally he went to his wife's bedroom—the door stood wide open, and the room was empty! He felt bewildered. Louise Carroll called out to him from the adjoining room, which was hers:

"Is that you, Rupert?"

"How is Agatha?" he asked, hoarsely. "Where is she, what has happened?"

"Nothing at all, why do you look so frightened, Rupert? She was a little faint once this morning, but she got better after lunch; she is in the drawing-room, I think. She went out by herself for a little walk this afternoon, but I have seen her since she came in, she was none the worse."

Rupert stalked away down to the drawing-room with the hardest feelings he had ever entertained towards his wife, boiling in his heart. Agatha lay upon the sofa. She smiled at him as he came in, but her smile grew a little pale and faint when she saw his angry face. He held out the telegram to her.

"Did you send this telegram?" he asked.

"Now don't look so savagely at me, Rupert!" she answered, trying to speak lightly and playfully, though she was secretly frightened. "Surely it is no great punishment to you to come home an hour earlier than usual to your wife!"

"Answer my question. Did you send this telegram? Yes, or no?"

"Well, yes; but it was only a little joke. There is no harm done," she faltered.

"No harm! No harm in a lie like that? You have singular ideas of what is 'no harm,' Mrs. Carroll! There is some deep-laid plan in all this," he continued angrily;" "and I insist on knowing what it is. Why did you send it? Tell me the truth, if you please."

Then Agatha, too, lost her temper.

"To prevent your going to meet that wretched girl! A wife is perfectly justified in stopping her husband from running after other women by any means in her power, I consider. I was determined to prevent you from going to her; and I have done so. It is too late now. See! it is five minutes to 6. You could not get to your appointment now; the hour is over!"

Rupert became suddenly calm.

"Pray, how did you know that I had an appointment with a lady between 5 and 6 o'clock?" he inquired, gravely, but very sternly. "You must have opened my letter to her!"

"Ah! you admit it then! You admit that there is a lady that you were going to meet! Oh, but it is shameful—disgraceful! You, a married man! And as to her—why, she must be the worst and wickedest of women!"

"Take care, Agatha! You are going too far. You may say what you choose of me, but I forbid you to use violent expressions about that lady."

"Miss Garland, I suppose?" she sneered, beside herself with uncontrollable jealousy.

Rupert sat down quietly at the foot of the sofa.

"I will make no concealment. Her name is Irene Garland. Shall I tell you about her?"

There was a dangerous glitter in his eyes; he felt that he could never forgive her for what she had done.

"She is engaged to be married to a rich man, and people say she is selling herself for his money," she said breathlessly.

"Very likely. I know nothing of her engagement, or its motives. What I do know," he went on, in a low, concentrated voice that rang like the knell of her doom through her heart, "is that Irene Garland is the best, and sweetest, and dearest woman on earth; that she is the only woman I have ever loved, or ever shall love; and that, had it not been for the dreadful accident which, to my endless regret, made me your husband, I should have been married to her long ago."

She flung herself round, face downwards, upon her cushions, sobbing wildly.

"Oh! you are cruel, cruel!" she cried. "Why do you say such terrible things to me?"

"Because you brought it upon yourself," he answered, coldly. "How dare you open my letters, and meddle in my affairs?"

"Has not a wife the right to stop her husbandw from doing what is wrong?" she moaned.

"Wrong! What do you mean? Do you suppose that I would injure a hair of her dear head, or bring a breath of reproach upon her name for all the wealth—all the happiness—that the whole world contains;!"

"Oh, Rupert, my darling! don't be so hard to me. Love me a little. Remember that I am your wife; remember that I shall be the mother of your child. Forget this woman, and learn to love me!" she sobbed.

Then, indeed, he did pity her. Her great claim upon him, her grief and her attitude appealed to his manliness, if not to his heart. He raised her from her lowly position, and placed her tenderly back on the sofa.

"My dear," he answered, kindly, "I will forgive you, indeed. Have we not all much to forgive to one another? And I know that the accident that brought about our marriage has been terribly hard on you. Louise meant it all for the best, I know, but she ought never to have made us live together. Had we parted on our wedding-day, the world, it is true, might have gossiped ill-naturedly—but at least we should have been spared the daily misery of embittering each other's lives. I will try and be more considerate to you, my poor Agatha."

"And you will love me a little, won't you, Rupert?" she pleaded. "You will promise me not to go near that girl? You will try and forget her, and learn to love me, won't you?"

"I am afraid you ask of me what is impossible, Agatha," he answered, coldly. "I could not possible give you a promise not to see her; because I should certainly break it on the first opportunity. And as to loving you, Agatha—why, I cannot do that, because I love her, and I do not see how a man is to love two women at once."

"Will you never love me then, Rupert? Tell me—tell me the truth?" she persisted.

"I have told you," he answered, reluctantly, and perhaps a little cruelly, "I love her."

Choosing a Builder.

The selection of a builder is quite as important a matter in putting up a house as the choice of an architect. Don't choose the cheapest builder merely because he is cheapest. If you accept his bid, find out the reason of the cheapness. Frequently the builder is a man of little means, and often he operates on borrowed capital. Should the builder become bankrupt or fail to pay for his labor or materials the owner, under the mechanics' laws of most states becomes liable for the builder's debts. This is true even though the owner has paid the builder for his work. In order to obtain his house free and clear in such a case the owner must meet the builder's obligations. The prudent owner will, of course, pay for his house only as it is constructed. Even then it would be a useful caution to make sure that the builder has paid his indebtedness on the house. Payments are usually made the builder when the foundations are done, when the frame is up, when the house is closed, when the plastering is finished and when the completed house is turned over to the owner.—Circle Magazine.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Indiana rural carriers appointed: Balbec, Route 1, John J. Eberly carrier, Sadie Hurst substitute; Mulberry, Route 1, Chester E. Millman carrier, Henry J. Kleinsmith, substitute.

For the third time in three years a Panhandle engine set fire to Love Brothers' big grain elevator, south of Hammond; loss, $10,000. Thousands of bushels of grain ready for shipment to Chicago were destroyed.

Orin Buzzard, who works at the White Rabbit mine near Linton, is exhibiting a petrified shoe that he found imbedded in slate. The shoe is about the size of a woman's No. 2 last, and is perfect in outline. The question that puzzles Buzzard: How did the shoe get more than one hundred feet below the surface, and how long has it been there?

Ben Ingram, aged 17 years, a negro of Lawrenceburg, who shot and killed Mollie Childers, aged 12, colored, a few years ago, was arrested on the charge of disturbing a religious meeting. He threw a cat with a tin can tied to its tail through the window of the colored Baptist church during the services and caused a panic. Ingram entered a plea of guilty before Justice John Probst and was fined $25 and costs.

W. T. Durbin, former Governor of Indiana, was one of the President's callers a few days ago at Washington. He said he was on his way home from New York and stopped over to discuss a few matters with the President. When asked if he intended to seek the chairmanship of the Republican State Committee, he said he did not want the place, and had no thought of asking for it.

Two sisters living at Bethlehem, thirty miles east of Jeffersonville, eloped to Jeffersonville and were married within a few hours of each other by the same justice, Charles S. Hay. Each sister did not discover the other was married until she returned home. Miss Mary Plummer was married to William Lozier, a Kentuckian, and her sister, Miss Nora H. Plummer, became the bride of John W. Doyle, of Washington Township.

Grant Pierce, of Oolitic, was fatally injured by falling from a forty-foot derrick at the new $100,000 Methodist church under construction at Bloomington. Workmen were tearing down a wooden derrick and Pierce thoughtlessly dislodged a pin that was supporting a brace on which he was sitting. He fell backward, suffering a broken arm and a fractured skull. Pierce was taken to a hospital, where little hope is entertained for his recovery.

The abolition of the postoffice at New Bellsville, Brown County, puts out of business an office that has been in existence for about eighty years. The town used to be on a star route between Columbus and Nashville, but since Nashville gets its mail from the Indianapolis Southern, New Bellsville has been out of the world. It takes longer, under the present arrangement to get a letter from Columbus to New Bellsville, than it does to send a letter from New York to Columbus.

From all parts of the country and particularly from Indianapolis, are coming letters in large numbers to Mrs. S. A. R. Boor, of Newcastle, asking for charity. This is owing to the fact that it was announced several days ago that Mrs. Boor had given $15,000 to the Christian Women's Board of Missions, and the letters come from persons who are seeking help. The letters have reached such a stage that Mrs. Boor's secretary has been dumping them in the waste basket, as they worry the aged woman.

Lawrence Pinkerton, aged 13, an employe of the Butler Bench and Stool Company of Marion, was killed by a flying piece of timber, which struck him in the forehead, crushing his skull. Pinkerton was a finisher in the factory, and while working at a turning lathe the chisel that he held cut deeper into the wood than he had intended. The force caused the wood to split and the timber hurled with great force against the workman's head. He lived only a few minutes after being struck. Pinkerton is survived by a widow and an invalid son.

It is seldom that a resident of Wells County conducts a small trade with a resident of Guatemala, especially an insurgent of that country, but John Mock, ex-Mayor of Bluffton, and a bird fancier, has negotiated a trade with one of the leading insurgents of the foreign country, giving him two game chickens for two macaws, which are said to be the largest parrots known. Last spring when Charles C. Dean, now State forester, and E. B. Williamson, cashier of the Wells County Bank, were in Central America collecting specimens, they became acquainted with the Guatemalan. Since their return they have arranged a trade whereby the former mayor of Bluffton will get a pair of choice parrots.

William Butts, aged 24 years, single and John Robinson, aged 35 years, married, were killed by twenty tons of slate falling on them in the Bogie mine, near Jasonville. Both died instantly.

The State Children's Receiving Home is quarantined because of an epidemic of diphtheria that has broken out at Westfield. One death has occurred at the home, and a number of children are seriously ill from the disease.

Mrs. Margaret Meyer, aged 87 years, recited a Scotch poem before the Caledonian Society in Terre Haute and died fifteen minutes later of apopelxy. She was born in Scotland and came to Terre Haute fifty-one years ago.

While W. P. Seybold and family, living northeast of Rockville, were attending a lecture at Marshall, their country home was destroyed by fire. The house was comparatively new and was handsomely furnished. The loss reaches $5,000, with $3,500 insurance.

Mrs. Ernestine Guirl, aged 50, wife of William H. Guirl, former representative in the State Legislature, died at Chicago, where the family recently went from Clay City. She is survived by the husband and five children. Death was due to an overdose of antiheadache medicine.

A turkey which T. H. Smith, of Owensville, was fattening for Thanksgiving deliberately committed suicide by hanging itself in a grape arbor, contends its owner. The fowl became fastened in the vines and strangled to death. However, Smith believes that the approach of Thanksgiving drove the turkey to end its life.

Miss Grace Witherspoon, 20 years old, of Princeton, overpowered a burglar who had entered her house and wrenched from his grasp a pillow slip containing more than $200 worth of jewelry and furs which the intruder had stolen from an upstairs room. Miss Witherspon encountered the burglar in a hallway. In the struggle which ensued, the thief came out badly worsted, but made his escape through the front door.

Dr. John R. Moore, of Greenfield, and James Whitcomb Riley were boys together and their friendship has never waned. When Mr. Riley published his book, "The Old Swimmin' Hole and 'Leven Other Pomes," the poet presented Dr. Moore with a copy of the book. This week Dr. Moore received an offer of $100 for the volume, but it was no temptation to the owner to part with it.

Because he thrust his hand, on which was an abrasion, into the mouth of a hunting dog that afterward died of dumb rabies, Ben Leyberts, of Pendleton, will take the Pasteur treatment at Indianapolis in the hope of warding off the dread symptoms of hydrophobia. A dog belonging to Clarence Leuark needed the attention of a veterinary surgeon and before his arrival Leyberts attempted to remove an obstruction in the animal's throat with his naked hand. It developed later the dog was mad.

Henry Funk, of Harrison County, recently celebrated the one-hundredth anniversary of his birth. He has spent his entire life in the same county. His father served in the war of 1812, and his grandfather in the American Revolution. He never used narcotics. His mind is quite clear and he remembers things occurring in his boyhood days. He lives with two daughters. His son, Professor J. P. Funk, was a leading educator and was superintendent of the New Albany schools at the time of his death a few years ago.

Ade, George Ade's new town, south of Morocco, is causing Uncle Sam considerable worry, it is said, in the matter of retaining a postmaster at that place. The office pays $52 a year, but those who have handled the mail there say that, with the present high price of food and clothing, the salary is insufficient. It is further asserted that the "wild waste" of cornfields around Ade, together with the prevailing solitude, has a depressing effect, causing the best-intentioned postmaster to forsake his job after a short experience.

Plans were made at the annual meeting of the Gideons of the State, which was held recently in Indianapolis, to place two thousand copies of the Bible in guest rooms of hotels throughout the State. Members pledged 160 Bibles, which will be placed in hotel rooms within a short time, and more will follow until the two thousand have been placed. There are now two hundred Bibles in guest rooms at the Denison hotel in Indianapolis, and smaller numbers have been placed in some of the hotels in other large cities of the State, the total being about two thousand.

At the close of a big celebration in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of his birth, John Fletcher Medaris, of Green's Fork, died. Medaris all but collapsed earlier in the day, but by grim determination lived until the birthday party was over. The entire population of Green's Forks turned out to honor Mr. Medaris. Medaris had been a citizen of Wayne County for eighty years. His father died in North Carolina, and when he was 20 years old he started with his mother and several brothers and sisters overland for Indiana. Until eight years ago, when he went to make his home with his daughter in Green's Forks, his entire life had been spent on a farm.

Apple trees in an orchard on the farm of A. E. Martz, eight miles west of Carlisle, have their second growth of leaves this season. The leaves are green and healthy looking as those that appear in the spring.

Physicians at Shelbyville are answering frequent calls to the country to treat a new disease—wristitis. Many men in the farmlands are suffering with inflamed wrists as the result of overwork in husking corn. The cases are not of a serious nature.

DE ARMOND IS BURNED TO DEATH IN HIS HOME

ONLY THEIR BONES ARE FOUND

Representative David A. De Armond, one of the best known Democratic members of Congress, and his grandson, Waddie, aged 6, were burned to death in a fire that destroyed the De Armond home at Butler, Mo., early Tuesday. The home of Congressman De Armond was situated across the street from that of James A. De Armond, his son. James started to rush into the burning home in an attempt to save his father, but he was restrained by the younger members of the De Armond family and neighbors. The cause of the fire, which started at 3 a. m., is unknown. The house was two stories in height. It burned like matchwood. Other members of the family escaped and it is believed none was hurt.

Neither the body of Congressman De Armond nor that of his grandson has been recovered and it is believed that they were incinerated. Bones, believed to be those of the Congressman, were found by searchers Tuesday morning. Other occupants of the house at the time of the fire and who escaped were Mrs. De Armond, James A. De Armond, aged 35, a son of the Congressman; and a daughter.

David A. De Armond was one of the characters of Congress. He figured prominently in several stirring episodes on the floor, having had a fist fight once with John Sharp Williams. It was on Dec. 19, 1907. Onlookers said Williams struck the first blow and De Armond retaliated vigorously. When the combatants were separated blood was flowing freely from the face of Mr. Williams. De Armond bore no mark of the fray.

Mr. De Armond was born in Blair County, Pennsylvania, in 1844, but after studying law he removed to Butler, Mo., where he practiced his profession until he entered Congress in 1891. He had served at Washington continuously up to his death.

NICARAGUA MUST EXPLAIN.

United States Sends Demand for Account of Killing of Americans.

The United States government Thursday night demanded from Nicaragua a full and satisfactory explanation of the killing of two Americans, Leonard Grace and Le Roy Cannon, who were executed summarily by order of President Zelaya when they were found in the insurgent army. Two warships were ordered to proceed at once to the scene. The demand was made in a peremptory note, couched in diplomatic but unmistakable terms, and delivered to Senor Felipe Rodriguez, charge d'affaires of the Nicaraguan legation.

An hour earlier the announcement that this government was tired of the high handed actions of the small Central American republic practically was contained in a dispatch sent to the Bluefields Steamship Company, which sought the protection of the State Department from interference by the insurgents now operating against Zelaya.

EDITOR OF CENTURY IS DEAD.

R. W. Gilder, Surrounded by Members of Family, Conscious at End.

Richard Watson Gilder, poet, lecturer and editor-in-chief of the Century Magazine, died shortly before 6 o'clock Thursday night. The famous editor, who for more than a quarter of a century has been regarded as an authority on literature, passed away at the home of a friend, Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, 9 West 10th street, New York. He succumbed to an attack of angina pectoris. He was surrounded by his wife and children.

Mr. Gilder had been slightly indisposed for two weeks, but death came with unexpected quickness. He was seemingly in better health Thursday morning when Mrs. Gilder left the house for a short time, but an hour after noon he was stricken with heart trouble. He retained control of his faculties until the end, and bade farewell to the members of his family.

Roaming Chippewas Rounded Up.

"Rocky Boy's" band of Chippewa Indians, said to belong in Canada, have been rounded up in Montana, under the superintendent of the Blackfeet Indian reservation. There are 122 persons in the band who have been roaming around the country, living as best they could.

Three Buried Alive in Mine.

Three men were buried alive by a cave-in at the Leonard mine of the Empire Steel and Iron Works, Mount Hope, N. J., and only one body has been recovered. The entombed miners are under thirty feet of earth and rocks in a drift 500 feet below the surface.

Rheumatic Pains

"My mother is a great sufferer from rheumatism, and Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills is the only remedy that relieves her."

MRS. G. DAVENPORT,
Roycefield, N. J.

The pains of rheumatism are almost invariably relieved with Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. They also overcome that nervous irritation which prevents sleep because they soothe the nerves. To chronic suffers they are invaluable. When taken as directed, they relieve the distress and save the weakening influence of pain, which so frequently prostrates. Many sufferers use them whenever occasion requires with the greatest satisfaction, why not you? They do not derange the stomach nor create a habit. Why not try them? Get a package from your druggist. Take it according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

The comparisons of wages, expenses, cost of food and general standard of living between American and German working men as prepared by government officials present some instructive and significant figures. The German figures were secured by the German government through the examination of about 1,000 families in Berlin and Hamburg. The American figures were secured by the American government though the examination of 1,415 workingmen in the North Atlantic States. In Germany the average incomes were $158.83 for skilled workmen and about $409.78 for the unskilled. In America the skilled workmen receives an average of $834.83 while that of the unskilled workmen averages well over $650. But the expenses of the American workman are higher. In Germany the expenses of skilled workingmen were $447.71 and of the unskilled $411.70 while in America the expenses were found to leave the workingman an average surplus of $56 79 The German skilled workman had a surplus of only $1.12 while the unskilled found a deficit of $1.92.

Womanly Wisdom.

A stitch in time saves a lost button.

If somebody told you it is not a secret.

Live as much as possible on the sunny side of your house.

A job for Burbank—training a Christmas tree to sprout its own presents.

The truest test of love between husband and wife is whether they just like to have each other around.

Fresh pork is fine eating, but be careful that the little folks do not eat too much of it at a time; and maybe you had better take this advice to yourself.

To prevent eggs cracking when a number are placed in boiling water, let warm water from the faucet run over them before placing them in the dish.

Never put pork into a barrel that has the slightest smell or taint about it. Wash and scrub it clean, scald it again and again, and if then it is not just right, leave it out where the sun can shine in it a long time. Old Sol is the greatest purifier in the world.

For variety one of these cold mornings, try this: Peel some large potatoes and cut a little piece off one end. With a small knife scoop out the inside and fill with sausage meat. Replace the top piece, lay them in a baking dish with bits of butter between and salt and pepper over them, and bake until thoroughly done.

A good way to protect a bed of tender rose-bushes is to bend them carefully down to the ground, hold them in position with stakes, and then cover with leaves, straw or earth. On my own rose bed I follow this plan, using a heavy layer of leaves held in place by a wide strip of wire chicken netting laid flat on the bed and securely staked at the edges.

On Christmas morning fill all your pockets full of nuts, candy, etc., and call at all the neighbors for a few moments, treating the children. And send a basket of dainties and the latest magazine to the invalids; or a load of wood to that poor old woman or crippled man; and let the housewives set out the cake for all callers, and spread sunshine,—but no wine or whiskey.

How to Read.

Reading is not a lost art to the same degree that conversation is, but it has in most cases an arrested development through so much reading that makes no demand upon aesthetic sensibility, so that one is apt to bring to a fine story full of delicate shades of thought and feeling the same mind which he yields to a newspaper, putting a blunt interrogation as to its meaning as conveyed in the terms of a rational proposition, and the writer's charm is wholly lost upon him. While the reader's surrender to the author must be complete, his attitude should not be passive, but that of active responsiveness and partnership.—H. M. Alden in Harper's Magazine.

WISHED DEATH MIGHT COME

To Relieve the Awful Suffering of Advanced Kidney Disease.

William Gibson, Greenup, Ky., says: "Three months I was in bed, and would have died, I believe, but for Doan's Kidney Pills. My doctor said the case was hopeless. My back felt as if it were being seared with a red-hot iron. The kidney secretions were painful, irregular and full of sediment. There were puffy spots beneath my eyes and my head pained terribly. I was miserable in every way and often wished death might relieve me. When I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills my condition was so serious that they had little effect, but I persisted, getting gradually better, and it was not a great while before I was cured. The effect has been lasting."

WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel 1000 miles north of the International boundary. Your vacant land will be taken as a rule beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land."

70,000 Americans will enter and make their homes in Western Canada this year. 1909 produced another large crop of wheat, oats and barley, in addition to which the cattle exports was an immense item.

Cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as lands held by railway and land companies, will provide homes for millions.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE MASTER'S CALL.

By Rev. Geo. L. Smith.

"The Master is come and calleth for thee."—John 11:28.

What joy must have thrilled the heart of Mary when this announcement was made to her by her sister Martha.

The sisters were in deep sorrow. Their brother, Lazarus, whom they fondly loved, was dead. This sorrow was probably greatly intensified, too, by the absence of their Friend, who had become very dear to them, and so near and dear to their departed brother, Jesus, as we believe, had been a very frequent and a very welcome guest at their Bethany home, but when their brother had been stricken down by a severe sickness, He was not there. They had sent for Him while he was still living, but He had not come. And now their brother was dead. Lazarus was no more. There must have been feelings of very great sadness as the sisters felt that if Jesus had been there, their brother had not died. He might have saved his life. And then, how natural that with the feeling of regret for His absence, there should have come also the fear that their Friend did not really love them as they had so fondly thought He had. They had informed Him that their brother was sick, and yet He had not come to them. How natural it would have been to have said within themselves, "Jesus surely did not love us as we supposed He did. When He was away from us, He forgot us. He found other friends, and we are no more thought of. How greatly do such thoughts intensify our sufferings. How welcome, then, must have been the declaration of the sister as she said, "The Master is come and calleth for thee." It seemed to say, He has not forgotten us, He has not neglected us, He is come, He calleth for thee.

How this dispelled the clouds! How it let the sunshine in! What peace and comfort; what joy and gladness, must have filled the heart when this glad announcement was made. "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." At once there would be suggested to her mind what she afterwards found was true, that He had good reasons for not coming to them before. It was not for lack of interest in them nor for lack of love for them but He could see the end, from the beginning could see that a great good might be accomplished by His remaining away till Lazarus should breathe his last. Doubtless He could see that it would be for their highest good and for the good of multitudes beside them that He should not come sooner to them. And we can now see how much would have been missed which has been a great benefit to thousands who have lived and are now gone, and to other thousands who are still living. How much the world would have lost, as well as those afflicted sisters, if the Saviour had not wept with Martha and Mary.

The effect of those words did not stop with the thrilling of Mary's heart at that time, but coming down through the ages, they have awakened emotions of joy and gladness in the hearts of vast multitudes who have been comforted and helped by these manifestations of our Saviour's faithfulness to His loved ones.

How many are there in this world like Martha and Mary, deeply afflicted with a sorrow that the world cannot remove; and sometimes when they feel most deeply the need of some help more than the world can give, it seems to them, perhaps, that the Saviour to whom they try to look has forgotten them. They do not seem to see His face. Everything about them seemed dark and dismal, and the Saviour far away. How delightful, then, to think that for some good end which we cannot see, He is permitting this sorrow to come upon us. Surely it must be for some good. He has not forgotten us, nor been unmindful of our cries. And then how the heart leaps with joy as, in our grief, we hear the glad sounds of words spoken, it may be, by human lips, or whispered by the blessed Holy Spirit, saying "Come unto Me, . . . I will give you rest." The very echo, it would seem, of Martha's message to Mary, "The Master is come and calleth for thee."

It was a personal call to Mary. It is a personal call to you. It seemed to Mary, perhaps, for a time, as if Jesus had forgotten them, but He had not. He had them all the while in kind and loving remembrance, and He was allowing this which seemed to her like such a sad calamity, to come upon them for a good end. And so we may believe that if He allows sorrows to come upon us, it is for some good and wise purpose, and that it will work, in some way, for good, if we properly receive it. And all the while we should be listening to the voice that is calling to us and saying, Come unto Me and I will give you rest; and, like Mary, respond quickly, arise and go unto Him.

THE JOYFUL TRANSFORMATION.

Christ's people are a sorrowing people! Chastisement is their badge—"great tribulation" is their appointed discipline. When they enter the gates of glory the Lord is represented as wiping away tears from their eyes. But, weeping ones, be comforted! Your Lord's special mission to earth—the great errand He came from heaven to fulfill was "to bind up the broken-hearted." Your trials are meted out by a tender hand. He knows you too well—He loves you too well—to make this world tearless and sorrowless! "There must be rain and hail, and storm," says Rutherford, "in the saint's cloud." Were your earthly course strewed with flowers, and nothing but sunbeams played around your dwelling, it would lead you to forget your nomadic life—that you are but a sojourner here. The tent must at times be struck, pin by pin of the movable tabernacle taken down, to enable you to say, and to feel in the spirit of a pilgrim, "I desire a better country." Meantime, while sorrow is your portion, think of Him who says, "I know your sorrows." Angels cannot say so—they cannot sympathize with you, for trial is a strange word to them. But there is a mightier than they who can. All He sends you and appoints you is in love. There is a provision and condition wrapt up in the bosom of every affliction, "if need be;" coming from His hand, sorrows and riches are to His people convertible terms. If tempted to murmur at their trials, they are often murmuring at disguised mercies. "Why do you ask me," said Simeon, on his deathbed, "what I like? I am the Lord's patient—I cannot but like everything."

And then—"your sorrow shall be turned into joy." "The morning cometh"—that bright morning when the dewdrops collected during earth's night of weeping shall sparkle in its beams; when in one blessed moment a lifelong experience of trial will be effaced and forgotten, or remembered only by contrast, to enhance the fullness of the joys of immortality. What a revelation of gladness! The map of time disclosed, and every little rill of sorrow, every river will be seen to have been flowing heavenward—every rough blast to have been sending the bark nearer the haven! In that joy God Himself will participate. In the last "words of Jesus" to His people when they are standing by the triumphal archway of glory, ready to enter on their thrones and crowns, He speaks of their joy as if it were all His own. "Enter ye into the joy of your Lord."

Reader! may this joy be yours! Sit loose to the world's joys. Have a feeling of chastened gratitude and thankfulness when you have them; but beware of resting in them, or investing them with a permanency they cannot have. Jesus had His eyes turned upon heaven when He added: "Your joy no man taketh from you."—Rev. J. R. MacDuff, D. D.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

MY FAITH LOOKS UP TO THEE

By Ray Palmer.

[Ray Palmer (Little Compton, R. I., Nov. 12, 1808—Newark, N. J., March 29, 1887) was well known as a Congregational pastor and as the secretary of the Congregational Union. He wrote this popular hymn when he was but 22 years old. He says that it was the expression of his own feelings at a time of great trouble. One year later Lowell Mason set it to the tune, "Olivet," with which it has ever since been wedded. It has been translated into almost every dialect and tongue. Almost all church people know it by heart, and certainly all love it heartily.]

My faith looks up to thee,
Thou Lamb of Calvary,
Savior divine!
Now hear me while I pray,
Take all my guilt away;
O let me from this day
Be wholly thine.

May thy rich grace impart
Strength to my fainting heart;
My zeal inspire;
As thou hast died for me,
O may my love to thee
Pure, warm, and changeless be,
A living fire!

While life's dark maze I tread,
And griefs around me spread,
Be thou my guide;
Bid darkness turn to day,
Wipe sorrow's tears away,
Nor let me ever stray
From thee aside.

When ends life's transient dream,
When death's cold, sullen stream
Shall o'er me roll,
Blest Savior, then, in love,
Fear and distress remove;
O bear me safe above,
A ransomed soul.

SERMONETTES.

Most people slip up on their own smoothness.

The greatest sorrows are the ones we never reach.

Many a man would be like Job if it did not cost so much.

Big plans for to-morrow are the stuff that sloth fattens on.

Many a preacher smothers the truth in his attempts to protect it.

We would all live in a fool's paradise but for life's bitter blows.

Most men like to let their light shine when they get a new car.

The people who are going nowhere are always in a rush to get there.

It's an awful thing to be green, but it's a good deal worse to be born dried up.

The religion that has to be warmed up once a week soon becomes a tough proposition.

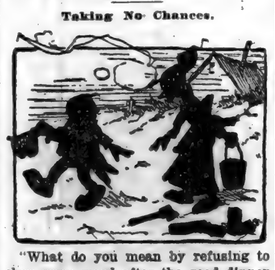
A Sporting Chance.

"I'll teach you to play at pitch and toss!" shouted the enraged father. "I'll flog you for an hour, I will!"

"Father," instantly said the incorrigible, as he balanced a penny on his thumb and finger, "I'll toss you to make it two hours or nothing."—Cassell's Saturday Journal.

Taking No Chances.



"What do you mean by refusing to chop some wood after the good dinner I have given you!"

"Well, lady, de highest medical authorities agree dat workin' on a full stomach is injurious, an' I don't want to run any chances of ruining me superb health!"

Home Production.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "I have done something I know you will approve of."

An Artful Pleader.

"Look here," said the lawyer, "I enjoy a ball game as much as anybody. But the next time you get off you mustn't tell me you are going to somebody's funeral. Nobody can have so many grandmothers and aunts and other near relations.

"Our family isn't like the general run," answered the office boy, "Father was a Mormon."—Washington Star.

Nearing the Goal.

"How is your society getting along in its efforts to abolish war?"

"Well, we've offered $25 for a prize essay."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Applied Enthusiasm.

"That fellow is very successful."

"Yes. He goes in for business just like some people go in for baseball."—Kansas City Journal.

A Small Matter.

Laura—I don't know, George, it seems such a solemn thing to marry. Have you counted the cost?

George—The cost, Laura! The cost! Why, I have a clergyman cousin that'll marry us for nothing!

Cheating.

For sore throat, sharp pain in lungs, tightness across the chest, hoarseness or cough, lave the parts with Sloan's Liniment. You don't need to rub, just lay it on lightly. It penetrates instantly to the seat of the trouble, relieves congestion and stops the pain.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. A.W. Price, Fredonia, Kans., says: "We have used Sloan's Liniment for a year, and find it an excellent thing for sore throat, chest pains, colds, and hay fever attacks. A few drops taken on sugar stops coughing and sneezing instantly."

Sloan's Liniment

is easier to use than porous plasters, acts quicker and does not clog up the pores of the skin. It is an excellent antiseptic remedy for asthma, bronchitis, and all inflammatory diseases of the throat and chest; will break up the deadly membrane in an attack of croup, and will kill any kind of neuralgia or rheumatic pains.

All druggists keep Sloan's Liniment. Prices 25c., 50c., & $1.00.

WANTS HER LETTER PUBLISHED

For Benefit of Women who Suffer from Female Ills

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women I felt sure it would help me, and I must say it did help me wonderfully. My pains all left me, I grew stronger, and within three months I was a perfectly well woman.

"I want this letter made public to show the benefit women may derive from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JOHN G. MOLDAN, 2115 Second St., North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you want special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She will treat your letter as strictly confidential. For 20 years she has been helping sick women in this way, free of charge. Don't hesitate—write at once.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Canada's Day of Thanks a Month Earlier than in the United States.

For some reason, better known to the Canadians themselves than to the people on this side of the line, our Canadian cousins celebrated their Thanksgiving a month or more earlier than we do. It may be that the Canadian turkey had become impatient, and sounded a note of warning, or it may be that the "frost on the punkin" declared itself. But whatever the reason, their Thanksgiving day is past. It may have been that the reasons for giving thanks so much earlier than we do were pushing themselves so hard and so fast that the Canadians were ashamed to postpone the event. They have had reasons, and good ones, too, for giving thanks. Their great broad areas of prairie land have yielded in abundance and here, by the way, it is not uninteresting to the friends of the million of Americans who have made their home in Canada during the past few years to know that they have participated most generously in the "cutting of the melon." Probably the western portion of Canada, comprising the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have the greatest reason of any of the provinces to express in the most enthusiastic manner their gratitude. The results in the line of production give ample reason for devout thanksgiving to Providence. This year has surpassed all others in so far as the total increase in the country's wealth is concerned. There is no question that Providence was especially generous. The weather conditions were perfect, and during the ripening and harvesting period, there was nothing to interfere. And now it was well it was so, for with a demand for labor that could not be supplied, there was the greatest danger, but with suitable weather the garnering of the grain has been successfully accomplished. There have been low general averages, but these are accounted for by the fact that farmers were indifferent, relying altogether upon what a good soil would do. There will be no more low averages, though, for this year has shown what good, careful farming will do. It will produce 130 million bushels of wheat from seven million acres, and it will produce a splendid lot of oats, yielding anywhere from 50 to 100 bushels per acre. This on land that has cost but from $10 to $15 per acre—many farmers have realized sufficient from this year's crop to pay the entire cost of their farms. The Toronto Globe says:

"The whole population of the West rejoices in the bounty of Providence, and sends out a message of gratitude and appreciation of the favors which have been bestowed on the country. The cheerfulness which has abounded with industry during the past six months has not obliterated the conception of the source from which the blessings have flown, and the good feeling is combined with a spirit of thankfulness for the privilege of living in so fruitful a land. The misfortunes of the past are practically forgotten, because there is great cause to contemplate with satisfaction the comforts of the present. Thanksgiving should be a season of unusual enthusiasm."

Hard to Place Himself.

"Engaged to that beautiful girl, and yet not happy?"

"Well, she's gone in by turns for rowing and tennis and horses and golf and dogs."

Irish Gooseberries.

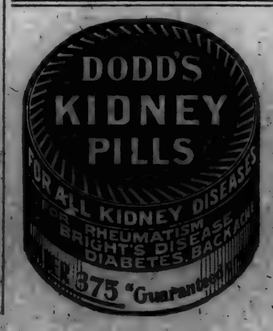
An Irishman—or Irishwoman—is rarely at a loss to give quite as good as he gets. The American tourist who figures in Sketchy Bits found this out to his cost.

An old Irishwoman, who kept a fruit stall, had some melons exposed for sale. The Yankee, wishing to have some fun with the old lady, took up one of them and said:

"These are small apples you grow over here. In America we have them twice the size."

The woman slowly looked up at him and in a tone of pity exclaimed:

"Sure, sorr, ye must be a stranger in Ireland, and know very little about the fruit of our country, whin ye can't tell apples from gooseberries!"



Self-Heating Flat-Iron.

From across the seas comes an unusually useful invention in the form of a self-heating iron evolved by a German brain. It will be understood at once, that this iron does its work in a neat and orderly manner. The top of the iron is hinged to form a lid and across the bottom of the interior is a grating, on which charcoal is to be burned. The method of heating insures the utensil being always at a temperature that fits it for use and there is no danger of dirt of any sort accumulating on the bottom. In addition to doing its work clean, the new iron has the advantage of being without offensive odor, the small amount of charcoal required to heat it causing no unpleasant smell. The time saved in having an implement with which to do all of your ironing without waiting to heat an iron or exchange it for another on the stove, can readily be appreciated. Then, too, the risk of soiling the clothes is eliminated.

CHARCOAL IRON.

English Veal Loaf.

Boil in as little water as possible, four pounds of shoulder; when cold chop fine. Mix the following and add to the chopped meat: Two eggs, one cup cracker crumbs, one cup liquor meat was boiled in, two tablespoons butter; salt, pepper and little sage. (Do not omit sage.) Pack in a loaf pan (not tin, but granite), bake slowly twenty-five minutes, but do not brown. Loaf should be quite moist when put in oven. Set on ice for several hours.

Nesselrode Pudding.

Take one quart of milk and eight eggs and make a custard. Then stir in a quart of heavy cream, and freeze in the ice cream freezer until it is half stiff. Chop a pound of marrons glaces, remove the dasher and stir them into the cream, thoroughly close the freezer, pack in salt and ice as you would ice cream, and let stand for three hours. Serve on a chilled platter with whipped cream poured around it.

Cannelon of Beef.

Two pounds of lean beef from top of round, one-half cup bread crumbs, one tablespoonful chopped parsley, one beaten egg, one teaspoonful each salt and onion juice, one-quarter teaspoonful each mace and pepper. Pass meat several times through a chopper; mix thoroughly with other ingredients; shape in a loaf. Bake from thirty to forty minutes, basting frequently with fat from salt pork.

Vegetable Soup.

Two quarts of water, 2 ounces of haricot beans, 2 ounces of split peas, 1 onion, 1 carrot, half stick of celery, parsley and herbs, pepper, salt, 5 cloves and a blade of mace. Boil in two quarts of water for three or four hours all the above vegetables, spice and herbs. Strain it off. It will keep for some time if it is let to stand and poured off from the sediment.

Brains.

Boil in salted water twenty minutes brains that have been well washed and tied in a piece of cheesecloth. Let them cool, then cut in rather thin slices, and dip in beaten egg. Fry brown in hot lard. They taste very much like oysters.

Apple Pudding.

Pare, core and quarter as many tart apples as will fill two-thirds of a pudding dish. Sprinkle with sugar and flavoring, dot with butter, and moisten with a little cold water. Fill the dish with a nice cake batter and bake in.

Short Suggestions.

When suede shoes become worn or shiny rub them wth emery paper and they will look like new.

Steam white mercerized cotton floss to shrink it. Place it in the steamer, allow it to steam for one hour and then dry it.

To make a green mayonnaise blend chopped parsley with butter until it is a bright green. Omit yellow of egg or catch-up.

Sun blinds and shades should be unrolled and examined to see if they require mending or cleaning. The best way to mend a tear is to paste a piece of the same material on at the back.

Spots in light dresses may be generally removed by laying on them a paste of fuller's earth and eau de cologne. Let it dry before brushing off. If necessary, make a second application.

A strong tea and common hay is said to preserve the color of French linens. Put vinegar in the rinsing water for pink or green calicos to brighten them. Soda answers the same purpose for purple and blue.

If the loaves of bread are a little too light and in danger of running over, cut strips of heavy brown paper three or four inches wide, grease one side and pin around the loaf, being careful that it does not touch the side of the oven.

Sunken Roman Galleys.

Beneath the waters of Lake Nemi, in Italy, lie buried two pleasure galleys. They belonged to the Emperors Tiberius and Caligula, and it is said they contain art treasures that have been covered for many centuries. Systematic efforts were made to recover the contents of the old hulks by Signor Borghi in 1895. Divers were engaged, and the two galleys located, measured and carefully examined, and from both bronzes, pieces of wood, anchors and ornaments of all kinds were collected. The larger vessel measures about 230 feet in length and 80 feet in beam, and the smaller 200 feet in length and 65 feet in beam. Some pieces of lead pipe were found in the vessels. They bear the inscription, "Caesaris Aug. Germanice," the official name of Caligula.

Recipe for Catarrh.

The only logical treatment for catarrh is through the blood. A prescription, which has recently proved wonderfully effective in hospital work is the following. It is easily mixed. "One ounce compound syrup of Sarsaparilla; one ounce Toris compound; half pint first-class whiskey." These to be mixed by shaking well in a bottle, and used in tablespoon doses before each meal and at bedtime." The ingredients can be gotten from any well stocked druggist, or he will get them from his wholesale house.

A Pet Anyhow.

The family lived in the suburbs of the city, and, much to the joy of Lulu, a little pig was given a home in the stable cellar. A few days later the little one was calling at a neighbor's, where she showed great interest in the bird.

The lady said, "Don't you keep a bird at home?"

"No," said Lulu, "we keep a pig instead."—Delineator.

Silence!

The instinct of modesty natural to every woman is often a great hindrance to the cure of womanly diseases. Women shrink from the personal questions of the local physician which seem indelicate. The thought of examination is abhorrent to them, and so they endure in silence a condition of disease which surely progresses from bad to worse.

It has been Dr. Pierce's privilege to cure a great many women who have found a refuge for modesty in his offer of FREE consultation by letter. All correspondence is held as sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription restores and regulates the womanly functions, abolishes pain and builds up and puts the finishing touch of health on every weak woman who gives it a fair trial.

It Makes Weak Women Strong. Sick Women Well.

HAMLIN'S WIZARD OIL THE OIL THAT PENETRATES — GREAT FOR PAIN

The Lady Who Danced the Minuet.

The minuet was ever the aristocral of dances. Before the lady of the eighteenth century elected to step the dainty measure she had many points to master, for to dance the minuet was to court criticism. The plunge taken, she wore a lappet on her shoulder to tell the company she proposed to make or mar her ballroom reputation.

Another point of etiquette lay in the gloves. A soiled pair was good enough for the country dance, but an absolutely new pair had to adorn the fair hands which graced the minuet. And so the lady of the eighteenth century on dancing bent set out with two pairs in her satchel.—London Chronicle.

A Complete Surprise

Thanksgiving night a number of friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Reuben Koch in Concord township, and at a suitable hour marched to the home of a near neighbor, Mr. Lancaster Morr, and with some useful and beautiful presents surprised him completely, it being his thirty-fourth birthday. The completeness of the surprise and the way it was executed displayed the ingenuity of Mrs. Morr's planning, and the repast furnished showed her to be rarely equaled in culinary art. An enjoyable evening was spent in eating popcorn, singing songs, and many other things that go to make a pleasant time. Mr. Morr is one of the progressive farmers in concord township, and is held in high esteem by the community. His many friends and neighbors join in wishing him many years of prosperity and happy birthdays.

Are Not Has Beens' Yet

The Spencerville High School Basket Ball Team bannered the old High School Team for a game to be played on Thanksgiving Day and calling them the "Has Beens." Well the game was arranged and played. The High School in the early part of the game seemed to be the best but when the so called Has Beens' got warmed up and come back in old time style they trimmed the High School to a score of 47—25

SECOND GAME

The High School was not satisfied with this and wanted another game for Saturday to even up. So the two teams clashed again and at the end of the first half the score was 18—1. And at the end of the game the final score being 24—4, resulting in favor of the so-called Has Beens'. Well they are not Has Heens' if they haven't played for three years. A Has Been.

"Dry" Until Voted "Wet"

There has been more or less of a discussion of the temperance question for two years-whether we should have saloons or no saloons and more or less of feeling has been engended. There question has been definitely settled for two years at least for under the law, another election can not be held previous to that time. The county is now dry until voted wet and if another election is held, the wets must take the initiative, they must circulate the petition which requires the signatures of twenty per cent of the voters. The feeling that exists can be quickly allayed if each one will do his part in letting the past be past and look to the future.

ONE DAYS MARCH

Intersestiugly told by an Old Comrad, W. H. McIntosh, of Auburn.

The actual comes as a shock in its rude realism from the mental ideal suggested by the picture and the printed page. This was my experience It was the common revelation to the volunteer-soldier in stirring and startling phases of war in its true character of hardships and perils. In the following monograph description of one day's march of many readers of THE NEWS will discover ample confirmation of the vicissitudes of military service. We were three weeks from Atlanta and well down between the Savannah and the Ogechee. Mile after mile, I had traveled under a burden grown accustomed, through the lonely solitude of forests that presented few breaks to a dull sameness and an oppressive silence.

Away to the left front our cavalry division skirmished hotly with Wheeler's daring riders; far forward clouds of smoke marked destruction of a railroad, and beyond the river on the right swept undinderedthe columns of the 15th. and the 17th. corps. It was the morning of December 3, that I had crossed Buck Head Creek with my regiment upon a rough and narrow foot bridge and learned that the brigade was under orders of Gen. John Geary, a most efficient officer for the duty to take charge not only of the enormous trains of the corps but of that of Kilpatrick, whose 240 wagons drawn by 720 span of mules occupied a long stretch of the war. As the regiment deployed in single line with intervals, it so happened that I was one of those temperarily in charge of a body of prisoners accompanying the train. If you could have seen them as they were, you would admit they were objects demanding and deserving commiseration.

During the Atlanta campaign, men were captured on skirmish or battle lines whose conduct commanded respect They were in prime of life and perfect health. They were so hearty, cheerful and social, accepting their illfortune as the chance of war, that they seemed more friends than foes but these poor fellows had nothing of the soldier in their dingy home-spun and dejected bearing. True, their condition and prospects were saddening and the boys were kindly disposed but they invited no sympathy as they silently with down-cast looks plodded stolidly along. Hours passed and as I moved by the flank of their column, not one of them exchanged speech with us nor with each other. I was tempted to offer a friendly remark to an intelligent looking middle-aged man walking nearest me but he looked so absorbed in his reflections that I refrained.

These prisoners were militia, not soldiers. They were devoid of any soldierly qualities they were fruits of a sweeping conscription that "robbed the cradle and the grave." Here were pale-faced boys, stout-built men and some whose hair was white with age. Their cause was in truth desperate when such as they were compelled to bear arm in hopeless battle. Their progress required no urging and so in silence my irksome duty was discharged until with satisfaction other troops relieved us of our charge. We came by noon-day to the stockade of Millen prison from which the wretched inmates had been hurriedly removed elsewhere, but two days preceeding arrived of the Union advance. All about within the enclosure were numerous evidences of occupation in the pitiable efforts to secure protection from inclement weather and to mitigate their suffering.

Rebel prisoners sent north were confined in camps in such cities as Rock Island, Chicago, Elmira and Indianapolis but Union soldiers were banished to the forest solitudes from which escapes were desperate indeed and over whose guarded gates it might truly be inscribed "Abandon hope all ye who enter here."

I was weary and affected by the move of the prisoners, took no needless steps but boiled coffee in water from a fine spring nearby. This spring flowed through the Union grounds and was abundant and pure if preserved uncontaminated. All about despite the shadows of scattered lofty pines, stood a rank growth of dry grass that some careless soldier had accidentally set on fire and on the instant the flames spread and became a menace of danger. Promptly rallying to the attack, we succeeded in beating out the fire and so averted what might have been a desolating far-extending forest conflagration.

We dreaded a heavy rain which would have increased the difficulty of crossing the trains over the swamps and creeks and when the march was resumed, we saw with forboding concern, the clouds lowering and a dash of drops fell but presently the sky cleared and restored confidence. The trains advanced steadily without interruption until sunset when the leading wagons went into park and gave us rest and time for supper.

Other marches had been of the night as well as day and this was to be no exception. As we moved on the stars shone bright far, far overhead but shone unnoticed. Our interest was earthward as we saw above the forest the reflected sheen of extensive fires athwart our line of advance. Presently we came upon and crossed the Augusta and Savannah railroad along whose course north and south as far as sight could reach, the line was marked by smoking, glowing fires and the ruin was complete. The work laid out for us was far different and more laborious—the task of guarding trains. Onward we went pattering through mud holes, undoubling flies to cross creeks upon unstable footbridges and double-quicking to again close on the column. Impelled by necessity, each had only one thing to do,—he must not fall behind for there was no transportation.

We of the infantry held jealously the right of way and gave no place to cook, bummer or negro, and these were forced with back loads of kettles, plunder and bedding to wade waist deep the sluggish muddy water course.

Now and then, some bummer stumbling was immersed and his mishap was greeted with derisive laughter. My sympathy was for the patient mules, brutally cursed and scourged by heartless teamsters as they strained floundering upon the provision wagons There was no respite until midnight when I assert with pride the remarkable fact from personal knowledge that wisely had the men been chosen, so inured had they become to hardships and so high was their morals that when with ringing cheer, the regiment filed from the road to bivouac until daylight in the woods, not a man was missing from his place in the ranks at the close of this nineteenth day's march to the sea.

Your Local Paper.

Do you realize the value of your local paper when sharply criticising it, and in a scoruful way pronounce it worthless and only a useless thing to be maintained? Would it, not be well my brother, to halt a moment and consider whether it is not a medium of more value and good than yourself? Why, bless you, your local paper tells you when to go to county, circuit and probate court and nearly anywhere else you may have to go on this mundane sphere. It tells who is dead and eulogizes their lives according to order, who is married, hurt, sick and a thousand other things you want to hear. It calls your attention to all public enterprises, advocates good schools, law and order in your town and country. It rejoices with you in prosperity and sympathizes with you in adversity. It records the marriage of your daughter, and is an index of innumerable souvenirs, the death of your son, the illness of your wife, all free of charge. It booms your town and builds up business whether you patronize it or not. Now gentlemen and ladies, ladies and gentlemen can you not have a faint realization of how much you owe to your town paper? Really are you not grateful and thankful that you have the privilege of maintaining such enterprises? Can you think of anything that after all, brings you more solace and satisfaction than your lively local paper?

New Pastor for St Joe M P Charge

Rev. L. Coomer, of Marion, Ind., was sent to the St. Joe M. P. charge by the president of the Conference to fill the vacancy made by J. C. McCain After filling the appointments on Sunday the church council decided to hire Bro. Coomer for the balance of the Conference year. He states that under the circumstances he will not be able to move all of his goods here until spring, as his wife has been in poor health for some time, however, he intends to occupy the parsonage soon himself. Rev. Coomer is an elderly man and is an excellent speaker and the charge is certainly fortunate in securing him. We bid him welcome to our little city.

Wants Divorce Many Charges

Mrs. Mary J. Henderson-Fredericks of Spencerville, has brought suit in the circuit court for a divorce, the restoration of her maiden name, Mary J. Henderson, and $1,000 alimony. Cruelty and abandonment are charged, she alleging that he would call her vile names, leave her alone for periods of time finally leaving on November 17, and sending her notice that he would not return. She says that he is drawing $24 per month pension and able to support her. The couple was married in Hudson in January, 1903. Each had been married before.—Exchange. While the above may be true Mr. Fredericks was at his Spencerville home Monday performing his usual duties.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Prison for Bank Clerks.

Five young men, formerly employed in national banks in Indiana, were sentenced to serve five years each in the Fort Leavenworth prison by Judge Anderson in the United States District Court at Indianapolis, Ind., after they pleaded guilty to embezzlement or complicity in embezzlement. They were taken to Fort Leavenworth. They are: Max C. Emmerich, bookkeeper of the Capital National Bank, of Indianapolis, embezzled $40,000; Harry C. Prinzler, business man of Indianapolis, in complicity with Emmerich; James H. Phillips, bookkeeper of the Terre Haute National Bank, of Terre Haute, embezzled $14,000; E. N. Detzer, paying teller of the First National Bank, of Fort Wayne, embezzled $7,700; Frank H. Nicolai, assistant cashier of the City National Bank, of Auburn, embezzled $4,000. Norman Hamilton, a clerk in the Indiana National Bank, of Indianapolis, who pleaded guilty to a theft of $500, was not sentenced. It was presented to the court that Hamilton had used a part of the money to pay his father's debts and that he had deposited the remainder in another bank and that, apparently, his mind was not wholly clear.

Mrs. Roosevelt Returns.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Ethel Roosevelt, arrived in New York City on the North German Lloyd steamship Koenig Albert. Mrs. Roosevelt boarded the steamship at Genoa, and it is expected she will return to Italy in February to meet her husband and son when they arrive from their African hunting expedition. Mrs. Roosevelt was in excellent health and said she had enjoyed her trip abroad very much.

General Vincent is Dead.

Brig. General Thomas McCurdy Vincent, who was famous as an Indian fighter in the early fifties, and was practically in charge of the organization of the volunteer army of the north during the Civil War, died at his home in Washington, D. C. Gen. Vincent was 77 years old and was the author of a number of books on military subjects. He will be buried in Arlington cemetery.

Twelve Hurt in Wreck.

Twelve persons were injured, some seriously, when the Uniontown and Pittsburg express train, on the Pennsylvania railroad, left the rails at Manor, Pa., near Pittsburg, and ran into a ditch. Mail Clerk George M. Scott, Baggageman W. E. Quigg and Signalman Charles Stissey may die. State Senator J. M. Davidson, of Greensburg, was bruised about the body.

Harriman's Estate is $149,000,000

According to a report published in New York City, E. H. Harriman's estate at the time of his death was valued at $149,000,000. This is said to be shown in the appraisers estate as completed and filed with the surrogate, which, however, has not been made public. On this valuation the State of New York would receive an inheritance tax of $1,490,000.

Dowie's Library is Ordered Sold.

The library of John Alexander Dowie, who founded the Christian Catholic church and established Zion City for his followers, has been ordered sold to a Chicago dealer for $7,000 by Judge Landis in the Federal District Court. The library contains many valuable historical works.

Negro Burned at the Stake.

John Harvard, a negro preacher, who shot and fatally injured Will D. Booth, two miles from Cochran, Ga., was captured by a mob of enraged citizens five miles from there and burned at a stake, more than a carload of light wood being heaped about the body.

Successor to Mr. Laffan.

Edward P. Mitchell, for many years on the editorial staff of the New York Sun, has been elected President of the Sun Printing and Publishing Association, succeeding the late William M. Laffan.

Michigan Bank is Closed.

The Bank of Vernon, at Vernon, Mich., was closed a few days ago. Frank Seargeant, part owner of the bank, petitioned the Circuit Court to appoint C. R. McLaughlin receiver.

POSTOFFICE RECEIPTS SHOW BUSINESS GAIN

Increase of 6.31 Per Cent in the Revenues Indicates a Healthy Condition.

DECREASE IN MONEY ORDERS

A Washington Correspondent Says Postal Statistics Clearly Set Forth Country's Growth.

The postoffice returns furnish the most accurate barometer we have of the condition of business. If a man or a firm is not doing anything they do not use the mails, but when they are busy they have to buy stamps and a return is made of every one that is sold. Hence the sales of postage stamps are an index of the condition of business, and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, the receipts from that source were $134,967,815.46, an increase of $11,593,104.44 over 1908. The second-class postage paid in money amounted to $7,236,058.70, an increase of $285,551.95. Third and fourth class postage paid in money was $3,229,741.35, an increase of $395,797.90, and the revenue from box rents in the postoffices throughout the country was $3,946,259.71, an increase of $112,956.16 over the previous year.

There was a falling off in various other sources of revenue, the most conspicuous being that from the money-order business. During the last fiscal year there was a decrease of $188,000 in the amount of domestic money orders issued and a decrease of $12,310,759 in the amount of foreign money orders issued. The revenue from this source was $3,417,625.38 for the year, showing a decrease of $260,130.06 from 1908.

The total revenues of the Postoffice Department for the fiscal year 1909 were $203,562,383.07, being an increase from the previous year of $12,083,719.66, or 6.31 per cent—a very healthful sign of the restoration of business from the panic of 1907, which was felt even into the first and second quarters of the recent fiscal year.

The only way to explain the falling off in the money orders is on the theory that the foreign-born element in the United States had not sufficiently recovered from the hard times of 1907 and 1908 to afford sending any part of their savings to the old folks in the countries from which they came.

During the last ten years $498,883,915 has been sent abroad in money orders alone, practically the entire amount being the savings of the foreign-born population in the United States remitted to their parents and other relatives, or for investment.

The growth of the country is indicated more accurately by the postal statistics than by any other standard of comparison, although there has been a decided falling off in the total number of postoffices since the rural delivery was introduced. Highwater mark was reached in 1901, when there were 76,945 postoffices, but those of the fourth class on the country roads and at the four corners have gradually been abolished and the mail of their patrons has been delivered at the doorstep of the farmers' homes by carriers. The total number of postoffices in operation on the 30th of June last was 60,144, which was a falling off of 16,801 since 1901 and a decrease of 1,014 during the previous twelve months. The number of first and second class offices increased considerably, however, and the amount of money devoted to postmasters' salaries was $26,571,911, a decided increase from the previous year.

The revenue of the Postoffice Department is increasing rapidly, and amounted to $203,563,343 last year, an increase of $12,083,719, but it does not yet equal or even keep pace with the expenditures, which were $221,004,102 during the fiscal year 1909—an increase of $12,662,216 from the previous year. There seems to be no way of pulling down the expenses, notwithstanding the efforts of the Postoffice Department to economise and to rule out of the mails cast quantities of second-class matter that was formerly carried free.

The deficit in the earnings last year was larger than ever before in the history of the government, and amounted to $17,479,770. Ten years ago the deficit was $5,335,688, while in 1902 it was only $2,961,169. It is increasing so rapidly every year that there is very little hope that the Postoffice Department will ever become self-supporting, as it is in nearly every other country.

Killed by Navajo Indian.

Charles Frits was murdered by a Navajo Indian near Ship Rock agency, New Mexico, according to news brought to Supt. Shelton, of Durango, Col., by a band of Navajos. Robbery is thought to have been the motive. The slayer was captured.

Politician Shot and May Die.

William E. Proctor, of Louisville, Ky., Republican candidate for city auditor in the recent election, was shot and probably fatally wounded by R. M. Culley. Culley declared Proctor insulted his wife.

THREE GET FEDERAL POSTS.

Taft Names James L. Davenport Pension Chief, Succeeding Warner.

President Taft on Wednesday announced three appointments of national importance. James L. Davenport, First Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, was selected for Pension Commissioner to succeed Vespasian Warner; Benjamin S. Cable, of Chicago, was made Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to succeed Ormsby McHarg, and Chief Justice W. J. Mills, of the New Mexico Supreme Court, was named for Governor of that Territory.

Mr. Davenport, chosen for the pension post, is from New Hampshire and has occupied the position of Deputy Commissioner for twelve years. He is a veteran of the late war, entering the service in 1864, when he left his home in New Hampshire and went to Wisconsin, where he enlisted in Company B of the Fortieth Wisconsin Regiment. He served in that organization until September of that year. He was then enrolled in the Forty-ninth Wisconsin, but was compelled to return east by sickness. For a short time after the war Mr. Davenport was a store clerk, and then for twelve years he was a traveling salesman. In 1881 he went to Washington and entered the pension office, where he has remained ever since. The new Commissioner is a Republican in politics. He is 64 years of age.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

At Richmond Miss Mary Joanston, the novelist, gave out a signed statement explaining why she signed the petition for the suffrage amendment.

Editor Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, in a letter to his paper from Paris, says that nothing can stay the rising tide of socialism all over the world, and that "universal suffrage and universal education mean universal revolution."

In a recent issue the New York Tribune, recognized as an administration organ, says that the men high in the confidence of President Taft, "have become convinced of the existence of a far reaching and shrewdly organized political movement which has for its purpose the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt in the National Convention of 1912."

"Nine-tenths of all the objections now being offered to the central bank plan miss the mark; they do not apply at all to the kind of a central bank that is proposed," declared George E. Roberts, president of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago, former director of the mint, while addressing a meeting of bankers at Kansas City, speaking in favor of the Aldrich central bank idea.

At Detroit Senator Aldrich made the last of his speeches in the Middle West in the interest of monetary reform, having previously spoken at Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Milwaukee. In answering the objection that a central bank would necessarily be influenced by political considerations, he pointed to the European central banks, which are never drawn into politics

MURDERS LAID TO BROTHERS.

Arrests at Philadelphia for a Series of Crimes at Berwick, Pa.

Charged with being implicated in a series of "black hand" outrages, which the police say included three murders, Antonio Calabra was arrested in Philadelphia and returned to Berwick, Pa., in custody of a member of the State constabulary. His brother, Fortunato, and another alleged member of the band were arrested at Tamaqua and also were sent to Berwick. Antonio Calabra and his brother Fortunato were residents of West Berwick, where they are said to have been leaders of a "black hand" gang which in 1906 is alleged to have killed and disposed of the bodies of nine Italians. At that time cellars under the houses of the suspects were dug up, but no bodies were found. Several of the murders occurred while the Calabra brothers were in the Eastern penitentiary, serving sentences for extortion. One month ago Fortunato was pardoned by Gov. Stuart and his brother's time expired several months ago.

KILLS MOTHER AND SELF.

Fugitive Also Slays Deputy and Wounds Farmer and Wife.

After slaying his mother and a deputy sheriff and wounding, probably fatally, a farmer and the latter's wife, when he turned their home into a barricade against a posse, Clyde Weaver killed himself by a bullet through the head. The battle occurred in Franklin Township, nine miles east of Greenville, Ohio, and Weaver ended his life in the home of Levi Minnich, where he had taken refuge after shooting Minnich and wife. Weaver returned from Illinois the previous week, after being paroled from the Dayton workhouse under promise to keep out of Ohio. He was facing arrest for threatening to kill the family of James Hapner.

LAUNCH CAPSIZES; FIVE DROWN.

Wedding Guests Die in Muskegon Lake When Gasoline Explodes.

Five persons were drowned in Muskegon Lake Thursday afternoon when the pleasure launch Olga, carrying a party of nine young people, capsized as the result of a panic following a gasoline explosion. Four of those who lost their lives were members of one family. The dead are: Oscar Carlson, aged 28; Hulda Carlson, 24; Anna Carlson, 20; Jennie Carlson, 13; Ann Saunders. The party had started out to attend a wedding on the north side of the lake, and decided to take a short cruise before going to the festivities. They encircled the lake, and were within 150 feet of the north landing when the accident occurred.

MEN CAUGHT IN BURNING MINE.

Eight Imprisoned in Shaft in Tennessee, but Believed to Be Alive.

Eight men were imprisoned in a cave-in and fire Tuesday in one of the copper mines of the Tennessee Copper Company at Copper Hill, Tenn. Four oxygen helmets, two tanks of oxygen and other mine-rescue paraphernalia were sent from Knoxville on a special train. The fire is under control and the imprisoned men are believed to be alive.

"DRYS" LOSE IN ALABAMA.

"Wets" Win by Big Majority, Killing Constitutional Amendment.

Every report increases the majority that the opponents of a constitutional amendment for prohibition gained in the election in Alabama Monday. The outlook now is that it will be a landslide, going to perhaps 15,000 majority against the proposition. Not over eight, perhaps, will be in favor. Montgomery gives a majority of 1,714 against it; Mobile over 2,000, and Jefferso 1,000.

Colbert, the home of Speaker Carmichael, and Dale, his own county, are both against it. Barbour, the county of Governor B. B. Comer, is way in the opposition, while the home of Weakley, the prophet of the Fuller bill, has snowed him under by overwhelming defeat of the amendmnt. H. S. D. Mallory, amendment candidate for Governor, seems to be the only man who has held his own, his county of Dallas evidently being with him. The total vote will run to about 100,000; the majority may be as much as 15,000.

BANKER IS GIVEN TEN YEARS.

Phil Allen, Jr., of Mineral Point, Wis., Pleads Guilty.

Phil Allen, Jr., former vice president of the First National Bank of Mineral Point, Wis., pleaded guilty before Judge Sanborn in the United States District Court in Madison, Wis., to four out of twenty-six counts in the indictment against him and was sentenced to ten years in the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., the maximum under the law on any one count. Allen was charged with embezzling $168,000 from the Mineral Point bank. The banker, who is 63 years old, has been in jail for several weeks, having pleaded not guilty at La Crosse to the indictment returned against him. He came in court unexpectedly, and with bowed head in an almost inaudible voice pleaded guilty. When asked if he had anything to say, he replied there was nothing to say.

His excellency, Baron Liang Kn'el, an uncle of the emperor of China, and brother of the empress, is in Washington, D. C., on a special mission for his government.

The Finnish Diet on Tuesday unanimously refused to grant Russia's demand for $4,000,000 for military purposes and instead passed a resolution asking the czar to have the military question settled constitutionally.

A report from Berlin states that the defalcation at the Kiel navy yards may amount to several millions. There is no means of knowing even roughly the amount of the government's losses through the selling at nominal prices of immense quantities of copper, steel and other supplies by the connivance of a ring of dealers with the minor naval officials.

BUDGET HURLED OUT BY LORDS, 350 TO 75

Force General Election in Fight with Commons for Control of Government.

STAKE THEIR POWER ON RESULT

Liberals Will Ask King to Create New Peers if Supported by People at Polls.

The British House of Lords in London has refused to accept the budget as drawn by Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George and passed by the House of Commons. By a vote of 350 to 75 the lords Tuesday night passed the amendment offered by Lord Lansdowne, that the house was not justified in giving its consent to the bill until it had been submitted to the judgment of the country.

The defeat of the budget brings the lords and commons into direct conflict, the liberal government, backing the commons, having announced that if the budget is upheld in the general election it will appeal to King Edward to create enough new peers to wipe out the present majority of the upper house. The commons claim that by their action the lords have created a situation unprecedented in English history, at least in 300 years, by refusing formal assent to the budget bill, thereby, in theory, making it illegal to collect taxes and carry on the king's government.

Finance is not the only question affected by the lords' action. Tariff reform and the great Irish movements for home rule and land legislation will be equally influenced. The Irish nationalists claim the general election will wipe out the power of the lords, and that the last barrier to home rule will be removed.

The decision of the lords to reject the budget was in direct disregard of the advice of some of its ablest and oldest members such, as Rosebery, Morley, Lord James of Hereford, Lord Cromer, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, the Early of Lytton, Lord Courtney, and the archbishops of Canterbury and York.

FIGHT BANDITS IN FOG.

Minnesota Pair Rob Bank and Flee on Speeder.

In an early morning fog Sheriff Hazen, Deputy Johnson, and Patrolman Bener halted at a bridge two bank robbers escaping on a railroad speeder from Puposky, Minn., where they had blown open a bank about midnight. In the fight which ensued Johnson was critically injured, one robber, supposed to be Jim Smith, was killed, and the second bandit was driven from the machine into the wilderness, pursued by a posse, which grew larger as the chase continued. Word was sent from Puposky to Bemidji by telephone that the safe in a bank there had been opened and $900 stolen. The robbers stole a speeder.

300 ARE HOMELESS IN STRIKE.

Fifty Italians Imported to Take the Places of Mill Workers.

The weather has added to the misery of 300 persons evicted Saturday from tenements owned by the Ludlow Manufacturing Association, Ludlow, Mass., because of a strike in the mills of the company. The household effects of the evicted persons were piled together in a heap in the street in front of the houses from which they had been removed. The owners found refuge in the houses of friends. The principal development was the importation of a band of fifty Italians, who were taken to the mills to work under police guard.

ZELAYA'S ARMY BEATEN.

Forces of Insurgent Leader Victorious in Hard Fight in Nicaragua.

A wireless dispatch received at Colon from Bluefields, says: "After five hours of fighting Sunday the revolutionists under General Matuty defeated 1,000 government troops in the neighborhood of the Topax mine above Rama. Several standards and a quantity of arms and ammunition fell into the hands of General Matuty. The Zelayan troops lost eighty men killed and many wounded, while the revolutionists, who fought behind bowlders and other protections, lost twenty men killed."

BOY KILLS WOUNDED COMPANION

Omaha Lad Tells of "Making Good Job" After Hunting Accident.

While hunting the other day Wesley McBride, aged 16, according to his version of the affair, accidentally shot his companion, Harry Long, aged 15, in the jaw and then fired two more shots into his head to "make a good job of it." McBride says he was twirling a revolver on his finger when the accident occurred. He notified the Omaha police of the shooting and told of firing the two shots which ended Long's life.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER XXIII.

"And what do you think this foolish Quixotic child is going to do with the cottage you have given her at Chatswell?" said Lady Garland to Mr. Joseph Taunton, as they sat together at dinner in Eaton Place that evening.

"I could never guess, I am sure," answered the enamored Joe, gazing with admiring eyes across the table at his betrothed, "but she's welcome to make it into a dog kennel if she likes."

"Vearly nearly as bad at that, I do assure you!" laughed Lady Garland. "Just tell Joe about it, Irene, and what you have settled."

"I am going to turn it into a convalescent home for London children who want change of air—I hope you won't object, Joe?" said Irene.

"Not in the least, my dear, but I thought you wanted it for yourself."

"I mean often to run down myself and look after things, but my wish is to make a dedication of the house to my dear mother's memory, and I know that it would have pleased her. It will hold six children and a matron to look after them, whom I engaged this morning—a nice, cheerful, sensible young woman, who has been a nurse in the Children's Hospital. She is going to see after everything for me."

Irene had been very full of her new scheme up till this afternoon, in fact it interested her vastly more than her trousseau did, and she had left Lady Garland by herself to select and order some delightful tea-jackets, whilst she went off in a hansom to a large furniture shop in the city with her new matron, to choose the necessary plain deal furniture and iron cots for her cottage home. And after Irene had chosen her bedsteads and washstands, she left the matron and went away by herself to Burlington House.

She had come home an hour later in an altered frame of mind, with her new toy driven completely out of her head. For in that short interval, dismay, disappointment and anger had torn her heart in twain. But these emotions were all over now, they had been merged and chased away by one strange and bewildering thought. The man whom she had met, whom she had believed to be Rupert Carroll, to whom she had spoken words of bitter reproach—this man had asked her calmly if she was quite sure she was not mistaking him for someone else!

For the first time a real doubt had crept into her mind. She recalled his looks, his gestures, the tones of his voice, and it began to be borne in upon her that there was something unfamiliar to her about them all. This was the third time she had met this man, whom she had taken for her lost lover, and each time he had been in the company of the same golden-haired and rouged lady, whom, having heard of his marriage, she had very naturally believed to be his wife. She had even taken the trouble to discover the name of the lady whom Rupert Carroll had married, and had remembered the name of Agatha Dale as that of the girl who had lived with his sister, and of whom she had been vaguely jealous. This woman, indeed, was older, and less like the girl of her imagination than she had supposed possible; still, she was always with him—at Monte Carlo in the concert-room, and again at Lady Clothilda's ball, and now again once more.

The mystery was perfectly incomprehensible to her. Yet momentarily, and more and more, she became convinced that although Rupert Carroll evidently existed still and was married, the man she had taken for him, who had slighted her and passed her by, was not her lost lover at all—but someone else.

If there was comfort in the thought, there was also a perfect whirlpool of uncertainty and confusion. Her head ached and throbbed with thinking of it. As she leant back in the box at Covert Garden whilst the strains of Mascagni's lovely opera were annapturing a crowded audience, Irene, perhaps alone out of all that vast multitude, listened very little to the music. Her thought were far away with the Rupert of her life's romance—the love of her happy girlhood. She was trying to recall those precious words and looks of his, out of the long ago, and to find in them some foreshadowing of the after events of her tragic story. Ever and again, as she thought about the past and her eyes glanced at the stout, unattractive little man opposite her, to whom she had promised herself, a strong shudder of revulsion went through her.

"I cannot marry him!" she thought. "It will be a horrible shame, for he is kind to me, and I believe he is really fond of me—but—how can I do it? I know when the time comes, I shall not be able to bring myself to it."

It was the first time that she had really faltered in her resolution. With an effort she turned towards the stage and tried to attend to what was going on. The soprano was singing—the exquisite notes of her beautiful voice rang through the house. In spite of herself Irene began to be entranced by the music, when suddenly Lady Garland touched her arm.

"There is something the matter with Joe," she whispered—"look!"

Irene turned round. Mr. Taunton was livid—his eyes were distended—he gasped for breath. The two ladies rose simultaneously to go to his assistance, but he put out his hand and pushed them back, and then rushed violently out of the box. Lady Garland and Irene remained facing each other with looks of horror and dismay.

What were they to do?—should they follow him in spite of his prohibition? they asked of one another. But before they could come to any conclusion, Joseph Taunton came back again, looking rather pale and exhausted, but otherwise much the same as usual.

"It is nothing," he said, reassuringly. "I have had these attacks before; I am subject to them, but it is over. It was the heat, I think. However, if you will kindly excuse me, ladies, I think I will go home now—I will leave my brougham to take you and Irene home, Lady Garland."

He made his adieux and left them. He seemed nearly himself again, and they neither of them felt much anxiety concerning him. Later on, as they went back to Eton Place in his brougham, they paused a moment by the way to inquire in Grosvenor Square and learned that Mr. Taunton was quite well and had retired to bed without sending for any doctor. This, of course, completely reassured them.

It was a lovely moonlight night, the two ladies got out of the brougham at their own house, and whilst Lady Garland paused to dismiss the coachman with a small gratuity, Irene ran up the steps lightly to open the door with her aunt's latch-key. On the threshold she stumbled and nearly fell over a dark object that lay stretched right across the doorway. It was the lifeless body of a child. His clothes were old and ragged—but some of the rags were fresh, as though they had been newly torn in some struggle—and there was an ugly cut in his forehead, from which the blood had trickled down into a pool on the white stone of the doorstep. Irene raised the lifeless body in her arms.

"My dear Irene!" cried Lady Garland in horror, "what are you doing?—let us fetch a policeman."

"A policeman! at this hour. Even if we could find one, what could he do for this poor boy? He wants a nurse and a doctor, not a policeman."

Irene carried poor bleeding, lifeless Billy Watson into her bedroom and laid him tenderly down upon her own bed. Billy was not dead. He was a tough little subject, and had been accustomed to so many cuffs and blows that it would probably have been hard to kill him outright, but he had been severely mauled and knocked about, although luckily for him the wound in his head was not so serious as it might have been.

But he was covered with bruises, and had been roughly kicked and shaken. He very soon recovered consciousness, and by the next morning, when Irene's new matron was installed by his bedside, and a doctor had been summoned to prescribe for him, he was able to give some sort of account of what had happened to him.

"It was them chaps," he told Irene. "I warn't goin' to do them 'arm, only to go and see the gent in Wictory street as 'ad told me to call, and they come and stopped me and beat me about shameful."

"Who were to men?" inquired Irene. "Tell me who they are; do you know them—could you identify them?"

"Fast enough, miss—I knows 'em—well. But I ain't a goin' to give information agin 'em. It's as much as my life is worth, they'll kill me next time as it is," and Billy began to cry.

"Don't cry, Billy. They shan't have a chance of killing you."

"They'll 'unt me down, miss, and do for me," wept the despondent Billy; "as soon as iver I set foot in the streets again, they'll murder me—ye see they think I was goin' to tell the police some'at as I knows on."

"Suppose you were to be taken right away into the country, Billy, as soon as ever you got better, out of the way of these wicked men? Would you be a good boy?"

"Oh—h, miss!" he gasped, adding immediately after in an undertone: "I've never seen the country, but I've been told it's a beautiful place."

"You shall see it, Billy," said Irene, and her soft eyes filled with tears of compassion over the sad fate of the poor little London waif who had "never seen the country."

So that was how Billy Watson came to be the first inmate in the new home for convalescent children at Chatswell-on-Thames. Billy was a young thief, it is true, but he was by no means a hardened offender, and kindness soon softened his heart, whilst gratitude to the beautiful lady who had rescued and preserved him, filled him with ardent longings after a better and more honest life. Miss Gibbs, the matron, was a good woman who knew how to get at the better side of her young charges, and when Billy got strong again, she kept him employed in carrying coals and water, and cleaning knives and boots, and weeding the garden paths, at a small weekly salary, which was the first money Billy had come by honestly since he had left Mr. M'Gillup's shop.

All this, however, came to pass in time, and not immediately; and Billy was barely allowed to creep out of doors and sit in a chair in the sun, when Irene came down for a few hours from London to inspect her Cottage Home for the first time. It was a trying ordeal for her. The Cottage was necessarily much altered both outside and in, and it was no longer the rose-garlanded and daintily-fitted home of her happier days.

Still, when she looked at the four little pale faces already installed beneath the low thatched roof, she could not give a sigh or regret to the past any longer. They all looked so happy and were enjoying themselves so much, and everything was beginning to work so easily and so satisfactorily, that she could not fail to be pleased with the first results of her scheme.

After she had visited her mother's grave, and gone to see a few humble old friends in the village, Irene found herself with half an hour on her hands to spare, before her return train was due. So she went and sat on the lawn by Billy's side in the sun, and gazed at the placid waters of the backwater, at the white water-lilies sleeping on the surface, and at the long rows of willows that swept low over the shadowy stream, and then it was that Billy broke in upon her sad memories with the following remark:

"Miss, there's some'at as I should like to get hoff my mind by telling you. I promised you I would be a good boy, and so I will. I have led a bad life, miss, and been a wicked boy, but I won't do them wicked things any more. I can't abear to remember them. Miss, there was a great robbery as very near came off as I was mixed up in. I should like to confess about it all to you, and get it off my conscience."

"Tell me about it, Billy; what sort of a robbery was it?"

"It was a jewel robbery, miss. It was all along of those three chaps as nearly finished me the other day; they got hold of me and tempted me. I were then errand boy and did odd jobs in a West Enw jeweler's shop, and these chaps paid me 'ansom to keep watch and give them the tip when any partic'lar jewels was bought, so that they might nab them. Well, it were a long time ago—it were last September year, nearly two year ago now, and it were, I remember, on a very wet Saturday morning."

Irene turned round to him with a sudden interest. A wet Saturday morning last September year! Could there be any other but one wet Saturday at that, to her, never forgotten date?

"There com'd a gent to the shop that mornin', as bought some valuable pearls, I was set to watch, and also some diminds. I knowed 'im perfectly 'cause he had been several times about these 'ere wery pearls; he were a lord, and he were going to get married. I knowed 'im well, as I says; he 'ad dark curly hair, and reddish moustaches and brown eyes."

Somehow her heart began to beat a little at this description.

"Well, my lord, he said he'd 'ave the pearls and the rest, and he said they was to be sent to Wictory street in good time, as he was goin' to take them 'imself into the country that wery afternoon. Well, miss, I listens with all my ears, 'opin', you see, to earn two quid, as 'ad been promised me, and bein' a Saturday, and early closin' day, I cuts off as fast as I could get away, to meet them chaps and tell them. So we all goes down together to Wictory station—they took me, ye see, to 'dentify the gent. Well, I seed 'im fast enough, and I showed him to them. I were a good way off, but I see 'im d'rectly—tall chap with curly 'air, auburn moustache, and brown eyes; then they gived me the two quid and got into the train theirselves, and I went 'ome. Well, miss, what 'appens is this: They gets out o' the train at the country station, and they waylays the gent in the fields—they knocks 'im hover the 'ead, and they leaves 'im for a dead 'un—but never a jewel does they find on 'im! Them chaps never forgave me for telling them wrong—they've watched me like a cat hever since—they said I set 'em on the wrong chap."

WIRELESS FOR FOREST FIRES.

Believed New Invention Might Be Utilized in the Northwest.

The use of the wireless for giving notice of trouble in ships at sea has made a profound impression upon the world. It has given the traveling publish fresh confidence in ocean transportation, and logically should in time reduce the cost of marine insurance. But it is quite probable that the potential value of this device for protective purposes has by no means been exhausted. It has occurred to timber cruisers in the far northwest that it could be profitably employed to give warning of forest fires in that territory, says the Boston Transcript. The lumber region there is a vast one and lumbermen say that more timber is annually consumed by fire than by the saw. A thousand acres of primeval forest were destroyed by fire in western Washington last year and as much more or more in various portions of the inland empire, and even then the losses were regarded as lighter than usual.

It is claimed that but for the destruction by fire the timber supply might easily be conserved so as to last for centuries. The chief reason for the spread of fire is that after its start is discovered a long time must elapse before aid can be summoned. It generally gives its own warning through the flames that are working its destruction and then the trouble is beyond control. The telephone and the telegraph are not of much service. The poles burn and blasing branches fall across the wires and render them of no avail. It is therefore proposed to establish a system of wireless signal boxes and teach the forest rangers how to use them. That would not wholly solve the problem, but would prove of great assistance in reducing the danger to an industry that pays annually $75,000,000 in wages in that section.

Vicarious Efforts.

Kind Old Lady (talking to a tramp)—Have you ever made an effort to get work?

Tramp—Yes, ma'am. Last month I got work for two members of my family, but neither of them would take it.—Human Life.

Sure Test.

Stella—Can you tell if he loves you by a daisy?

Bella—No; by whether he sends me the most expensive flowers.—Judge.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

County Commissioner Thomas Dick, who lives in Decker, may lose the sight of his right eye as the result of being struck in the face by a nail.

Clifford Blakely, aged 16, was fatally shot at Decker by Ellis Decker, who was examining Blakely's shotgun. He playfully pointed the gun at Blakely, thinking it was unloaded, and pulled the trigger. The entire charge entered Blakely's stomach, inflicting wounds to his intestines which will cause his death.

What seems to be a panther is terrorizing the people near Flora. The beast has made its appearance a number of times, and every one who has seen it says it resembles a panther. The animal was first seen a few nights ago near the Wabash river bridge, by a party of young people who were returning from a party.

T. A. Russell, of Shelbyville, the president of the Waldron Poultry Club, has in his possession a fine bred Plymouth Rock pullet which is a curiosity. It has no bill, but has a mouth and perfectly formed pug nose and nostrils. The eyes are set in the head just like any other chicken's eyes. The bird is almost fullgrown.

The Knox County Corn Growers' Association will hold its annual farmers' institute and corn show at the Indiana Presbyterian church, near Decker, December 16 and 17. The program includes addresses by D. F. Maish, of Frankfort, and Mrs. Virginia Meredith, of Cambridge City. Prizes ranging from $10 to $1 will be awarded for the best exhibits of Knox County corn.

As examples of remarkable personal names among the people of Clay County are to be found George James and James George, A. C. Fishback and C. A. Backfish, John Johns and George George. In a family named Miller the father, four sons and one daughter were all named John. In 1852, at the first election under the new constitution, "Hail Columbia" Conaway was elected county treasurer.

Mrs. Mina Poszman, aged 30, living near Boggstown, is dead, and it is thought her death was due to pellagra, the much-talked-of disease. Her illness began last May, just after the woman had eaten some bread baked from corn meal. The analysis of the bread disclosed that it was far from being pure and wholesome. The woman's throat and mouth were affected, and physicians thought her sufferings were caused from corn meal poisoning.

While spending an evening with friends Rolla Stone, of Owensville, laughed heartily over some joke, and kept on laughing. He couldn't stop laughing and laughed himself into tears. His friends became alarmed when they realized that his condition was serious. A physician was called, and after working with Stone an hour, succeeded in quieting him. His hysteria was due to a nervous affection, and is the only case of the kind on record in Gibson County. Mr. Stone is slowly recovering.

Two large peach basket hats saved the lives of Mrs. Oscar Heller and Mrs. James Walton, in Greenfield, when the women were victims of a runaway accident. The women, who are sisters, were driving a spirited horse, when the animal became frightened and overturned the buggy. Mrs. Heller and Mrs. Walton were dragged along the rough pavement for half a block and the large hats worn by the women protected their heads from injury. Neither was seriously hurt, although their headgear was ruined.

The great crow roost north of Mitchell is again attracting attention. The crows come in thousands, many flying from the Ohio river, where they feed in the daytime. About 3 o'clock they begin to fly over the town and they keep up a steady stream until night comes on. The farmers have tried to scare them away by shooting, but it seems to have no effect on the number. A few nights ago several men shot into the roosts and hundreds were killed, but the hunters were forced to run, as they were attacked by the birds, which flew at their heads. They feed on the corn in the fields and are regarded as a nuisance.

The pecan exhibit held in the courthouse at Mt. Vernon by the Experiment Station of Purdue University was a success. Professor Woodbury, of the horticultural department of Purdue, and Mason J. Niblack, of Vincennes, had charge of the display and they said they were well pleased with the interest taken in it. About one dozen specimens of fine pecans were exhibited and the names and the owners of the trees and the farms on which the trees stand were taken and will be used for future reference. The first premium of $15 for the best exhibit was received by C. F. Brown, of Rockport. Other prize winners were: Roy Mitchell, of New Harmony; Morton Elliott, of New Harmony; Thomas J. Erwin, of Mt. Vernon; Josie Crunk, of New Haven, Ill., and William York, of Mt. Vernon.

J. K. Woodward, president of the Merchants' National Bank of New Albany, and James Tucker, the negro chauffeur, who were shot by Tom Hoal, the dime novel bank robber, are now considered out of danger.

Governor Marshall has announced the appointment of Colonel George W. McCoy, of Vincennes, as Adjutant General of the Indiana National Guard and of Major Charles A. Garrard, of Indianapolis, as Quartermaster General. Both are Democrats.

The fifth annual exhibition of the Young America Poultry and Pet Stock Association will be held at Young America from December 27 to January 1. J. C. Long will be the judge.

Sullivan prospectors in drilling for oil near the Steel Tipple mine, just south of Shelburn, bored into the mine to the great surprise of the well diggers. The drill had reached a depth of eight hundred feet when it penetrated a vacant room at the colliery. The miners quickly came out of the pit, but returned when they found there was no danger.

Dr. Harvey Mitchell, aged 83 years, Muncie's oldest physician, died a few days ago at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Charles Anthony, where his widow is lying seriously ill. Death was due to senility. The handsome new Mitchell business block in South Walnut street, recently completed, marks the site where Dr. and Mrs. Mitchell lived for a half century.

H. F. Shaw, of Lawrenceburg, has been appointed a clerk in the Interstate Commerce Commission. I. H. King, of Yorktown, gets a place as teacher in the Pine Ridge (S. D.) Indian school, and A. W. Phillipson, of Winamac, goes to the Paraja Indian school in New Mexico, as a teacher. Albert P. Shine has been appointed rural carrier and John Miser substitute, on route No. 2 at Winamac.

The Hoosier Fanciers' Association has announced that it will give its annual exhibit of poultry and pet live stock on February 14-21, in Anderson. Various poultry clubs of Indiana will also hold their annual meeting and exhibit in connection with the local Hoosier Fanciers' Association. D. T. Weintick, of Jacksonville, Ill., and George E. Ewald, of Cincinnati, have been engaged as judges of the exhibits of poultry.

Basil Cochrun, aged 14, who was sentenced in the Juvenile Court at South Bend two weeks ago for stealing electric runabouts, but who was later released, pending a medical examination, was again taken in custody on a similar charge. The lad is believed to be a kleptomaniac, his penchant being automobiles. The last machine taken by young Cochrun is the property of Edmund C. Roche, and the lad was caught in a distant part of the city with several companions, all of whom were thoroughly enjoying a ride.

Terre Haute policemen have been called on to do many things, even "looking after the baby," but recently a request came over the telephone that startled the men at headquarters. A woman said she wished a policeman sent to her house "right away," and finally explained she desired him to kill her Thanksgiving turkey. "Can't you kill it?" asked the desk sergeant. "I should say not; the policeman can shoot it," she replied. A bicycle patrolman was sent to the woman's house, and the officer killed the fowl with an ax.

Beauregard Cullen, of New Albany, a telegraph lineman, is suffering from injuries received when the end of a buggy shaft was driven through his upper jaw, penetrating the roof of his mouth. Cullen was riding a bicycle when the accident occurred and was unable to escape a horse that shied at an engine. The sharp point of a metal tipped buggy shaft struck Cullen in the upper lip under the nose and passed through the jawbone and roof of his mouth. A plate containing several artificial teeth was forced down Cullen's throat and he almost strangled to death before a surgeon reached him.

John C. Albert, aged 98, one of the oldest residents of Paoli, is dead at his home in that city following an illness of over a year. Albert was born in Pennsylvania and came to Indiana about the time it was first organized as a State. In 1853 Albert was appointed treasurer of Orange County, and was afterward elected for two terms to the same office. Nineteen years afterward he joined the newborn Greenback party, and was its nominee for Congress from his district in 1880. He is survived by a wife and two daughters, Mrs. George A. Buskirk, of Indianapolis, and Mrs. Volney Hudleston, of Emporia, Kas.

The caving in of the earth's surface near Coalmont, in the southern part of Clay County, is causing much apprehension there. It is believed that the cave-in is being caused by the abandoning of the Bogle mines. There are great cracks in the earth that go down so deep that the strongest light can not penetrate them. Some of these cracks are within fifty yards of the Bogle school, and Township Trustee Puckett is at a loss to know what to do. Parents refuse to allow their children to attend this school, and it has been abandoned. The pupils are gathered up in wagons and hauled to another school two miles distant. Dozens of miners' houses have toppled over and the occupants have fled, leaving their household goods in their dwellings.

Members of the Ventura Club, composed of Evansville young women, have decided to take out hunting licenses. As a result many of the farmers in the section ahve decided to lock their stock in their stables.

The turkey supply in Evansville was exhausted and many residents were forced to eat chicken or duck instead of the big Thanksgiving bird. It is estimated that Evansville people spent over $35,000 for turkey for Thanksgiving.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade, says:

"Thanksgiving trade in the leading retail lines responded amply to expectations and sustained progress in business generally is evidenced by further gains in solvent payments through the banks and decreased ratio in trading defaults. Industrial conditions disclose no cessation in the extent and variety of new demands, while in most branches of heavy production activity steadily extends.

Contracts include fair tonnages of pig iron and substantial quantities of rails, cars, power and equipment, machinery and hardware.

Chicago railroad earnings maintain notable gross gains over those of a year ago. Ship building is strengthened by additional orders and the iron, brass, electric and furniture shops produce more extensively to meet urgent requirements.

Prices of the principal materials for factory consumption remain quite firm, while various finished products soon may be marked up. Lumber dealings reflect a broader absorption of both hard and soft woods. Hides, leather and wool continue in good demand.

Agriculturists are reaping very profitable returns, and now buy liberally of necessaries, machinery, vehicles and materials for farm improvements. Interior dealers find their stocks of general merchandise under rapid depletion. Prompt replenishment is noted in seasonable lines.

Money remains in good general request by the manufacturing and mercantile interests; sales of local securities largely exceed those at this time last year and further gains appear in new building permits and realty sales.

Bank clearings, $231,006,184, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 8.2 per cent and compare with $159,781,910 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number twenty-three, against twenty-seven last week, twenty-six in 1908 and twenty-three in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number seven, against six last week, five in 1908 and thirteen in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Cold weather and the approach of the holiday season have continued to stimulate retail trade and measurably improve re-assorting trade with jobbers. In wholesale trade there are, however, some intimations of cross currents tending to restrict fullest activities.

Industrial reports are generally of large, in some cases record, outputs for the season, though here again undiminished activity in buying is noted in finished products.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Nov. 25 were 211 against 232 last week, 193 in the like week of 1908, 258 in 1907, 174 in 1906 and 188 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number twenty-four, which compares with twenty-nine last week and thirty-five in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

Nervous Prostration

"I suffered so with Nervous Prostration that I thought there was no use trying to get well. A friend recommended Dr. Miles' Nervine, and although skeptical at first, I soon found myself recovering, and am to-day well."
MRS. D. I. JONES,
5800 Broadway, Cleveland, O.

Much sickness is of nervous origin. It's the nerves that make the heart force the blood through the veins, the lungs take in oxygen, the stomach digest food, the liver secrete bile and the kidneys filter the blood. If any of these organs are weak, it is the fault of the nerves through which they get their strength. Dr. Miles' Nervine is a specific for the nerves. It soothes the irritation and assists in the generation of nerve force. Therefore you can hardly miss it if you take Dr. Miles' Nervine when sick. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

The greatest danger from influenza is of its resulting in pneumonia. This can be obviated by using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, as it not only cures influenza, but counteracts any tendency of the disease towards pneumonia. Sold by H. M. Milliman, St. Joe; W. L. Wernert, Spencerville.

We overlooked the item of the Thanksgiving dinner at Mrs. Filley's, in our rush. Those present were Glen Miller, wife and baby, Warn Miller of Cromwell; Mrs. Walt Miller and daughter of Newville; Geo. Bartlett, wife and daughter Bessie, and lady friend, Miss Lemon, of Wayne, besides St. Joe relatives.

We are pleased to note the success of our friend, Mr Chasting Johnston, as a teacher of music. Last week, he turned away twelve students of near Harlan. His time is now so completely taken up that it hardly possible for new scholars to be taken. He is on the move all the time and is now instructing one of the largest classes that we ever knew of one person handling.

Jos. B. Hainley commenced his work in the grist mill, Monday of this week. We welcome he and his family to our little village. Mr. Hainley has had several years experience in the milling business and as Mr. Keesler is a practical miller, there is no reason why the boys can't make things hum. Mr. Keesler has a large trade established and with a little more capital a large volume of business can be done. We wish the new firm success.

Colorado apples sold for a dollar and fifty cents a dozen in the New England markets in October, at the same time that California oranges sold for seventy five cents. Northerners used to have visions of the fortunes to be made in Florida orange-groves; but when apples command such a price, there is no reason why eastern Yankees should not begin to make the fortune at home by cultivating and packing apples according to the most improved methods.

Sold by H. M. Milliman, St. Joe; W. L. Wernert, Spencerville.

A Law and Order League was organized at Auburn Monday night and the following officers elected: Dr. F. M. Hines, president; John Zimmerman, secretary; F. E. Eckhart, treasurer, and executive committee, J. W. Baxter and E. T. Cochran. The committee also drafted resolutions for the league which were approved and adopted. It is the intention of the league and its many supporters that lawlessness in Auburn and Union township is to be checked and the interurban cars will be met by peace officers at Garrett, Auburn and Waterloo, and the drunks who alight therefrom will be taken into charge and vigorously prosecuted. We understand the league will be widened in its scope so that all violators of law anywhere in the county will be prosecuted.—Exchange. A similar organization should be perfected at St. Joe and Spencerville. Some of the people have been doing just as they please and it is high time it should stop.

A sprained ankle will usually disable the injured person for three or four weeks. This is due to lack of proper treatment. When Chamberlain's Liniment is applied a cure may be effected in three or four days. This liniment is one of the best and most remarkable preparations in use. Sold by H. M. Milliman, St. Joe; W. L. Wernert, Spencerville.

There is something about Christmas giving,—the thinking about others, and what they will like,—that warms the heart and makes one feel cheerful and happy and busy. That is, if the giving is done in the right way; not by bestowing useless trifles that soon degenerate into "clutter," just for the sake of giving something, nor gifts so expensive that you begrudge them, because handsome ones have been or may be given to you. Give something you believe is needed or desired by the recipient. If too much for your single purse, the spirit of the day is "combination." How, for instance, would the mother appreciate an easy chair, or a new cloak or dress, given by all of her children? Or one family might unite in giving to another a good picture, or a subscription to a magazine. Pretty china and porcelain dishes, or a chafing dish, are always acceptable, and will bring many a pleasant thought of the donor if marked, "For daily use." But the main thing is for each to be bent on making every other member of the family happy and comfortable, even down to the old horse and dog and cat and the birds that winter with you; and it will thus be sure to be a happy time, full of the true spirit of Christmas.

Believing the best of a man will in most instances incite him to do his best.

One runs no more risk in believing all he hears than he does in believing all he tells.

Somebody has been writing about the habits of cows. Well, at any rate, they haven't the tobacco or the booze habit.

Close the year hopefully. Begin the new one with a song in your heart and a girding up of the loins for greater things than you ever have done before.

Sitting around the store stove disputing the question of who found the North Pole will not contribute a single chunk toward the filling of the ice house.

It is better to be safe than sorry. The savings banks may not pay a very high rate of interest, but they are safe,—and that's more than can be said of most of the numerous "splendid opportunities" that are advertised in capital letters.

The carpenter we hired had a handy little arrangement in which to keep his bits when not in use. He had a piece of overall cloth about two feet long, folded up at one side, with pockets sewed all along about the length of a bit and of different sizes according to the diameter of the bits to be slipped into them. Then by wiping them dry and putting them into those pockets and rolling the whole thing up, he had them in good, compact shape and as snug as a bug in a rug. I thought it a pretty good idea.

To prevent pumps from freezing: Drill a small hole, say one-sixteenth of an inch or less, in pump stock,—below well or cistern cover, far enough down so that frost will not reach it. With this method (which I first used nearly forty years ago) the pump is always primed; and, in warm weather, all the water that is pumped is fresh and cool. If desirable to prevent water from vent in pump stock striking wall of well, place a tin collar around stock, just above the vent; collar should be five or six inches wide, flaring out over vent, and hang just low enough to catch the water.

The best time to break corn stubs is when it is not far from zero weather. If a good heavy pole is used, they will then snap off next the ground and will give no trouble next year, as is sometimes the case when they are poled late in the season and the weather is only moderately cold. Have a good strong pole that will reach across at least ten rows. Put a team on each end. If the pole is small at one end and large at the other, make the weight even for each team by hitching about a foot from the large end, and about four feet from the small end of the pole. If not cold enough to break the stubs all off, first pole all the stalks down one way, then turn and pole them back again. This will bring them all down.

An automobile, said to have been driven by Dr. Shook, of Spencerville, smashed into and completely wrecked a rig in which three young women, Pauline, Minnie and Emma Harmeyer were riding. The young women were thrown into the road, sustaining some painful bruises, while the buggy was completely wrecked. The horse broke loose and ran away, but was later caught. The smashup occurred shortly after 10 o'clock on the Leo road about a mile north of the city. Mr. Harmeyer, who is a farmer residing in Washington township, declares that he will sue the doctor for damages unless the autoist settles for the buggy and the injuries sustained by his daughters.—Wednesday's Fort Wayne News. Dr. Shook is a careful driver and if it was his fault that the accident occured he will settle the matter without a suit.

Get that cap for winter at Beams & Co's., store. A new line for men and boys.

Following the Fashion.

Many women, and men as well, are disturbed if they feel that the clothes they wear are in the slightest particular obsolete. They cannot buy a pocket handkerchief without the anxious inquiry whether it is what everybody else is wearing, or purchase a shoestring without critical scrutiny and comparison. Not merely in clothes is the fashion followed, but in social diversions. One game gives place to another, one popular ballad with a whistleable refrain ousts its forerunner completely; no sooner is a tune learned than it is gone like the snows of yesterday. Books suffer the same incessant vicissitudes of the favor of "Fortune in men's eyes." In most things it does not matter if there is a continual cycle of changes. It is only when it comes to our beliefs and our opinions that it is not well to try to keep pace with the vagaries and eccentricities of fashion.

A NURSE'S EXPERIENCE

Is a Good Guide for Any Person Who Does Not Understand Kidney Troubles.

A nurse has to know just what to do for common ailments, and those who suffer backache, languor and other common signs of kidney trouble, should heed the example of Mrs. Judson Ellis, 414 Francis St., Jackson, Mich., known for many years prior to her marriage as "Nurse Baker."

"My back ached a good deal and was lame and weak, so that I had difficulty in straightening up or turning in bed," said she. "Doan's Kidney Pills benefited me wonderfully, and since using them I have been able to do my own work again."

Remember the name—Doan's. Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Felt the Home Incomplete.

The editor of one of the leading magazines of New York has a viewpoint which often cheers his friends. His social affairs are such that on some occasions he and his wife dine in the homes of sumptuous wealth, while on other occasions they partake of chafing dish spreads in the candle-lighted studios of artists more or less struggling.

Not long since they dined with a family where the evidences of wealth were numerous. Among them was a platter of rare and costly porcelain. Mrs. Editor was enthusiastic over the beauty of it and its priceless antiquity, and the hostess called attention to the fact that it had been broken many times and that the pieces were riveted together with gold. In fact, she had a servant pass it around for examination to show how badly it had, on different occasions, been shattered, and how, on the back, it showed a mass of gold rivets.

The next morning, when the editor came to his own breakfast table, he appeared to be in a chastened, not to say, depressed, frame of mind. Mrs. Editor inquired the cause.

"Yes," he mused, reflectively, looking around on the dainty table and at the neat little apartment. "Yes, it is a comfortable and well-kept little home, but so —ah — my dear — so sort of unriveted."

Spoiling the Show.

Showman—I don't know as we can give any kind of a show this afternoon.

Assistant—What's the matter?

Showman—That fresh kid's been in the cage of the man eating lion having a romp, and the critter is as playful as a kitten, the farmer we rented the sacred cow from India from says the money ain't payin' him for the loss of his milk route, and the wild man of Borneo says he's got to have a day off to register and see the police parade.—Baltimore American.

SECRET WORKER.

The Plan Upon Which Coffee Operates.

Coffee is such a secret worker that it is not suspected as the cause of sickness or disease, but here is a very sure way to find out the truth.

A lady in Memphis gives an interesting experience her husband had with coffee. It seems that he had been using it for some time and was an invalid.

The physician in charge shrewdly suspected that coffee was the "Worm at the root of the tree," and ordered it discontinued with instructions to use Postum regularly in its place.

The wife says: "We found that was the true remedy for his stomach and heart trouble and we would have gladly paid a hundred times the amount of the doctor's charge when we found how wise his judgment was.

"The use of Postum instead of coffee was begun about a year ago, and it has made my husband a strong, well man. He has gained thirty-five pounds in that time and his stomach and heart trouble have all disappeared.

"The first time I prepared it I did not boil it long enough, and he said there was something wrong with it. Sure enough, it did taste very flat, but the next morning I followed directions carefully, boiling it for fifteen minutes, and he remarked 'this is better than any of the old coffee.'

"We use Postum regularly and never tire of telling our friends of the benefit we have received from leaving off coffee."

Look for the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

"SEND ME."

Not mine to mount to courts where seraphs sing,
Or glad archangels soar on outstretched wing;
Not mine in union with celestial choirs
To sound heaven's trump, or strike the gentler wires;
Not mine to stand enrolled at crystal gates,
Where Michael thunders or where Uriel waits.
But lesser worlds a father's kindness know;
Be mine some simple service here below—
To weep with those who weep, their joys to share,
Their pain to solace or their burdens bear;
Some widow in her agony to meet;
Some exile in his new-found home to greet;
To serve some child of Thine, and so serve Thee—
Lo, here am I! To such a work send me!

—Edward Everett Hale.

...A Crimson Elopement...

"I cheerfully admit that it is annoying," said the dean of the department, "so annoying that my admission is the only cheerful thing about it. But your son is now of age, and as, during the last four years of his minority, you supplied him with enough money to light his cigarettes with Elzevirs, I can't see—upon my soul, Mr. Ferris, I can't see—how you can blame a college which is in Boston if the boy chooses to buy diamond necklaces for a chorus girl who is in New York."

The stout, chop-whiskered parent from Chicago held up a fat, white hand of protest.

"I put Jim in your charge," he said. "And you gave him money enough to be independent of every one," concluded the dean. "Oh, I don't mean," he explained, "that the boy neglected his work. If he had done that, or if it had come to our notice that he was leading a riotous life, he would, in the natural course of events, have been returned to you long before this. I only wish now that he had been. But so far as any of us could see, his conduct was above reproach, and that is, just what makes his present position so—so surprising."

"Well, but he is not stopping at buying diamonds. He's had the impudence, so his roommate writes me, to propose to marry the woman."

"Really? I am sorry to hear it, but the fact doesn't alter my opinion. Personally, Mr. Ferris, I am willing to do all that I can for you, but as the lad graduated last spring, and as, a week ago, he voluntarily severed his connection with the graduate-school, I must insist that the university is no longer in any wise responsible."

"I don't care who's responsible," declared Mr. Ferris, "so long as I can keep my son from marrying a music hall singer!" With which remark he bounced out of the office and boarded a car for his downtown hotel.

Meanwhile, in a typical study not a thousand yards from where he had been talking, a distressingly somber couple—a tall, broad-shouldered, blonde lad and a slip of a dark-eyed girl—were clasping hands across a flat-topped desk and looking long into each other's somewhat frightened face.

"I really believe you're sorry," said the boy in a thoroughly masculine endeavor to conceal his own weakness by accusing his comrade.

But his comrade was not so to be cornered.

"You know I'm not Jim," she reproachfully replied. "Only——"

"Only what?"

He pressed her hand encouragingly, and with that pressure her face cleared.

"Only nothing," she laughed up at him.

He bent far across the desk to kiss her, brushing aside a neglected volume on petrography that fell with a regretful thud to the floor.

"But it is a risky thing," she added. "'Was,' not 'is.'" Jim stoutly corrected. "I can make it all right now in fifteen minutes, and there is only one thing in the whole day that I am going to regret."

"What's that?" she asked with puckered brow.

"That it has all probably to be spoiled by having to sit out in the stadium and watch Yale win."

"But you forgot that I'm a Yale girl."

"Impossible," he declared. "Your gown is not blue and"—he sprang around the table and caught her in his arms—"your cheeks are crimson."

She struggled vainly.

"I should think they would be now," she pouted. "But then I wish you were playing this year."

"Because?"

"Because then Harvard would win."

"Hurrah for the Yale girl! I didn't do such wonders last year. But this is a conversion with a vengeance. Would you really rather have us win than have me with you?"

"That's not a fair question. And it's almost time we were starting for the field. There, now! Please don't any more. Just suppose somebody'd come!"

"They're all too wrapped up in the game. But who cares, anyhow?"

Evidently he did not, for he persisted in the forbidden caresses until brought to a sudden halt by a knocking at the door.

"There!" she gasped in a loud whisper. "I knew it! Oh, I knew it! What shall I do, Jim? Quick!"

Jim's own presence of mind was somewhat disturbed. He looked about, a trifle at a loss. Then——

"If you don't mind," he incoherently began in the same startled voice, "in there's where I bunk, back of those curtains. It's rather musty—"

Again the knock.

"Oh, I don't mind anything!" wailed the girl. "Only hurry!"

With one stride Jim slipped her behind the portieres, speedily drew them together, and with another stepped to the door, opened it and confronted his father.

Mr. Ferris banged the door behind him, took two steps into the room and looked carefully about before he paid any attention to the too demonstrative greeting of his son and heir. Then he shook hands as stiffly as possible. He had evidently been moving faster than was his wont and he puffed loudly as he sank into a chair directly facing the still swaying curtains.

"I got your wire at my hotel," he said.

"When?" asked James in a painful effort to gain time.

The elder Ferris pulled out a great gold watch.

"Sixteen minutes ago," he replied. "Why do you ask? Didn't you expect me?"

"No—that is——"

"Why, what else did you think I'd do?"

"Oh, of course, I expected you, father, and, of course, I'm awfully glad you've come. Oh, I'm delighted to see you! But I—the fact is, I didn't expect you quite so soon; not just quite so soon, you see."

"Well, I came to this town a day earlier than I expected, and now I'm ready to hear what you've got to say for yourself."

He settled back in his chair, looking like a judge who, after an expected verdict, has just asked the prisoner whether he has any adequate reason to advance against the pronouncing of sentence.

Jim fidgeted with some papers on the desk.

"Well, well!" cried the father.

"I don't think I quite understand you," James submitted.

"Oh, yes, you do!" snapped Mr. Ferris. "You're over twenty-one, and I suppose you've some little sense left. Here I write to you, telling you that your roommate's appealed to me to save you from marrying a—a——"

He hesitated, and a flush of pride saved Jim's savior faire.

"Be careful, sir!" he cried.

"A chorus girl," the father continued. "I write you that, I say, and I get no answer. Then, when I'm nearly wild, I come a day earlier, find at my hotel your telegram saying that if I want to see you before you're married, I'd better come out at once; and now you say you don't understand me!"

"Well, sir?"

"'Well, sir!' Is that the way you talk to your father? Look here, Jim," the elder man went on in a tone that softened not a little, "you know you've got me caught. When a son gets to know his power over his father, heaven help the old man! But I've been a pretty good sort to you all along, haven't I?"

"Yes," he admitted, "barring one thing."

"We'll come to that later on—that one thing. But I have been a good sort, haven't I?"

Jim cast a furtive, fearful glance at the curtain, and then nodded.

"I've given you nearly everything you wanted—nearly?"

"Yes."

"I've always tried to do my best for you—what I considered my best, even if it differed from your opinion of what was good?"

LOOKING LONG INTO EACH OTHER'S FRIGHTENED FACE.

"Yes."

"And I mostly saw to it that it didn't differ too often. The dean even says I gave you too much money. But, at any rate, I hardly ever crossed you, and even when I thought you'd better join the firm last spring I gave in and let you come on here in September for that post-graduate course?"

"Yes."

"Then don't you think I've some right to ask you not to marry this—this woman?"

Again the undecided look at the curtain.

"You asked me not to marry once before."

"Oh, I'm coming to that. See here, you're well-to-do in your own right, but it's a sum that, with your bringing up, wouldn't last you five years. You're my sole heir—you know what that means—but, by thunder, if you marry this woman, I'll cut you off without another cent—I will, so help me!"

The elder man brought down a huge fist upon the desk; but Jim gathered courage from the curtains.

"What would you think of a man," he slowly and distinctly asked, "who gave up a woman he had told he loved for a threat like that? Candidly, now, what would you think of him?"

As Mr. Ferris, Sr., would probably have put it, his bluff was called.

"Oh, hang it, Jim!" he said in a voice that trembled, "you've got me by the neck, and you know it. Is it fair? Look here, I say; a year ago I foolishly objected to your proposal of a long engagement to Bet Burton. You talked back, and I lost my temper with you for the first time in my life. I said you should never marry her. Then I was sorry, for I liked the girl, though I thought you both too young. But I was too stubborn to back down or show that I was sorry—and this is what I get for it. Well, I say I'm sorry now. Jim, you swore you loved that girl. Is that all over so soon? If not, in heaven's name, marry her now with my blessing! Only drop this chorus girl and marry Bet Burton for all of me to-morrow!"

But Jim's mouth straightened.

"It's too late," he said grimly, looking again, and with added nervousness towards the curtain.

"Too late?" shouted the father. "Do you mean to say? What are you looking at those curtains for? What have you got in that room? Jim, there's somebody there. Don't lie to me. There's a woman there!"

Both men had sprung to their feet when the portieres parted and Jim stepped forward to take the hand of the flushed and trembling little girl with the big, dark eyes.

"Father," he said, "you'll have to forgive that chorus girl game. There never was a chorus girl."

But the older man, though vaguely smiling, was too thunderstruck clearly to understand.

"And this," he managed, however, to cry, "is little Bet Burton!"

"This," corrected his son, "is Mrs. James Ferris."—Elmira Telegram.

Telling Age of a Fish.

The age of a fish can be determined with accuracy by inspection of the otoliths or bony concretions which are found in the auditory apparatus. These otoliths increase in size during the entire life of the fish, each year adding two others, a light colored layer formed in summer and a dark layer formed in autumn and winter.

The alternate layers are sharply contrasted and very distinct, so that there is no difficulty in counting them. The number of pairs of layers is equal to the number of years the fish has lived. By this method Wallace has made an interesting study of the distribution of fishes of the plaice species over various sea bottoms, according to age. In this way the rapidity of growth of fishes and the effect of fisheries on the population of the sea can be determined.—Scientific American.

"Ma," cried Dot, "my button-shoes are hurting me." "Why, child, no wonder," exclaimed Ma; "you put them on the wrong feet!" Dot looked puzzled; then said: "What will I do, ma? They are all the feet I got."

"I can't do this example," pouted John. "You can do anything you want to do," replied his pa. "Even water may be carried in a sieve, if you only wait." "How long must I wait?" asked John. "Till it freezes," coolly answered Pa.

"John," she said, "don't you think this talk about trial marriages is just horrid?" "Oh, I dunno." "Why, you don't believe in them yourself, do you?" "Have to. If there's any marriage that ain't a trial, you just show me."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Young Lady—Give me one yard of —why, haven't I seen you before? Draper's Assistant—Oh, Maud, have you forgotten me? I saved your life at the seaside last summer! Young Lady (warmly)—Why, of course you did. Then you may give me two yards of the ribbon, please.

One day Elsie's mother sent her to find a switch with which to chastise her little brother, who had been teasing her. After a time she returned with a dozen or more pebbles in her apron. "I couldn't find any switch, mamma," she explained, "but you can throw these rocks at him."

"Have you ever noticed," began the bald gentleman, who liked to entertain the people gathered in his corner of the hotel piazza, "that little men invariably marry large women?" "It may be so," murmured a mild-eyed fellow guest, "but I had always supposed that it was the other way about —that the large women married the small men."

He was poor, but otherwise honest, and he had just proposed to the heiress. "Are you sure," she queried after the manner of her kind, "that you do not want to marry me for my money?" "Of course I don't," he replied. "I am anxious to marry you because I haven't the heart to let you become an old maid merely because you happen to have a paltry half million."—The Wasp.

The "actors" that Lionel knows most about are the sort that do lofty feats in the circus. He has a proper appreciation of the danger of their calling and the means adopted for their safety. Recently, declares a writer in the Buffalo Express, he heard his father mention the name of Sir Henry Irving.

"Who is Sir Henry Irving, father?" asked Lionel.

"He was a great actor," said the father.

"What show is he with?"

"He isn't with any show now. He's dead."

"What happened? Did he miss the net?"

"Yes, papa," she answered, sweetly. "It is candleless because times are hard. Lights cost so much Ferdinand and I said we would get along with the starlight."

And papa turned about in speechless amazement and tried to walk out of the room through a panel in the wall paper.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by the inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

The shouting continues until the candle burns out, and the last bid before it flickers its last is the one that takes the cake. WESTERN CANADA

Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, says:—

"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue."

Senator Dolliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land hunger in the hearts of English speaking people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with its Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tens of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 70,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Field crop returns alone during year added to the wealth of the country upwards of

TORE HIS SKIN OFF

In Shreds—Itching Was Intense—Sleep Was Often Impossible—Cured by Cuticura in 8 Weeks.

"At first an eruption of small pustules commenced on my hands. These spread later to other parts of my body, and the itching at times was intense, so much so that I literally tore the skin off in shreds in seeking relief. The awful itching interfered with my work considerably, and also kept me awake nights. I tried several doctors and used a number of different ointments and lotions, but received practically no benefit. Finally I settled down to the use of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills, with the result that in a few days all itching had ceased and in about three weeks' time all traces of my eruption had disappeared. I have had no trouble of this kind since. H. A. Krutskoff, 5714 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., November 18 and 28, 1907."

THE POPULAR PULPIT

TRUE CAUSE OF THANKSGIVING

By Rev. Percy Trafford Olton.

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits."—Psalms 103: 2.

One of the frequent causes of our failure to have the thankful spirit is forgetfulness of past benefits. Concerning the past the majority of people try either to forget it altogether or they try to live in it altogether. Both are equally wrong. It is not intended that we should live only to forget, nor is it meant that we should live only to remember.

The past is a book in which we record the experiences of our journey and to which we can refer for guidance and comfort as we press on through the unknown future. And when the day's travel happens to be through a barren and cheerless country, we should be able to turn to those pages which record days of great blessing when we were passing through a land flowing with milk and honey.

But we are so apt to forget the benefits of the past. When we come to the end of a day's journey and sit down to enter its experience how readily do we record the disagreeable things—the disappointments, the vexations, the crosses that have been met with. Somebody has passed us traveling in ease and luxury while we tramped on foot; somebody has spoken an unkind word or has done us an injury; somebody has gone by that day with head erect and smiling face, while we staggered under the burden of a heavy cross, with the pain of a great sorrow cutting like a knife into our soul, and we pour out the bitterness of our life on the pages of our book of memory.

All that has not been as we would like is carefully entered, and as we sit there and turn over the pages of the book we find entries similar to the one we have just made—records of trials and disappointments and hardships—and reading them it seems as if there was no other soul in the wide world whose lot could be more cheerless and desolate than ours.

We have no long of praise, for there is no melody in our hearts; we cannot say "Bless the Lord, O my soul," for we feel that for us there is no special reason for thanksgiving. Why is it thus? It is because we have forgotten to make notes of the benefits.

Oh, the patience and long suffering of God! Truly, He can say of us as He said concerning the children of Israel: "How long will this people provoke Me, and how long will it be ere they believe Me for all the signs which I have showed unto them?"

He has led us step by step through the wilderness; He has provided for our every need, and yet we are constantly doubting His wisdom and goodness; we will not call to remembrance His unfailing providence.

Let us look back and see how great and manifold have been the blessings. There is no child of God who has not abundant reason to thank God for past benefits. If we will but look over the past and count up some of the innumerable blessings a great wave of praise and thanksgiving will sweep over our souls, and out of overflowing hearts there will burst forth the song of the psalmist of old: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless His holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits."

PEERING INTO THE FUTURE.

By Rev. P. A. Halpin.

Their angels always see the face of my Father who is in heaven.—Matt. 18:10.

Always, and not less now, men, consciously or unconsciously, have turned inquiring glances toward that other world where the Deity reigns and His cohorts deploy their activity in His service.

This curiosity has never been shaken off. It is an inheritance of our nature, and, be he religious or irreligious, everyone is helpless against its resistless fascination. It is all no weak proof that this haunting desire springs from the fact that we have not been made for this world, but are destined, thanks to the gracious God therefor, for a goal higher and more lasting.

Men run in vain solicitings to science and to uncredentialed oracles for some utterance to satisfy this restless, chafing curiosity, when, with Bible in hand, every reverential Christian may in prayerful meditation learn all that it behooves to know, and more than frustrated attempts or blatant charlatanry can ever reveal.

Innumerable passages in Holy Writ give the story of that supramundane sphere. Therein is recounted the rebellion against the omnipotent, the defeat, the punishment of the guilty and the reward unspeakable to those who were treason proof. We read of the unseen stairs the angels are climbing and descending with messages from God to man and with praise and thanksgiving and prayers from man to God.

The Son of Man in His eternity saw Satan and his minions fall like lightning from heaven. There is flashed upon us that region with its two kingdoms, the kingdom of light and the kingdom of darkness. In one the powers are set against God and all that is godly. The powers on the other are champions of the right of the Divinity, and protectors of all who rely upon their succor. God's commands are being executed with more than aerial swiftness, and no mortal is unsafe, save the one who refuses the blessed ministrations of those who were faithful from the dawn of time.

If the child has his angel, how much more certainly has the man, for the man needs him more.

There are angels for all, for the child, the man, the family, the State, the church, and they always see "My Father's face."

Much and everything needful does Scripture tell us. Its pages are vocal with the melody of the rustling of angel wings. In fact, the uplifting and helpful story is narrated in its entirety, as those spirits energize in those last stretches of duration from the angel of the flaming sword to the bright one who came to John and unveiled all the glories of the New Jerusalem. There is no story, save that of Him crucified, more satisfying, more consoling, more invigorating. Why search elsewhere than in Scripture?

As early as Deuteronomy the world was warned against trifling with those realms so near and yet so far away. "Neither let there be found one among you that seeketh the truth from the dead. For the Lord abhorreth all such things."—Deut. 18:12.

The attitude the Scriptures urge is so simple, so sublime. That attitude is one of prayer and worship. Such an attitude takes so much away from the loneliness of our pilgrimage. Wait, and be contrite and humble, and our angels, when the summons sounds, will lift us gently from our couch of death and place us in the arms of the loving Father, whose face they always see.

HYMNS AND THEIR AUTHORS

FOLLOW ME.

By Mrs. Cecil F. Alexander.

[Mrs. Cecil Frances Alexander, author of "Once in Royal David's City" and "There Is a Green Hill Far Away," as well as many other hymns for children, has written in this hymn one that has become especially popular with young people's societies. Mrs. Alexander wrote this for "Church Hymns," a collection published in 1852.]

Jesus calls us o'er the tumult
Of our life's wild, restless sea;
Day by day his sweet voice soundeth,
Saying, Christian, follow me!

As of old apostles heard it
By the Galilean lake,
Turned from home and toil and kindred,
Leaving all for his dear sake.

Jesus calls us—from the worship
Of the vain world's golden store;
From each idol that would keep us
Saying, Christian, love me more!

In our joys and in our sorrows,
Days of toil and hours of ease,
Still he calls, in cares and pleasure—
Christian, love me more than these!

Jesus calls us! by thy mercies
Savior, may we hear thy call;
Give our hearts to thy obedience,
Serve and love thee best of all!

SERMONETTES.

A hoe is the best prayer against weeds.

Oily people make most of life's friction.

The larger the soul, the simpler the life.

No city is greater than its character ideals.

A good many opinions rise in the stomach.

Humanity gives in love what we render in faith.

My own faults are failings; my neighbor's are vices.

Many people mistake their won't power for their will power.

To think a good thought twice is a long step toward a good habit.

Some men never believe in a square deal until they get a poor hand.

Some never let their light shine except through an advertising sign.

Most of our irritability comes from hunting the rough places in the road.

That is a dangerous religion which would not be known but for its label.

No amusement can be healthy that does not give us a better heart for living.

Much so-called religious effort is an attempt to make others feel as bad as we do.

If your virtues are writ in heaven they will be visible on earth without a telescope.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't forget that the life that helps those nearest reaches farthest.

Don't expect power to enjoy a blessing if you have no time to be grateful.

Don't fail to take care of leisure if you would have your life take care of itself.

Don't allow your religion to think only about going up, lest it turn out to be all hot air.

Don't dream of your heavenly home if your home is not made more heavenly by your faith.

Don't forget that success depends not on what a man makes, but what success makes of him.

A SURE WAY OUT

QUICK RELIEF

It Is a Positive Fact That in Not One Out of a Thousand of Supposed Kidney Cases Does the Trouble Really Lie with the Kidneys.

Practically all the so-called Kidney trouble is in reality Bladder Trouble. Although sometimes intensely painful, and always annoying, it may be easily and quickly cured with GOLD MEDAL HAARLEM OIL CAPSULES.

There are other troubles arising in organs connected with the Bladder which are also quickly relieved by the use of GOLD MEDAL HAARLEM OIL CAPSULES. Full information is given in the printed matter enclosed in each box.

The Bladder is the receptacle for discharges from the Kidneys. Under normal conditions nature disposes of the contents of this reservoir (the Bladder) promptly and without pain. Once inflammation sets in, however, the contents may be retained for an unusual length of time, thus producing much pain and discomfort, or may be expelled with abnormal frequency and be the cause of much inconvenience and trouble. All of this may be relieved and finally cured by the use of GOLD MEDAL HAARLEM OIL CAPSULES.

GOLD MEDAL HAARLEM OIL is put up in two forms, in CAPSULES and BOTTLES. Capsules 25c. and 50c. per box. Bottles, 18c. and 35c. At all druggists. Be sure that you obtain the Gold Medal Tilly brand, otherwise you will get an imitation. Literature free.

H. MILLIMAN'S DRUG STORE

From M T Bishop

Ashville, N. C., 11—30—'09

Editor St. Joe News.

Dear Sir and Friends:—

I think in my last letter I promised to write you more fully about the Vanderbilt Estate. We visited the estate today and surely it is a great place. No money has been spared to make it fine in every respect. His house or castle, stands up high and three or four miles from the entrance to his estate, and no other buildings near it. Then about three miles farther is his dairy with 125 fine imported Jersey cows, all tied up in clean stalls, with their name, pedigree and age tacked up in front of each one. All the milk that is not used for ice cream is brought to the city and sold for 11 cents per quart.

Then he has a hennery about one mile farther on with a capacity of 2,000 chickens of the purest stock obtainable, but has sold off most of them just now. Plymouth Rocks and Leghorns are the varieties kept. Mr. Vanderbilt has done much in the way of plants and flowers. He has scoured the world for rare shrubs, plants, flowers, etc., and has experimented with them to the benefit and advantage of America. In Forestry he has done much good work. Mr. Pinchot, the present government forestry official got his first experiment here with Mr. Vanderbilt. He has a landscape gaidener at work the year around. All the estate interested me very much and thought it might interest you. You may be sure that I would be interested in prohibition law which is in force in this state. As far as I can learn all are well pleased with it and would not change if they could. I have not seen a person since I came down here that I thought was using liquor. Prohibition is a success in this state sure.

I think the churches down here are all doing a good work, wide awake and full of zeal for the master, and I believe a greater per cent of the people are church people than those of the north. The Salvation Army is strong in this place. They fed about 300 poor children for Thanksgiving dinner free. We went and seen them at the tables eating, and to me it was a pleasant sight to see. They all had their apetites with them. The weather has been very fine here, the sun has shone every day. Cool nights but warm days, good fresh mountain air all the time and we like it here very much. Regards to all.

Yours Truly,

Mr. and Mrs. M. T. Bishop.

The following article was taken from the Youth's Companion which will give you an idea of the vastness of the forest:

Forestry methods of the most approved sort are applied to the great Vanderbilt estate at Biltmore, North Carolina. From the ten thousand acres of woodland are taken annually four million feet of lumber, five thousand cords of tannic acid wood and fuel, a thousand cords of tan-bark, and considerable quantities of pulp-wood. Yet the forest, far from being injured, increases in value every year. What a blessing it would be if more owners of timber-land were content to regard their property as a permanent investment, and not an opportunity to "get rich quick" at the expense of the future of the land!

TOWNSHIP LINE

John Means sold to the town of Auburn last week 1,700 strawberry plants he has now sold nearly 10,000 plants.....John Shilling, wife and daughter and John Means and wife took dinner with Geary Wasson and wife Sunday .....We understand that Frank Henderson will move his family to Michigan this week....Burt Rhoads is moving on the Hatfley farm, he is pretty busy now....Grace Houk is with her aunt, Mrs. Ira Wingard, visiting..... The selection for Supervisor has developed in the wet and dry question. Boys stop this nonsence, put a good man in that will take interest in the roads, what is the difference so he is a good man for the place.

Word has reached Auburn that Jesse Dancer died at his home in Nebraska on Thursday night, and that the remains would reach here on Sunday evening. His father, Frank Dancer, went to the son's bedside about a week ago, hearing that the son was ill. He wrote a letter back stating that the young man was better and it had hardly reached here when a telegram arrived bearing the sad news that he was dead. The remains were brought to the home of his parents northeast of the city at 4 o'clock this morning.—Monday's Dispatch. He was a grandson of Grandma Squires near here.

Found Dead in Bed

There arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chapman on Aug. 12 1909, a little guest, Virginia J. Chapman as a little dewdrop of the early spring, this little babe came to bind father and mother's heart closer together by its presence. For some unknown reason, we shall understand in the better land, little Virginia was suddenly taken from this life on the early morn of Dec. 8, 1909, at the age of 3 mo. 27 days. As the morn broke forth for another day, so the little soul broke forth from its moorings and entered upon the day where no night intervenes. This little one with but a short stay had crept into many hearts. Is there anything so innocent, so lovely, so sweet and mild, as the budding thought, the unrained soul, of a tender little child. Besides the father and mother who weep and mourn their loss, there is a very large number of relatives also. Funeral preached at the home of its parents by Rev. D. A. J. Brown.

Genuine Small-pox

On Saturday, November 27th., Merritt Walter, who had been working as hotel clerk at Angola, came home by request of a physician at the above named place, as he had been exposed to small-pox. He was immediately vaccinated, and it seemed to work fairly well but the case was too far gone. He had been keeping himself close to the house and Dr. Bowman was called Saturday morning and pronounced it genuine small-pox. Great precaution will be taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

Will Cut it Out

Frank D. Fanning, M. M. Acker, A. A. Kramer, L. H. Harrison and C. J. Horton, Butler physicians, have issued a statement to the public to the effect that they will write no more prescriptions for spiritous and malt liquors and they ask their friends not to request the favor of them.

A Surprise

A pleasant surprise was given at the home of Abe Mason on Saturday evening, in honor of their neice, Miss Myrtle Platter, it being her eighteenth birthday. When Miss Platter returned from Spencerville where she is working, to Mr. Mason's where she is making her home, she found a crowd of young people gathered there, it was a complete surprise. The evening was spent in playing games and other amusements that go to make up a pleasant time. A supper was served and in the birthday cake was placed a penny. The amusement of this was that Miss Mel: Myers, the young lady that found the penny, had to pay a forfeit to Miss Platter's gentleman friend, Mr. Bair, but if a gentleman should have found it, Miss Platter would have received the honor. At a late hour they departed reporting a jolly good time and leaving presents and good wishes for many more happy birthdays. Those present were were: Messrs Henry Mason, Jay Mitchner, Earl Stineman, Curt Wastler, Forest Farver, Charley Bratton, Ray and Floyd Farver, Ray Means, Jay Fales, Ross Bair, Devon Mason and a bashful boy from Auburn whose name was not learned, and the Misses Arra Astry, Viola Schoncia, Ella Dix, Viplet Hay, Esta Farver, Mable Provines, Mary Mac, Grace McCan, Mell Myers, Mable Mason, Georgia Mason, Mr. and Mrs. A. R Mason and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Wann and family. Mr. Sleet was also there to spoil the fun but he was kept out to keep Mr. Wind company.

Walnuts Selling at $1.00 Per Bushel

Did it ever strike you that it would be a good investment for the farmer to plant Walnut and Hickory trees along the roadsides, around his dwelling and orchard? Some have already done this and are well pleased with the results. The nuts themselves are a paying crop. Then there is the shade which is grateful to the stock in the field, and to the horses and men on the road. To travel in the shade on a hot sunny day or to be protected from the strong winter wind by trees is a great benefit to the traveling public. Every one in his heart says what a good man is he who planted the trees. Then the trees are rapidly growing into timber. True the tree takes some substance from the field, but it gets one half from the roadside so the owner is paying for only one half of the raising of the tree. In thirty or forty years a row of Walnut trees along the roadside would be worth far more than the additional amount of grain that could have been grown without the trees. This row of trees makes a farm more valuable and the nut crop will be a steady income.

This fall count how many trees you can plant. Take four times as many hulled nuts, lay them on the ground in a layer in a dry place in your garden, cover them up with a layer of sand, or sand and dirt to a depth of about two inches. Next spring carefully uncover them, and take the sprouted nuts and plant them. Dig a hole deep and of good dimensions in order to give the tree loose dirt to grow in. Occasionally hoe them during the summer. Better protect them from the stock and plowman Each year prune them up to a switch until you get a trunk of twelve feet or more, which will make a good log length when cut. Any additional information will be furnished if you will address the State Forester, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Taken to Hospital

Wm. Rhoads, who lives east of Spencerville, was hurriedly taken to the hospital at Wayne last Monday evening, by Dr. Shook. He was taken seriously ill with bowel trouble and the physician advised that he be taken where immediate relief can be given. Word was received from Wayne Tuesday morning that he was no better and the physician stated that his heart was not in condition to stand an operation. While his condition is serious it is thought that the only means of relief will be by operation.

Had Paralytic Stroke

W. C. Patterson, cashier of the St. Joe Valley Bank, was the victim of a severe stroke of paralysis on last Wednesday evening. After supper Mr. Patterson had performed his usual duty of closing the bank and about seven o'clock he went home to fix his furnace fire for the night. While doing this he was stricked down with a severe stroke of paralysis on his left side. He had made his way to the stairway and was unable to get up them and when Mrs. Patterson had returned from the L. L. C. meeting she heard a noise and began to investigate, when he was found in this condition. Help was summoned. His condition is improving and it is hoped that he may speedily recover. He is able to move his arm and limb some and talks fairly well. The entire community was shocked to hear of the sad news as there was no indications and Mr. Patterson was enjoying the best of health.

Archie Evans Dies.

Archie Evans, nineteen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Al Evans, is at the point of death at the Sacred Heart hospital at Garrett.

LATER. The report is that Archie died at 8:00 o'clock Monday morning at the hospital. The real cause of his death was due to him receiving internal injuries by falling from a moving train about two years ago in the Garrett yards. The funeral services were held from the late residence yesterday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock. Interment in the Union cemetery, north of Garrett. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Al Evans, former residents of St. Joe. The parents have the sympathy of their many friends here.

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Train Strikes Street Car.

Thirty-five passengers on a street car in Indianapolis, Ind., were injured, none fatally, and few seriously, when the car was struck by an in-bound Pennsylvania passenger train at the South street crossing and hurled thirty feet. The car fell on a cement sidewalk and lay across the track but the engineer stopped his train before hitting it a second time. Most of those hurt were injured in the panic which followed the crash. Windows were broken and the passengers climbed from the overturned car. Many were unceremoniously sent sprawling to the ground by the sturggling mass of humanity beneath them. Eleven of the injured passengers were taken to St. Vincent's hospital near the scene of the wreck. They are said to be suffering more from the nervous shock than from their wounds.

Chicago May be Schoepf Goal.

It is rumored that in case the Ohio Electric is successful in buying the Toledo and Indiana, the road running from Toledo to Bryan, it will be extended to Chicago, and the Lima-Defiance division, now being electrified, will be extended to connect with it at Bryan, giving the Ohio Electric direct lines both from Central Ohio and from Toledo to Chicago. It is also said that negotiations are on between the Ohio Electric and the Defiance Street Railway Company for the purchase of the local street railway line by the Ohio Electric as a means of entrance to the business portion of the city.

Indianapolis Has $110,000 Blaze.

Fire that started in the building of the Central Rubber and Supply Company, at 229 South Meridian street, threatened to destroy a block in the wholesale district of Indianapolis, Ind. Firemen, laboring in the first zero weather of the winter, succeeded in checking the flames after the fire had damaged property to the extent of $110,000. The building and stock of the Central Rubber and Supply Company suffered a loss of $100,000. The stock of James R. Ross & Co., liquor dealers, was damaged $10,000.

Steamer Burns in Lake Erie.

A steamer was reported to be on fire in Lake Erie, about five miles off southeast shoal. The burning vessel is believed to be the 1,700 ton anchor line freight steamer Clarion, of Buffalo, N. Y., which left Detroit, Mich., for Erie, Pa., although she has not yet been positively identified. The Clarion carried a crew of eighteen or twenty men. So far as known there were no passengers aboard. The report of the fire was contained in a wireless message from the steamer H. P. Bope.

Wabash Train Wrecked in Detroit.

Wabash passenger train No. 52 struck an open switch in the Belleville yards, twenty-five miles southwest of Detroit, Mich., and the entire train was wrecked. Engineer F. M. Richardson, of Detroit, received injuries which are thought fatal. E. G. Bastedo, a passenger, was badly hurt but his condition is not thought serious. Several other passengers sustained minor injuries. The train was running about twenty-five miles an hour.

Many Killed by Explosion.

A dispatch from Hamburg, Germany, says: The explosion of two gas tanks in the so-called "Kleines Grasbrook," on the Elbe front, was followed by an extensive fire and the loss of many lives. Ten men are reported dead and seventeen missing. It is almost certain that all of these are dead. Forty men were dangerously injured, of whom several cannot recover.

Blaze at Kalamazoo, Mich.

Fire broke out at Kalamazoo, Mich., in the basement of the Star Bargain House, adjoining the Burdick House. All of the guests of the hotel were driven from the building by smoke. Aid was solicited from Battle Creek. Several firemen were overcome by smoke but no lives were lost. The loss may exceed $100,000.

Retired Army Officer Hurt.

Major William P. Gould, aged 81, retired paymaster of the United States army and one of the best known citizens of Vincennes, Ind., was probably fatally injured by the explosion of gas in the furnace of his house.

Farm Hand Frozen to Death.

Harvey Trush, aged 50 years, a farm hand, was found frozen to death in a hut near Prospect, a village near Marion, Ohio.

CONGRESS IN SESSION; SOLONS GATHER EARLY

Galleries of House and Senate Crowded Before Sessions Are Called to Order.

A BIG GRIST OF BILLS PUT IN

Proceedings Perfunctory, as Adjournment Out of Respect to Dead Member Is Taken.

Crowded galleries, representing official and social life in Washington, witnessed the commencement of the regular session of the Sixty-first Congress Monday. At noon, when both houses convened, there was a full attendance of members. On the floor of both houses a renewal of friendships among among Senators and Representatives took the place of interchanges on partisan or political matters. Early in the day it was evident that when Vice President Sherman in the Senate and Speaker Cannon in the house should bring down their gavels they would face full houses.

The procedure followed on the first day was similar to that which has characterized every opening of Congress. A great mass of bills was introduced by representatives by the simple act of being deposited in the receptacle provided for their reception. Senators waited until Tuesday before laying before their body the new measures they propose to push during the coming months.

The announcement of the recent deaths of Senator Johnson of North Dakota and of Representatives Lassiter of Virginia and De Armond of Missouri caused adjournments on both sides of the capitol in respect to their memories.

The swearing in of Senator Fountain L. Thompson and of Representatives W. W. McCredie of Washington and W. J. Moxley of Illinois, who have been named for those positions since the adjournment of the special session, took place Tuesday just before the President's message was received and read.

Before Monday was over there were preliminary conferences on both sides of the capitol for the purpose of laying out plans for the session's work.

Representative Sulzer of New York introduced a resolution in the House Monday directing the President to use the army and navy of the country to restore order, maintain peace and protect life and property in Nicaragua. The resolution recites that the United States demands the arrest, trial and punishment of President Zelaya of Nicaragua for the willful murder of citizens, an ample apology from Nicaragua and reparation.

$1,000,000 STOLEN FROM PHENIX

George P. Sheldon Reported Dying as Result of Disclosures.

State Superintendent of Insurance Hotchkiss, in an official report, charged George P. Sheldon, president of the Phenix Fire Insurance Company of Brooklyn since 1887, with misapplication of funds, with forgery of reports to the Insurance Department, with "wash sales" of questionable assets, and recommended him to the criminal authorities of New York County for such action as may seem proper. The loss to the company, according to Superintendent Hotchkiss, will total $1,000,000. Sheldon is reported to be dying at his home from dropsy and general breakdown.

DR. COOK IN A SANITARIUM?

Arctic Explorer Is Reported to Be in Seclusion Near New York.

It is reported that Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the explorer, is at a sanitarium near White Plains, N. Y., where certain statesmen and exhausted actors are sent to recuperate. A man who looks like Cook has been seen several times during the last few days riding on horseback away from the sanitarium in the early morning hours and returning on foot in the evening. The authorities of the sanitarium said if Dr. Cook was there they were entertaining him unawares.

Cherry Miners Deserted.

The testimony taken the oth at the coroner's inquest into the Cherry mine disaster was directed mainly toward showing that the officers of the mine had not made an early effort to rescue the miners and that the proper protection of the lives of the miners, while at work, had not been supplied and maintained by the mining company.

CHARGE WOMAN WITH MURDER.

Wife Alleged to Have Caused W. J. Erder's Death by Poisoning.

White arsenic placed in William J. Erder's food by his bigamous bride caused his death in St. Louis, according to a warrant charging Mrs. Dora E. Doxey with murder in the first degree. The charge is based on a report by William H. Warren, dean of the medical department of Washington University, who analyzed the organs of Erder's body after it had been disinterred at the request of Miss Kate Erder, a sister. Mrs. Doxey, who collected $2,700 life insurance on Erder and $500 on his sister Elizabeth, is under guard at Columbus, Neb. She will resist extradition to St. Louis, according to a telegram. The only requisition now in effect is based on a charge of bigamy, due to the charge that Mrs. Doxey illegally married Erder while the wife of Dr. Loren Basco Doxey.

RUEF FREE; BOND IS $300,000.

San Francisco Boss Released on Account of Ill Health.

Judge Cabaniss in San Francisco ordered the release from custody of Abraham Ruef on $300,000 bail. This action followed a report of three physicans appointed by the court to examine the physical condition of the former political leader. Ruef had been confined in the county jail since Nov. 13 of last year, his previous bail having been declared forfeited on the day Prosecutor Francis J. Heney was shot in the courtroom. Ruef is under sentence of fourteen years in the State prison for having bribed a supervisor to vote for a trolley franchise for the United Railroads.

Last year's crop was 2,668,651,000 bushels, or an average of 26.3; the quality was 86.9 and the amount in farmers' hands Nov. 1 was 71,134,000 bushels, or 2.7 per cent of the crop.

CALHOUN AS MINISTER TO CHINA

Formal Announcement Is Made from State Department at Washington.

Announcement was made at the State Department at Washington, D. C., Monday of the appointment of William J. Calhoun of Chicago as minister to China. Mr. Calhoun has accepted the appointment, and the Chinese government has indicated its pleasure in receiving him.

Born in Pittsburg in 1848, Mr. Calhoun has long been a commanding figure in Illinois and the nation. In 1896 he took up the cause of the late President McKinley and did much to swing Illinois' delegation to the McKinley column in the National Convention. In 1900 Mr. Calhoun could have received the Republican nomination for Governor if he would have permitted his friends to enter him in the race. He has a wide acquaintance down State, having lived at Danville, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar in 1875, before coming to Chicago.

W. J. CALHOUN.

In 1898 Mr. Calhoun was named a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, serving until 1900, in which year he moved to Chicago. In 1905 he was selected as a special commissioner to Venezuela, when an international crisis was impending. His report, made then, has formed the basis for America's action ever since in maintaining the principles of the Monroe doctrine.

PAY FINES FOR LAND FRAUD.

Fifteen Citizens of Umatilla County, Oregon, Pay Total of $45,000.

Fines aggregating $45,000 were paid in the Federal Court in Portland, Ore., Wednesday by fifteen citizens of Umatilla County who had pleaded guilty to having defrauded the government of part of the public domain. Col. J. H. Raley, one of the most prominent attorneys of eastern Oregon, paid the heaviest fine, $10,000. The others who pleaded guilty were stockmen, ranchers and business and professional men.

BODY OF AUTO VICTIM FOUND.

Max Cohen Believed to Have Met Death Trying to Save Fiancee.

Finding of the body of Max Cohen floating in the Chicago River near the Loomis street bridge dispelled any doubt which might have remained as to the identity of the persons who went to their death Nov. 7 with Chauffeur Ernest Camp when he drove an automobile into the river at the Jackson boulevard bridge. Cohen's coat and overcoat were thrown about his head in such a way as to lead the police to believe he had attempted to take them off, while he tried to rescue Miss Beatrice Shapiro, his fiancee, who, it is believed, met death with him. Miss Shapiro's body has not yet been found.

FIRE SWEEPS BALTIMORE.

$1,000,000 Loss at Scene of 1904 Disaster.

Baltimore's great wholesale district, just across the border line from the section of the city where the fire of 1904 started, was swept by flames Thursday evening. The loss will total at least $1,000,000. Five firemen were badly injured. The fire was gotten under control at 9 o'clock. The extraordinary features which led to the catastrophe of 1904 were missing, however, and after a consultation it was decided unnecessary to call on sister cities for help, as was done five years ago. Lombard and Sharp streets were the scene of Thursday night's fire.

William J. Bryan went to Arizona during the week to visit his son. From there he will go to Texas to look after his property on the Gulf Coast, and thence sail for Panama to make a personal inspection of the big ditch. This done he will make a tour around South America, stopping at various places, but getting back in time to fill an engagement in Scotland next June. His only statement about the Senatorship before leaving home was: "If there is a demand for me to make the race I will not refuse the nomination."

Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court, writing in the Ladies' World, predicts the coming of votes for women, saying: "Not fully at once, but by varying steps. Woman's broader education, her increasing familiarity with business and public affairs, will lead to it. And why not? The chief reply is the home. God forbid that it should be jeopardized. * * * But female suffrage will not debase the home or lessen its power and influence. On the other hand, it will introduce a refining and uplifting power into our political life. It will not stop marriage; neither will higher education. The great natural laws of our being will always assert themselves."

BIG RAILROAD STRIKE SEEMS ALMOST CERTAIN

Every Line, East and West, Opposing Brotherhood Wage Demands, Courts War.

ROADS TO FIGHT UNITED UNIONS

More than a Million Men to Be Directly Engaged in Great Industrial Contest.

The United States is threatened with the greatest railroad strike in the history of the nation. Practically every railroad line in the country, east and west, is in imminent danger of being completely tied up by a walkout on the part of large numbers of its operating employes this month. Officers of the organizations of engineers, firemen, trainmen and switchmen have agreed upon a uniform demand of a 10 per cent wage increase, without deviation or compromise.

That the crisis is approaching rapidly was indicated by the announcement at New York by officers of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen that they would "present their demands on the 11th of this month, and the wage conference will begin on the 15th. Although every effort will be made to avert a general strike, it is impossible to predict what the outcome of the conference will be."

Both the railroads and the leaders of organized labor among the railroad employes are preparing for the struggle, which when it once begins will without doubt develop into one of the greatest industrial battles that has ever been fought in this or any other land. The attitude of the leaders on both sides of the dispute which menaces the industrial peace of the country is at the present time that of iron stubbornness.

While it is known that it is not the plan of the leaders in the railroad labor organizations to call out all the men at one time their intention is said to be by those who are acquainted with their plans, to call out sufficient men on each big system to make operation a practical impossibility.

This means that over a million men will engage directly in a battle with the railroads unless some fortunate circumstance arises to avert the trouble. More than 150,000 miles of railroad track will cease to bear their burdens of freight and passengers, with the consequent paralyzing effect on the commerce of the country, unless a settlement is reached quickly.

TWO WOMEN HIGHWAY ROBBERS

Hold Member of Their Own Sex in Cincinnati Street and Take $25.

Highway robbery was taken up by the gentler sex early on a recent morning when two women held up and robbed Nora McDonald, a stenographer in Cincinnati. Miss McDonald was on her way home from work when she was accosted by the strangers of her own sex, who asked for directions. She was giving them information when one of the women slipped behind her and pinioned her arms. Her accomplice searched the victim and got $25. The brigands escaped.

WOMAN THROWS VITRIOL.

Wife of Belfontaine, O., Resident Disfigured by Act of Stranger.

When Mrs. George Mann answered a ring at her door the other night she met a masked woman who threw vitriol into her face, exclaiming: "I'll burn your eyes out!" The woman then fled. Mrs. Mann's eyes were saved by physicians, but she will be disfigured by deep burns. Her husband told the police that he had received letters saying that one day he would go home and find his wife dead.

Locked Up with Dead Parents.

For twelve hours throughout the coldest night of the season, Earl Campbell, 2 years old, was locked in a room in Kansas City, Kan., alone with the dead bodies of his father and mother. The child's plight was discovered by neighbors, who found that Joseph Campbell, 32 years old, had shot and killed his wife, and then ended his own life.

Wealthy Man Dead on Rails.

The body of Gustave Johnson, wealthy stone and gravel contractor, was found near the tracks of the Big Four and Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroads at Dayton, Ohio. There was no sign of violence on his body except a small hole in the forehead resembling a bullet wound.

Fortune in Grip; Owner Demented.

H. A. Pledmoir, a St. Louis lawyer, carrying a valise in which there was $450,000 of apparently negotiable papers, left a train from New York in Bellefontaine, Ohio, and announced at the railroad station that he would kill himself. The police took him in charge.

An exchange says they have invented a new kind of social amusement. It is called an "avoirdupois party." All the girls are weighed and the weight of each written on a piece of paper and put into a hat and the young men usust draw. The young man must go to supper with the girl whose weight he draws, and must pay for her supper at one half cent per pound. It is very exciting so far as the young men are concerned.

Persons who are disposed to complain about the high cost of living in the United States may take some comfort in the fact that they could not improve their condition by transferring their citizenship to some other nation. A report has just been received from the American consul at Nanking that the increasing cost of living in China is a matter of grave concern to missionaries. He says that every item of household expense is included in the rapid advance in prices. The increased cost of living in China compels foreigners to pay twice as much rent for their houses and 150 per cent more for rice than they paid ten years ago. If this increase continues it is possible the American Chinese may be content to remain in the United States instead of returning to the land of their forefathers when the laundry has yellded a competence for old age.

That conditions in saloons in at least one rural section of Allen county are just as raw as they are in the city of Fort Wayne is brought out by allegations made by Mrs. Alda L. Disler in a complaint for divorce filed by her in the superior court against, Frank J. Disler, a saloonkeeper at Hurshtown.

In her complaint, which was written by Attorney J. McIeth Smith, Mrs. Disler says she was married to Disler Dec. 31, 1902, and that they separated Oct. 28 last. She sets forth that they resided back of the saloon in quarters which were separated from the barroom only by a thin partition, and alleges that "the defendant would cruelly remain away from the plaintiff after 11 o'clock at night and on Sunday in the saloon with a boisterous crowd of men, whom he would allow to loiter in the saloon." She also charges "that the plaintiff would cruelly permit men together in the basement under the dwelling apartments and right under the bedroom of the plaintiff until a late hour at night, where they would play poker, drink and gamble."

Mrs. Disler, aside from telling the secrets of her husband's business, says he was an habitual drunkard and that he would frequently leave home, spend his money in gambling and in visiting bawdy houses and come home sick and drudk and taunt her about the women he had met. She says her husband has an income of at least $1,000 a year and she asks the custody of their child, alimony in the sum of $1,000 and an allowance of $300 a year for the support of the child.

"Dad Here's to You."

We happened in a home the other night and over the parlor saw the legend worked in letters of red, "What is Home Without a Mother." Across the room was another brief, "God Bless Our Home."

Now, what's the matter with "God Bless Our Dad," He gets up early, lights the fire, boils an egg and wipes off the dew of the dawn with his boots, while many a mother is sleeping. He makes the weekly handout for the butcher, the grocer, the milkman, and the hyker, and his litter pile is badly worn before he has been home an hour. If there is a noise during the night dad is kicked in the back and made to go down stairs to find the burglar and kill him.

Mother darns the socks, but dad bought the socks in the first place, and the needles and yarn afterward. Mother does up the fruit—Dad bought it all, and the jars and sugar costs like the mischief. Dad buys the chicken for the Sunday dinner, carves them himself, and draws the neck from the ruins after everyone else is served.

"What is Home Without a Mother." Yes, that is right, but what is home without a father? Ten chances to one it is a boarding house—father is under a slab and the landlady is a widow. Dad, here,s to you, you've got your faults—you may have lots of 'em—but you're all right and we'll miss you when you're gone.

PRESIDENT TAFT'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

The relations of the United States with all foreign governments have continued upon the normal basis of amity and good understanding, and are very generally satisfactory.

Pursuant to the provisions of the general treaty of arbitration concluded between the United States and Great Britain, April 4, 1908, a special agreement was entered into between the two countries on January 27, 1909, for the submission of questions relating to the fisheries on the North Atlantic coast to a tribunal to be formed from members of the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague. In accordance with the provisions of the special agreement the printed case of each government was, on October 4 last, submitted to the other and to the arbitral tribunal at The Hague, and the counter case of the United States is now in course of preparation.

The American rights under the fisheries article of the treaty of 1818 have been a cause of difference between the United States and Great Britain for nearly seventy years. The interests involved are of great importance to the American fishing industry, and the final settlement of the controversy will remove a source of constant irritation and complaint. This is the first case involving such great international questions which has been submitted to the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague.

The treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the Canadian international boundary, concluded April 11, 1908, authorizes the appointment of two commissioners to define and mark accurately the international boundary line between the United States and the Dominion of Canada in the waters of the Passamaquoddy bay, and provides for the exchange of briefs within the period of six months. The briefs were duly presented within the prescribed period, but as the commissioners failed to agree within six months after the exchange of the printed statements, as required by the treaty, it has now become necessary to resort to the arbitration provided for in the article.

The international fisheries commission appointed pursuant to and under the authority of the convention of April 11, 1908, between the United States and Great Britain, has completed a system of uniform and common international regulations for the protection and preservation of the food fishes in international boundary waters of the United States and Canada.

The regulations will be duly submitted to Congress with a view to the enactment of such legislation as will be necessary under the convention to put them into operation.

The convention providing for the settlement of international differences between the United States and Canada, including the apportionment between the two countries of certain of the boundary waters and the appointment of commissioners to adjust certain other questions, signed on the 11th day of January, 1909, and to the ratification of which the Senate gave its advice and consent on March 3, 1909, has not yet been ratified on the part of Great Britain.

Commissioners have been appointed on the part of the United States to act jointly with commissioners on the part of Canada in examining into the question of obstructions in the St. John River between Maine and New Brunswick, and to make recommendations for the regulation of the uses thereof, and are now engaged in this work.

Negotiations for an international conference to consider and reach an arrangement providing for the preservation and protection of the fur seals in the North Pacific are in progress with the governments of Great Britain, Japan and Russia. The attitude of the governments interested leads me to hope for a satisfactory settlement of this question as the ultimate outcome of the negotiations.

His Majesty Mehmed V., Sultan of Turkey, recently sent to this country a special embassy to announce his accession. The quick transition of the government of the Ottoman empire from one of retrograde tendencies to a constitutional government with a Parliament and with progressive modern policies of reform and public improvements is one of the important phenomena of our times. Constitutional government seems also to have made further advance in Persia. These events have turned the eyes of the world upon the Near East. In that quarter the prestige of the United States has spread widely through the peaceful influence of American schools, universities and missionaries. There is every reason why we should obtain a greater share of the commerce of the Near East since the conditions are more favorable now than ever before.

Our Latin American Neighbors.

To-day, more than ever before, American capital is seeking investment in foreign countries, and American products are more and more generally seeking foreign markets. As a consequence, in all countries there are American citizens and American interests to be protected, on occasion, by their government. These movements of men, of capital, and of commodities bring peoples and governments closer together and so form bonds of peace and mutual dependency, as they must also naturally sometimes make passing points of friction. The Pan-American policy of this government has long been fixed in its principles and remains unchanged. With the changed circumstances of the United States and of the republics to the south of us, most of which have great natural resources, stable government and progressive ideals, the apprehension which gave rise to the Monroe doctrine may be said to have nearly disappeared, and neither the doctrine as it exists nor any other doctrine of American policy should be permitted to operate for the perpetuation of irresponsible government, the escape of just obligations, or the insidious allegation of dominating ambitions on the part of the United States.

My meeting with President Diaz and the greeting exchanged on both American and Mexican soil served, I hope, to signalize the close and cordial relations which so well bind together this republic and the great republic immediately to the south, between which there is so vast a network of material interests.

I am happy to say that all but one of the cases which for so long vexed our relations with Venezuela have been settled within the past few months and that, under the enlightened regime now directing the government of Venezuela, provision has been made for arbitration of the remaining case before The Hague tribunal. On July 30, 1909, the government of Panama agreed, after considerable negotiation, to indemnify the relatives of the American officers and sailors who were brutally treated, one of them having, indeed, been killed by the Panaman police this year.

The sanitary improvements and public works undertaken in Cuba prior to the present administration of that government, in the success of which the United States is interested under the treaty, are reported to be making good progress and since the Congress provided for the continuance of the reciprocal commercial arrangement between Cuba and the United States assurance has been received that no negotiations injuriously affecting the situation will be undertaken without consultation.

The collection of the customs of the Dominican Republic through the general receiver of customs appointed by the President of the United States in accordance with the convention of February 8, 1907, has proceeded in an uneventful and satisfactory manner.

Many years ago diplomatic intervention became necessary to the protection of the interest in the American claim of Alsop and company against the government of Chile. The government of Chile had frequently admitted obligation in the case and had promised this government to settle it. There had been two abortive attempts to do so through arbitral commissions, which failed through lack of jurisdiction. Now, happily, as the result of the recent diplomatic negotiations, the governments of the United States and of Chile, actuated by the sincere desire to free from any strain those cordial and friendly relations upon which both set such store, have agreed to a protocol submitting the controversy to definitive settlement by His Britannic Majesty, Edward VII.

The Nicaraguan Difficulty.

Since the Washington conventions of 1907 were communicated to the government of the United States as a consulting and advising party, this government has been almost continuously called upon by one or another, and in turn by all of the five Central American republics, to exert itself for the maintenance of the conventions. Nearly every complaint has been against the Zelaya government of Nicaragua, which fact in Central America in constant tension or turmoil. The responses made to the representations of Central American republics, as due from the United States on account of its relation to the Washington conventions, have been at all times conservative and have avoided, so far as possible, any semblance of interference, although it is very apparent that the considerations of geographic proximity to the Canal zone and of the very substantial American interests in Central America give to the United States a special position in the zone of these republics and the Caribbean Sea.

I need not rehearse here the patient efforts of this government to promote peace and welfare among these republics, efforts which are fully appreciated by the majority of them who are loyal to their true interests. It would be no less unnecessary to rehearse here the sad tale of unspeakable barbarities and oppression alleged to have been committed by the Zelaya government. Recently two Americans were put to death by order of President Zelaya himself. They were officers in the organized forces of a revolution which had continued many weeks and was in control of about half of the republic, and as such, according to the modern enlightened practice of civilized nations, they were entitled to be dealt with as prisoners of war.

At the date when this message is printed this government has terminated diplomatic relations with the Zelaya government, for reasons made public in a communication to the former Nicaraguan charge d'affaires, and is intending to take such future steps as may be found most consistent with its dignity, its duty to American interests and its moral obligations to Central America and to civilization. It may be necessary for me to bring this subject to the attention of the Congress in a special message.

The International Bureau of American Republics has carried on an important and increasing work during the last year. In the exercise of its peculiar functions as an international agency, maintained by all the American republics for the development of Pan-American commerce and friendship, it has accomplished a great practical good which could be done in the same way by no individual department or bureau of one government, and is therefore deserving of your liberal support. The fact that it is about to enter a new building, erected through the munificence of an American philanthropist and the contributions of all the American nations, where both its efficiency of administration and expense of maintenance will naturally be much augmented, further entitles it to special consideration.

Relations in the Far East.

In the Far East this government preserved unchanged its policy of supporting the principle of equality of opportunity and scrupulous respect for the integrity of the Chinese Empire, to which policy are pledged the interested powers of both east and west.

Our traditional relations with the Japanese empire continue cordial as usual. As the representative of Japan, his imperial highness Prince Kuni visited the Hudson-Fulton celebration. The recent visit of a delegation of prominent business men as guests of the chambers of commerce of the Pacific slope, whose representatives had been so agreeably received in Japan, will doubtless contribute to the growing trade across the Pacific, as well as to that mutual understanding which leads to mutual appreciation.

Expenditures and Revenues.

Perhaps the most important question presented to the administration is that of economy in expenditures and sufficiency of revenue. The deficit of the last fiscal year, and the certain deficit of the current year, prompted Congress to throw a greater responsibility on the executive and the secretary of the treasury than had heretofore been declared by statute. This declaration imposes upon the secretary of the treasury the duty of assembling all the estimates of the executive departments bureaus, and offices, of the expenditures necessary in the ensuing fiscal year, and of making an estimate of the revenues of the government for the same period; and if a probable deficit is thus shown, it is made the duty of the President to recommend the method by which such deficit can be met.

The report of the secretary shows that the ordinary expenditures for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, will exceed the estimated receipts by $16,075,620. If to this deficit is added the sum to be disbursed for the Panama canal, amounting to $38,000,000, and $1,000,000 to be paid on the public debt, the deficit of ordinary receipts and expenditures will be increased to a total deficit of $73,075,620. This deficit the secretary proposes to meet by the proceeds of bonds issued to pay the cost of constructing the Panama canal. I approve this proposal.

The policy of paying for the construction of the Panama canal, not out of current revenue, but by bond issues, was adopted in the Spooner act of 1902, and there seems to be no good reason for departing from the principle by which a part at least of the burden of the cost of the canal shall fall upon our posterity who are to enjoy it; and there is all the more reason for this view because the actual cost to date of the canal, which is now half done and which will be completed Jan. 1, 1915, shows that the cost of engineering and construction will be $297,766,000, instead of $139,705,200, as originally estimated. In addition to engineering and construction, the other expenses, including sanitation and government, and the amount paid for the properties, the franchise, and the privilege of building the canal, increase the cost by $75,435,000, to a total of $375,201,000. The increase in the cost of engineering and construction is due to a substantial enlargement of the plan of construction by widening the canal 100 feet in the Culebra cut and by increasing the dimensions of the locks, to the underestimate of the quantity of the work to be done under the original plan, and to an underestimate of the cost of labor and materials, both of which have greatly enhanced in price since the original estimate was made.

In order to avoid a deficit for the ensuing fiscal year I directed the heads of departments in the preparation of their estimates to make them as low as possible consistent with imperative governmental necessity. The result has been as I am advised by the secretary of the treasury that the estimates for the expenses of the government for the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, are less than the appropriations for this current fiscal year by $42,818,000. So far as the secretary of the treasury is able to form a judgment as to future income and compare it with the expenditures for the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and excluding payments on account of the Panama canal which will doubtless be taken up by bonds, there will be a surplus of $35,931,000.

In the present estimates the needs of the departments and of the government have been cut to the quick, so to speak, and any assumption on the part of Congress, so often made in times past, that the estimates have been prepared with the expectation that they may be reduced, will result in seriously hampering proper administration.

The secretary of the treasury points out what should be carefully noted in respect to this reduction in governmental expenses for the next fiscal year, that the economies are two kinds—first, there is a saving in the permanent administration of the departments, bureaus, and offices of the government; and, second, there is a present reduction in expenses by postponement of projects and improvements that ultimately will have to be carried out, but which are now delayed with the hope that additional revenue in the future will permit their execution without producing a deficit.

I am aware that there is a strong feeling in both houses of Congress, and possibly in the country, against the establishment of civil pensions, and that this has naturally grown out of the heavy burden of military pensions, which it has always been the policy of our government to assume; but I am strongly convinced that no other practical solution of the difficulties presented by the superannuation of civil servants can be found than that of a system of civil pensions.

The business and expenditures of the government have expanded enormously since the Spanish war, but as the revenues have increased in nearly the same proportion as the expenditures until recently, the attention of the public, and of those responsible for the government, has not been fastened upon the question of reducing the cost of administration. We cannot, in view of the advancing prices of living, hope to save money by a reduction in the standard of salaries paid. Indeed, if any change is made in that regard, an increase rather than a decrease will be necessary; and the only means of economy will be in reducing the number of employes and in obtaining a greater average of efficiency from those retained in the service.

Frauds in the Customs Service.

I regret to refer to the fact of the discovery of extensive frauds in the collection of the customs revenues at New York City, in which a number of the subordinate employes in the weighing and other departments were directly concerned, and in which the beneficiaries were the American Sugar Refining Company and others. The frauds consisted in the payment of duty on underweights of sugar. The government has recovered from the American Sugar Refining Company all that it is shown to have been defrauded of. The sum was received in full of the amount due, which might have been recovered by civil suit against the beneficiary of fraud, but there was an express reservation in the contract of settlement by which the settlement should not interfere with, or prevent the criminal prosecution of everyone who was found to be subject to the same.

Criminal prosecutions are now proceeding against a number of the government officers. It would seem to me that an investigation of the frauds by Congress at present, pending the probing by the treasury department and the department of justice, as proposed, might by giving immunity and otherwise prove an embarrassment in securing conviction of the guilty parties.

The New Tariff Law.

Two features of the new tariff act call for special reference. By virtue of the clause known as the "Maximum and Minimum" clause, it is the duty of the executive to consider the laws and practices of other countries with reference to the importation into those countries of the products and merchandise of the United States, and if the executive finds such laws and practices not to be unduly discriminatory against the United States, the minimum duties provided in the bill are to go into force. Unless the President makes such a finding, then the maximum duties provided in the bill, that is, an increase of 25 per cent ad valorem over the minimum duties, are to be in force. Fear has been expressed that this power conferred and duly imposed on the executive is likely to lead to a tariff war. I beg to express the hope and belief that no such result need be anticipated.

The discretion granted to the Executive by the terms "unduly discriminatory" is wide. In order that the maximum duty shall be charged against the imports from a country, it is necessary that he shall find on the part of that country not only discriminations in its laws or the practice under them against the trade of the United States, but that the discriminations found shall be undue; that is, without good and fair reason. I conceive that this power was reposed in the President with the hope that the maximum duties might never be applied in any case, but that the power to apply them would enable the President and the state department through friendly negotiation to secure the elimination from the laws and the practice under them of any foreign country of that which is unduly discriminatory. No one is seeking a tariff war or a condition in which the spirit of retaliation shall be aroused.

The new tariff law enables me to appoint a tariff board to assist me in connection with the department of state in the administration of the minimum and maximum clause of the act and also to assist officers of the government in the administration of the entire law. An examination of the law and an understanding of the nature of the facts which should be considered in discharging the functions imposed upon the executive show that I have the power to direct the tariff board to make a comprehensive glossary and encyclopedia of the terms used and articles embraced in the tariff law, and to secure information as to the cost of production of such goods in this country and the cost of their production in foreign countries. I have therefore appointed a tariff board consisting of three members and have directed them to perform all the duties above described.

War and Navy Departments.

In the interest of immediate economy and because of the prospect of a deficit, I have required a reduction in the estimates of the war department for the coming fiscal year, which brings the total estimates down to an amount $45,000,000 less than the corresponding estimates for last year. The secretary of war calls attention to a number of needed changes in the army, in all of which I concur. The coast defenses of the United States proper are generally all that could be desired, and in some respects they are rather more elaborate than under present conditions are needed to stop an enemy's fleet from entering the harbors defended. The military and naval joint board have unanimously agreed that it would be unwise to make the large expenditures which at one time were contemplated in the establishment of a naval base and station in the Philippine islands, and have expressed their judgment, in which I fully concur, in favor of making an extensive naval base at Pearl harbor, near Honolulu, and not in the Philippines.

This does not dispense with the necessity for the comparatively small appropriations required to finish the proper coast defenses in the Philippines now under construction on the island of Corregidor and elsewhere or to complete a suitable repair station and coaling supply station at Olongapo, where is the floating dock "Dewey." I hope that this recommendation of the joint board will end the discussion as to the comparative merits of Manila bay and Olongapo as naval stations, and will lead to prompt measures for the proper equipment and defense of Pearl harbor.

The return of the battleship fleet from its voyage around the world, in more efficient condition than when it started, was a noteworthy event of interest alike to our citizens and the naval authorities of the world. Besides the beneficial and far-reaching effect on our personal and diplomatic relations in the countries which the fleet visited, the marked success of the ships in steaming around the world in all weathers on schedule time has increased respect for our navy and has added to our national prestige. Our enlisted personnel recruited from all sections of the country is young and energetic and representative of the national spirit. Owing to the necessity for economy in expenditures, I have directed the curtailment of recommendations for naval appropriations so that they are thirty-eight millions less than the corresponding estimates of last year, and the request for new naval construction is limited to two first-class battle ships and one repair vessel.

The use of a navy is for military purposes, and there has been found need in the department of a military branch dealing directly with the military use of the fleet. The secretary of the navy has also felt the lack of responsible advisers to aid him in reaching conclusions and deciding important matters between co-ordinate branches of the department. To secure these results he has inaugurated a tentative plan involving certain changes in the organization of the navy department, including the navy yards, all of which have been found by the attorney general to be in accordance with law. I have approved the execution of the plan proposed because of the greater efficiency and economy it promises.

The Department of Justice.

The deplorable delays in the administration of civil and criminal law have received the attention of committees of the American Bar Association and of many state bar associations, as well as the considered thought of judges and jurists. In my judgment, a change in judicial procedure, with a view to reducing its expense to private litigants in civil cases and facilitating the dispatch of business and final decision in both civil and criminal cases, constitutes the greatest need in our American institutions. I do not doubt for one moment that much of the lawless violence and cruelty exhibited in lynchings is directly due to the uncertainties and injustice growing out of the delays in trials, judgments, and the executions thereof by our courts. Of course these remarks apply quite as well to the administration of justice in state courts as to that in federal courts, and without making invidious distinction it is perhaps not too much to say that, speaking generally, the defects are less in the federal courts than in the state courts. But they are very great in the federal courts. The expedition with which business is disposed of both on the civil and the criminal side of English courts under modern rules of procedure makes the delays in our courts seem archaic and barbarous. The procedure in the federal courts should furnish an example for the state courts.

I presume it is impossible, without an amendment to the constitution, to unite under one form of action the proceedings at common law and proceedings in equity in the federal courts, but it is certainly not impossible by a statute to simplify and make short and direct the procedure both at law and in equity in those courts. It is not impossible to cut down still more than it is cut down, the jurisdiction of the supreme court so as to confine it almost wholly to statutory and constitutional questions. Under the present statutes the equity and admiralty procedure in the federal courts is under the control of the supreme court, but in the pressure of business to which that court is subjected, it is impossible to hope that a radical and proper reform of the federal equity procedure can be brought about. I therefore recommend legislation providing for the appointment by the President of a commission with authority to examine the law and equity procedure of the federal courts of first instance, the law of appeals from those courts to the courts of appeals and to the supreme court, and the costs imposed in such procedure upon the private litigants and upon the public treasury and make recommendation with a view to simplifying and expediting the procedure as far as possible and making it as inexpensive as may be to the litigant of little means.

"Snap" Injunctions.

"The Republican party will uphold at all times the authority and integrity of the courts, state and federal, and will ever insist that their powers to enforce their process and to protect life, liberty, and property shall be preserved inviolate. We believe, however, that the rules of procedure in the federal courts with respect to the issuance of the writ of injunction should be more accurately defined by statute, and that no injunction or temporary restraining order should be issued without notice, except where irreparable injury would result from delay, in which case a speedy hearing thereafter should be granted."

I recommend that in compliance with the promise thus made, appropriate legislation be adopted. The ends of justice will best be met and the chief cause of complaint against ill-considered injunctions without notice will be removed by the enactment of a statute forbidding hereafter the issuing of any injunction or restraining order, whether temporary or permanent, by any federal court, without previous notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard on behalf of the parties to be enjoined; unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court that the delay necessary to give such notice and hearing would result in irreparable injury to the complainant.

Unless also the court shall from the evidence make a written finding, which shall be spread upon the court minutes, that immediate and irreparable injury is likely to ensue to the complainant, and shall define the injury, state why it is irreparable, and shall also endorse on the order issued the date and the hour of the issuance of the order. Moreover, every such injunction or restraining order issued without previous notice and opportunity by the defendant to be heard should by force of the statute expire and be of no effect after seven days from the issuance thereof or within any time less than that period which the court may fix, unless within such seven days or such less period, the injunction or order is extended or renewed after previous notice and opportunity to be heard.

My judgment is that the passage of such an act which really embodies the best practice in equity and is very like the rule now in force in some courts, will prevent the issuing of ill-advised orders of injunction without notice and will render such orders when issued much less objectionable by the short time in which they may remain effective.

Interstate Commerce Laws.

The jurisdiction of the general government over interstate commerce has led to the passage of the so-called "Sherman Antitrust Law" and the "Interstate Commerce Law" and its amendments. The developments in the operation of those laws, as shown by indictments, trials, judicial decisions, and other sources of information, call for a discussion and some suggestions as to amendments.

The Postoffice Department.

The deficit every year in the postoffice department is largely caused by the low rate of postage of 1 cent a pound charged on second-class mail matter, which includes not only newspapers but magazines and miscellaneous periodicals. The actual loss growing out of the transmission of this second-class mail matter at 1 cent a pound amounts to about $63,000,000 a year. The average cost of the transportation of this matter is more than 9 cents a pound.

A great saving might be made, amounting to much more than half of the loss, by imposing upon magazines and periodicals a higher rate of postage. They are much heavier than newspapers, and contain a much higher proportion of advertising to reading matter, and the average distance of their transportation is three and a half times as great.

The total deficit for the last fiscal year in the post office department amounted to $17,500,000. The branches of its business which it did at a loss were the second class mail service, in which the loss as already said was $63,000,000, and the free rural delivery, in which the loss was $28,000,000. Those losses were in part offset by the profits of the letter postage and other sources of income. It would seem wise to reduce the loss upon second class mail matter, at least to the extent of preventing a deficit in the total operations of the post office department.

The second subject worthy of mention in the postoffice department is the real necessity and entire practicability of establishing postal savings banks. The successful party at the last election declared in favor of postal savings banks, and although the proposition finds opponents in many parts of the country, I am convinced that the people desire such banks, and am sure that when the banks are furnished they will be productive of the utmost good. I believe them to be necessary in order to offer a proper inducement to thrift and saving to a great many people of small means who do not now have banking facilities, and to whom such a system would offer an opportunity for the accumulation of capital. They will furnish a satisfactory substitute, based on sound principle and actual successful trial in nearly all the countries of the world, for the system of government guarantee of deposits now being adopted in several western states, which with deference to those who advocate it seems to me to have in it the seeds of demoralization to conservative banking and certain financial disaster.

The question of how the money deposited in postal savings banks shall be invested is not free from difficulty, but I believe that a satisfactory provision for this purpose was inserted as an amendment to the bill considered by the Senate at its last session. It has been proposed to delay the consideration of legislation establishing a postal savings bank until after the report of the monetary commission. This report is likely to be delayed and properly so, because of the necessity for careful deliberation and close investigation. I do not see why the one should be tied up with the other. It is understood that the monetary commission have looked into the systems of banking which now prevail abroad, and have found that by a control there exercised in respect to reserves and the rates of exchange by some central authority panics are avoided. It is not apparent that a system of postal savings banks would in any way interfere with a change to such a system here. Certainly in most of the countries in Europe where control is thus exercised by a central authority, postal savings banks exist and are not thought to be inconsistent with a proper financial and banking system.

Recommends Ship Subsidy.

Following the course of my distinguished predecessor, I earnestly recommend to Congress the consideration and passage of a ship subsidy bill, looking to the establishment of lines between our Atlantic seaboard and the eastern coast of South America, as well as lines from the west coast of the United States to South America, China, Japan and the Philippines.

Interior Department.

The successful party in the last election in its national platform declared in favor of the admission as separate states of New Mexico and Arizona, and I recommend that legislation appropriate to this end be adopted.

A Governor for Alaska.

With respect to the territory of Alaska, I recommend legislation which shall provide for the appointment by the President of a governor and also an executive council, the members of which shall during their term of office reside in the territory, and which shall have legislative powers sufficient to enable it to give to the territory local laws adapted to its present growth.

Conservation of National Resources.

In several departments there is presented the necessity for legislation looking to the further conservation of our national resources, and the subject is one of such importance as to require a more detailed and extended discussion than can be entered upon in this communication. For that reason I shall take an early opportunity to send a special message to Congress on the subject of the improvement of our waterways, upon the reclamation and irrigation of arid, semi-arid and swamp lands; upon the preservation of our forests and the reforesting of suitable areas; upon the reclassification of the public domain with a view of separating from agricultural settlement mineral, coal and phosphate lands and sites belonging to the government bordering on streams suitable for the utilization of water power.

Department of Agriculture.

I commend to your careful consideration the report of the secretary of agriculture as showing the immense sphere of usefulness which that department now fills and the wonderful additions to the wealth of the nation made by the farmers of this country in the crops of the current year.

The lighthouse board now discharges its duties under the department of commerce and labor. I recommend the transfer of control over the lighthouses to a suitable civilian bureau.

Consolidation of Bureaus.

I request congressional authority to enable the secretary of commerce and labor to unite the bureaus of manufactures and statistics.

The "White Slave" Trade.

I greatly regret to have to say that the investigations made in the bureau of immigration and other sources of information lead to the view that there is urgent necessity for additional legislation and greater executive activity to suppress.

Bureau of Health.

The opportunities offered for useful research and the spread of useful information in regard to the cultivation of the soil and the breeding of stock and the solution of many of the intricate problems in progressive agriculture have demonstrated the wisdom of establishing that department. Similar reasons, of equal force, can be given for the establishment of a bureau of health that shall not only exercise the police jurisdiction of the federal government respecting quarantine, but which shall also afford an opportunity for investigation and research by competent experts into questions of health affecting the whole country, or important sections thereof, questions which, in the absence of federal governmental work, are not likely to be promptly solved.

The Civil Service Commission.

The work of the United States civil service commission has been performed to the general satisfaction of the executive officers with whom the commission has been brought into official communication.

Recommendations have been made by my predecessors that Congress appropriate a sufficient sum to pay the balance—about 33 per cent—of the amounts due depositors in the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. I renew this recommendation.

Emancipation Semi-Centennial.

The year 1913 will mark the fiftieth anniversary of the issuance of the Emancipation Proclamation granting freedom to the negroes. It seems fitting that this event should be properly celebrated. Already a movement has been started by prominent negroes, encouraged by prominent white people and the press.

In Conclusion.

I have thus, in a message compressed as much as the subjects will permit, referred to many of the legislative needs of the country, with the exceptions already noted. Speaking generally, the country is in a high state of prosperity. There is every reason to believe that we are on the eve of a substantial business expansion, and we have just garnered a harvest unexampled in the market value of our agricultural products. The high prices which such products bring mean great prosperity for the farming community, but on the other hand they mean a very considerably increased burden upon those classes in the community whose yearly compensation does not expand with the improvement in business and the general prosperity. Various reasons are given for the high prices. The proportionate increase in the output of gold, which to-day is the chief medium of exchange and is in some respects a measure of value, furnishes a substantial explanation of at least part of the increase in prices. The increase in population and the more expensive mode of living of the people, which have not been accompanied by a proportionate increase in acreage production, may furnish a further reason. It is well to note that the increase in the cost of living is not confined to this country, but prevails the world over, and that those who would charge increases in prices to the existing protective tariff must meet the fact that the rise in prices has taken place almost wholly in those products of the factory and farm in respect to which there has been either no increase in the tariff or in many instances a very considerable reduction.

WM. H. TAFT.

Matt Henson on the Rack.

Matthew Henson, the colored companion of Commander Peary on his trip to the north pole, began his career as a lecturer before a large audience in the New York Hippodrome, speaking from notes and using a number of photographs which he took on the way. But the interesting part of the show was the quiz at the end. Plenty of Cook adherents were there to ask questions. These brought out the statement from Henson that the Peary party had suspected that Cook would claim the discovery of the pole, even before they started on their trip northward. Henson said he could have taken observations while with Peary at the pole, but that he was not asked to do so by Peary, and hence did not do it.

World Shipping Federation.

Word comes from London that a gigantic international combine of shipowners was formed there last week. Delegates from the shipowning federations of England, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Denmark and Sweden, representing more than 16,000,000 tons of shipping, had registered in accordance with the British law. It is intended ultimately to embrace all federations of shipping interests in the world. France and Norway already have signified their willingness to join. The objects are said to be purely defensive against the "unreasonable attacks which may be made by trade unions and others upon the shipowners' freedom of contract in the employment of labor." Headquarters will be in London.

Test Cases in Spokane.

The contest for the right of free speech and peaceable assembly which the Industrial Workers of the World have been waging at Spokane reached the test-case stage during the week. Two of the 275 men arrested were picked out to serve this purpose, one charged with vagrancy and the other with disorderly conduct. The local Central Labor Union and the socialists have come to the assistance of the I. W. W. men, and these cases will be carried to the higher courts if necessary. All of the women arrested were released by the police justice on their promise not to take an active part until the test cases have been disposed of.

Another Football Victim.

Archer Christian, son of a Richmond banker, was injured fatally while playing as half back on the University of Virginia team in its match with Georgetown University at Washington. Owing to this fatality Georgetown has canceled all games for the season.

Not to Be Taken Seriously.

We are told that Mrs. Pankhurst says that American women are not serious enough. Probably she has heard some of them say they haven't a thing to wear.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Long Lost Shutt Returns Home

Jacob J. Madison Shutt, brother to Mrs. Mary J. Horn, Spencerville, Ind.; Mrs. Nancy J. Rex, Sandiego, California; Mrs. Mattie C. Hannen, Spokane Falls, Washington and E. M. Shutt, Ft. Wayne, Ind., has returned home from Old Mexico, after an absence of 41 years. He is spoken of as the "long lost Shutt." A reception was given in his behalf, December 13, 1909 at E. M. Shutt's at 808 Erie St., Ft. Wayne. Mr. Shutt will remain in Indiana a few weeks, this will give many of his old acquaintances an opportunity to meet and talk with him. Mr. Shutt left home April 19, 1868, for the mountains, in 1869 he and his little band claim to have been first to put foot on the banks of Yellowstone Lake, Yellowstone National Park, Wyo.,—and there suffered his greatest hardships. A river by the name of Madison takes his name in the noted park. Mr. Shutt later moved on into Old Mexico and was married in 1873 to a Spanish lady and adopted the Spanish rules and costumes. Mr. Shutt made himself known last January to his brother and sisters to their great surprise, since then they have been in constant communication.

Obituary

of Mrs. John Baltz, whose maiden name was Mary E. Shippers, was born February 25 1825 in Reine Prussia, Germany. She was joined in marriage to John Baltz December 16 1850. To this union was born seven children four sons and three daughters. The four sons all living which are: Geo. F., John, William and Benjamin. The three daughters preceded her to the better world. She and her husband were married in Washington County, Maryland. They moved to Seneca County, Ohio in 1857, from there to Spencerville, DeKalb County, Indiana in the year 1875 which place she lived until death. Her husband preceded her to the Spirit world about eight years ago. The deceased was a lady highly respected by all who knew her. At the time of her death she was 84 years 9 months and 9 days old. The funeral services were held at the house conducted by Rev. E. W. Erick. Burial in Spencerville cemetery. H. Beams funeral director.

Indiana celebrated its ninety-third birthday anniversary Saturday. On December 11, 1816, the territory was admitted to the union. There were no plans for a general celebration, although those who are informed on Indiana history do not forget the date of the state's birth. Governor Marshall says he will recommend in his next message to the legislature the appropriation of funds for a fitting celebration to commemorate the 100th birthday anniversary in 1916.

20 Years With Heart Trouble

"Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has cured me of heart disease of over 20 years' standing. I was so bad that I could not do my work, and could scarcely draw a full breath without fainting or smothering. The doctor told me he could do no more for me; then I commenced taking the Heart Remedy. I shall never forget that night. I slept better than I had before in months. I kept right on getting better, until I was perfectly well."

MRS. LAURA RUSSELL,
Logan, Iowa.

When the heart action is weak, it fails to pump the blood through the lungs with sufficient rapidity. Then the lungs do not absorb the proper amount of oxygen, although they may be taking in a normal amount of air. The result is shortness of breath, smothering spells, difficult breathing, oppressed feeling in chest. Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy strengthens the heart nerves and muscles, and in this way increases the circulation.

Watch-Boys in Norway.

It is common enough to see a boy watching cattle to keep them from straying, and in days not so very long gone by it was no unusual thing for a boy to be set to keep the birds off the crops. But a watch-boy whose duty it is to keep a lookout for a school of fish, and who sits in a sentry-box set upon stilts, is not such an every-day sight.

This particular kind of watch-boy is Norwegian, the scene of his labors being the shores of some fiord of his native land.

His little sentry-box is made of wood, and perched high upon posts. Here the lad sits, gazing out across the arm of the sea, using his keen eyes for the benefit of the farmers who are depending upon him to give the alarm when a school of fish shall appear. They work contentedly enough in their fields, secure in the belief that their watch-boy will let them know when it is time to reap a harvest from the sea instead of from the land.

Sentinel boxes similar to those employed in Norway were in use among the fishermen on the shores of the Mediterranean, and it is supposed that the vikings brought back with them from some of their piratical raids the idea that has been put in practice ever since.

RESULTS OF FOOD.

Health and Natural Conditions Come from Right Feeding.

Man, physically, should be like a perfectly regulated machine, each part working easily in its appropriate place. A slight derangement causes undue friction and wear, and frequently ruins the entire system.

A well known educator of Boston found a way to keep the brain and the body in that harmonious co-operation which makes a joy of living.

"Two years ago," she writes, "being in a condition of nervous exhaustion, I resigned my position as teacher, which I had held for over 40 years. Since then the entire rest has, of course, been a benefit, but the use of Grape-Nuts has removed one great cause of illness in the past, namely, constipation and its attendant evils.

"I generally make my entire breakfast on a raw egg beaten into four spoonfuls of Grape-Nuts, with a little hot milk or hot water added. I like it extremely, my food assimilates and my bowels take care of themselves. I find my brain power and physical endurance much greater and I know that the use of the Grape-Nuts has contributed largely to this result.

"It is with feelings of gratitude that I write this testimonial, and trust it may be the means of aiding others in their search for health."

Look in pkgs. for the little book, "The Road to Wellville." "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

"The wrong chap?" she repeated eagerly.

"Well, I swore all along I was right. But t'other day, as I was cadging for a few pence houtside Lord's Cricket Ground, I seed a gent come out with a lady on his arm—one o' your 'igh-flyers yer know—yalla 'air, and all that. Well, said I to myself, that's the lord as bought them pearls! I'll follow him. He got into a hansom, and I 'eard him say, 'drive to Burlington 'Ouse, cabby.' "

"To Burlington House," repeated faintly. She felt she was on the eve of a discovery.

"Yes, miss, and then he seed me," continued Billy, "and he stopped the cab, and we 'ad a conversation together. I reminded 'im of that there accident, for I thought I'd tell 'im about them three chaps as had treated me so badly, if so be he'd keep it from the police, and, pay me for it, and then my lord, he says to me 'They nabbed the wrong chap, my boy; 'twarn't me at all, 'twar another man wery like me.' "

"So he tells me to go to 'is place that wery evening, after 'is late dinner, to see this other cove and tell my story, and that's where I was a goin' when those chaps as were allers a watchin' on me caught me, and nearly did for me—and that's all, miss, but I'll never go back to London any more if so be as you'll let me stop here, where I can earn my livin' honest, and work to serve you as 'as been so good to me."

"And the other man, Billy, the man who was so like the lord? Did you ever see him?"

"Yes, miss, I believe it were him I saw at Wictory station that day; and he were as like the other as two peas."

"Did you ever see him again, Billy?"

"Never, miss."

CHAPTER XXIV.

Algy Dessinger was mooning idly along Piccadilly by himself. The young man had lost every interest in life; he had become moody and melancholy, spoke hardly and cynically of women, and bitterly of life in general. He had loved Irene so well, and believed in her so thoroughly, and now he had lost his faith in her, and often told himself that he had ceased to love her. He told everybody that he was going away from town, yet somehow he lingered on day after day, and he frequented the places where he was likely to meet her, secretly longing for a glimpse at her beautiful face. He did see her now and then, sometimes on the box-seat of Joseph Taunton's coach; once he met her coming out of a milliner's shop in Bond street, and she nodded to him and half held out her hand, but he only lifted his hat gravely, and stalked away relentlessly down the street.

"She is a heartless, mercenary coquette!" he would say to himself, "and I hate her!" but, of course, he did nothing of the sort.

He walked savagely down to his club, with his heart full of rage and bitterness. Several of his friends were gathered together in the smoking-room, and, as he entered, and they were discussing the very person of whom his thoughts were full.

"They are to be married at St. George's, Hanover Square, on the 29th, I hear," Bertie Morris was saying. "Everybody, that is anybody, I mean, has been asked. I have got a card," he added naively.

There was a general laugh at this, and somebody called out to Dessinger, as he joined the group, "Are you 'anybody,' Algy?"

"What do you mean?" growled the young man churlishly; for he was sore and hurt, and ready to pick a quarrel with anyone.

"Why, I thought you were a great friend of the lovely bride! Hasn't she even invited you to her wedding?"

"No, she hasn't; and if she had, I shouldn't go!" almost shouted Dessinger back. "There's no friendship in my mind, I assure you, towards a mercenary woman, who is selling herself to a bloated little cad for the sake of the gold she can get out of him."

Suddenly a hand was laid heavily upon his shoulder. He turned round sharply, and found himself face to face with Rupert Carroll.

Now, although this was Carroll's club, he very seldom came into it now, and therefore he knew very few of the younger members; but Algy he did know; for they had once, for a few weeks, been friends and companions on a salmon river in Ireland. Dessinger started, and turned color a little at the sight of him. He was very pale, and his lip trembled.

"May I say a word to you, Carroll?"

"A hundred, my dear fellow."

Algy led the way into a little anteroom, where they could be alone, away from the prying ears of the club servants.

"I ought not to have said what I did," began Dessinger, rather awkwardly. "Yet surely that you should reprove me on her account—when it is you who have driven her into this horrid marriage—seems rather comical, doesn't it? I suppose that was what made me lose my temper."

"My dear Dessinger, what do you mean?" and Carroll turned pale. "How can I have had anything to do with Miss Garland's marriage? Why I do not even know her—now," he added, in a low voice.

"Well, she told me so."

"She—told you—that I—she spoke of me to you?" he inquired, blankly.

"No; she did not mention you actually by name, Carroll; but she told me that some fellow had once made love to her when she was very young, and that he had gone away and left her without a word; and she said it was that that had made her turn hard and reckless, and determine to sell herself for money; and then she just said a word that made me put two and two together, and guess that it was you. And I was just wild with jealousy and misery when you came in just now, for perhaps if it hadn't been for you, I might have won her; but when she told me that she should never love any man on earth, excepting that one who had treated her so badly, then it didn't seem any use to go on trying, did it?—though I'd have died for her gladly just to save her from marrying that dreadful man."

And then suddenly the poor boy's fortitude forsook him altogether, and he laid his head down on folded arms on the table in front of him, and sobbed aloud.

Rupert Carroll stood by him for a moment motionless and cold, as though he had been turned into stone. He could not have spoken to save his life. It seemed to him as if in that moment, years were added on to his life. And presently, when Algy Dessinger lifted his red, tear-stained face, he found himself alone.

Rupert Carroll walked back to his office in the city like a man in a dream.

It was late in the afternoon, yet he would not go back to his home—the shock of what Dessinger had told him overwhelmed him, and he felt that he must be alone.

"She loves me still—in spite of everything!" he said to himself; and although there was a certain secret and guilty joy at the thought, there was at the same time, to do him justice, a far greater amount of consternation and distress. It seemed to him that he had never realized till this moment the magnitude and the bitterness of the loss of her. For now, he must never see her again.

He realized that London could no longer contain them both, that to breathe the same air, to inhabit the same city, where at every street corner he ran the chance of meeting her face to face, was now fraught with deadly peril for them both.

It was for him to save her from such a position. He made up his mind rapidly what he would do—he would throw up his employment in the city on some pretext or other, and as soon as his wife's health admitted of it, he could take her and the infant abroad, they should travel for a time and then settle in some far-off country—New Zealand perhaps, or Canada, it did not matter very much to him where—in this respect he would be guided by Agatha's wishes—only in England he would remain no longer.

When he got back to his own room at the office, he found a telegram lying upon the table. He opened it to find an exact repetition of the message which Agatha in her foolishness had sent to him once before. It was a message telling him that his wife was ill, and urging him to lose no time in coming home.

He tossed the paper contemptuously into the waste-paper basket. He did not believe in her illness. It was only another trick that she was playing upon him! She was jealous, and she believed that she had the right to pry upon his movements and to control his actions!

It was more than an hour after the arrival of the telegram when he left the office and turned his face westward, and even then he determined that he would walk and not drive home. At last he turned the corner into Chester Square. Immediately, he became aware that something was wrong—two carriages stood before his door; he hurried forward, and as he thrust his latch-key into the door, he looked back apprehensively at the two carriages behind him. Both were empty, but he recognized, on the box of the first, the coachman of his wife's doctor. There was a strange silence in the house—an odd, deathlike stillness.

Some one came flying down the staircase as he entered. It was his sister. She was watching for his return. Her face was pale as death, and disfigured with weeping. Rupert uttered a cry of dismay at the sight of her.

"The doctor's carriage is here. Has she been taken ill?" he inquired, breathlessly, whilst a sudden pang of fear made his heart stand still.

"Yes, the doctors were here—two of them. They sent for another. Oh, did you not get my telegram, Rupert? Why did you not come before? It is all over."

"All over? Do you mean—that the child is born?"

"Oh, my darling brother! you have lost them both!" she cried brokenly.

"Agatha is dead!"

"She died ten minutes ago—in agonies—calling for you—begging and praying you to come to her. She knew that I had telegraphed for you, and when you did not come a dreadful delusion came to her; she fancied that you loved some other woman, and that you had gone away to see her! Over and over again in her ravings, the poor child repeated this unhappy idea. In vain I attempted to soothe and calm her, to tell her that it could not be true that you loved anyone better than your wife. 'He told me so himself,' was all she would say. 'He is with her now; though I am dying, he will not leave her to come to me.' Oh, Rupert! why, why did you not come sooner? How was it you did not get my telegram?"

He turned away from her in deepest humiliation; he could not answer her question. Miss Carroll flung herself down upon the sofa, in a perfect paroxysm of grief. The poor woman was half distracted by the scene she had gone through, and by the painful death of her adopted child; her sobs and lamentations rang through the silent room.

But as for Rupert, he stood motionless and tearless, and said not a word. Yet ten years could scarcely have added a greater burden to his life than did that moment of anguish. Neither tears nor lamentations could avail him.

"It is my own fault—my own stupidity—my own blind and selfish obstinacy," said the voice of his conscience within him. "If I had killed her with my own hands, I could scarcely be more culpable. I can never forgive myself!"

And he was right; for the power of repentance and reparation towards the dead, whom we have hurt or wounded, is taken away from us for ever; for that unutterable remorse there is no consolation upon earth, and the bitterness of it must go with us down to the grave.

ROOT OF ALL GROWTH.

What the Middle West Knows About the "Dry" Process.

"Dry farming" is a misnamed science. It is a recent discovery and is being taught to the new settlers in the Middle West and in Colorado. To those who know nothing of it the idea may be described as farming by conserving natural moisture. The new settlers learned that there were copious rains in the fall, heavy snows in winter and rains in the spring again. If this moisture, which ran off into swollen streams with the coming of spring, could be conserved to the growing crops the desert might yet be rejuvenated, and so they set to work.

The great farms were plowed ten and twelve inches deep. They were harrowed fine in the fall, and the rain was allowed to settle in the subsoil. In the spring they were cultivated again, these 10,000 acre farms, and they were left standing to absorb moisture for a year, with constant cultivating to help the moisture retention.

The second fall the seed was put in, and the new rains and snow and thaws brought out the spring wheat thicker and greener than ever. But what of the blistering suns of summer? The new farmer prepared for them by blanketing his land to keep the sun from drying out his subsoil. For this purpose a dust mulch was spread over all the sowed land. The rays of the sun were reflected by it and underneath the moisture nourished the roots of the wheat, though the tops were dry.

The experiment succeeded, and the country had been proved "good for something, anyhow."

This mode of scientific conservation of the moisture has been the root of all growth. Through it alfalfa, with its stout roots digging far down to the subterranean springs, has been made possible. Through it the first sugar beets were grown.

These are, to be sure, vastly separable products, having to do with distinct industries. Alfalfa means cattle and sugar beets mean sugar mills and towns. Alfalfa came first. Then corn came, and then the cattle were introduced anew.

Now all through these regions are great ranches where hand fed and fattened cattle are produced—not the gaunt range steers of Texas, but fat cattle, ready for the market and commanding top prices.

Bird Fights Fisherman.

An old Aberdeenshire fisherman who fishes daily in Cruden Bay had an exciting fight with a great northern diver, a somewhat rare bird, says the Detroit News-Tribune, which can dive a great depth for any fish it may fancy.

The man was plying his rod about a mile from the shore when suddenly he felt a series of unusually powerful tugs at his line.

He began pulling in the catch and had hauled it nearly aboard despite a resistance which lashed the water into a fury, when the diver suddenly darted from the sea into his face with a force that almost hurled him overboard.

Before he could recover himself the bird swooped down again and then whirled round him. In one of its mad dashes it split open the back of his hand. In another it struck him above the eye with its beak, inflicting a wound two inches long and laying the bone bare.

Using one of the boat stretchers as a weapon, the fisherman was able with a lucky blow to break the wing of his infuriated assailant and then kill it. He rowed ashore and his wounds were stitched by a doctor.

The diver was found to measure three feet across the wings and when the bird was cut open a small hooked whiting was discovered. The bird had no doubt seen the fish wriggling on the line and, diving twenty feet, had swallowed it and been also hooked.

For Old People.

After reaching the age of forty the human system gradually declines. The accumulated poisons in the blood cause rheumatic pains in the joints, muscles and back. These warnings should be promptly relieved and serious illness avoided by using the following prescription which shows wonderful results even after the first few doses and it will eventually restore physical vigor.

"One ounce compound syrup of Sarsaparilla; one ounce Toris compound; half pint of high grade whiskey. This to be mixed and used in tablespoonful doses before each meal and at bedtime." The bottle to be well shaken each time." Any druggist has these ingredients or he will get them from his wholesale house.

Rare Fruits.

Among the products of the Philippines are two delicious fruits entirely unknown to Europe and America. One of these is the durian, whose remarkable qualities have been descanted upon by visitors to the archipelago.

The durian grows on a lofty tree somewhat resembling an elm, is about as large as a cocoanut, has a shiny shell, and contains a creamy pulp which combines some of the flavors of a delicious custard with those of a fine cheese. American soldiers in the Philippines have dubbed the durian the "vegetable Limburger cheese."

The other rare fruit is the mangosteen. The exquisitely flavored liquid it contains cannot be preserved for shipping abroad.

WESTERN CANADA

What J. J. Hill, the Great Railroad Magnate, Says About its Wheat-Producing Powers

"The greatest need of this country [United States] in another generation or two will be the providing of homes for its people and producing sufficient for them. The days of our prominence as a wheat exporting country are gone. Canada is to be the great wheat country."

This great railroad magnate is taking advantage of the situation by extensive railway building to the wheat fields of Western Canada.

Upwards of 125 Million Bushels of Wheat were harvested in 1909. Average of the three provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be upwards of 33 bushels per acre.

Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining pre-emptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre), are to be had in the choicest districts.

Schools convenient, climate excellent, soil the very best, railways close at hand, building lumber cheap, fuel easy to get and reasonable in price, water easily procured; mixed farming a success. Write as to best place for settlement, settlers' low railway rates, descriptive illustrated "Last Best West" (sent free on application), and other information, to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to the following Canadian Gov't Agents: W. Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard more women's secrets than any other man or woman in the country. These secrets are not secrets of guilt or shame, but the secrets of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their expectations is proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent. of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and altogether cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the cases treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that record applies to the treatment of more than half-a-million women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and entitles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude accorded him by women, as the first of specialists in the treatment of women's diseases.

Every sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, absolutely without charge. All replies are mailed, sealed in perfectly plain envelopes, without any printing or advertising whatever, upon them. Write without fear as without fee, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

SKIN WAS ROUGH AS BARK.

Baby Boy Had an Intense Itching Humor—Scratched Till Blood Ran—Found a Cure in Cuticura.

"Our son, two years old, was afflicted with a rash. After he suffered with the trouble several weeks I took him to the doctor, but it got worse. The rash ran together and made large blisters. The little fellow didn't want to do anything but scratch and we had to wrap his hands up to keep him from tearing the flesh open till the blood would run. The itching was intense. The skin on his back became hard and rough like the bark of a tree. He suffered intensely for about three months. But I found a remedy in Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. The result was almost magical. That was more than two years ago, and there has not been the slightest symptom of it since he was cured. J. W. Lauck, Yukon, Okla., Aug. 28 and Sept. 17, 1908."

TORNADO HITS TERRE HAUTE.

Damage Caused by Wrecking of Buildings and Windows.

Wrecking buildings and uprooting trees, a tornado visited Terre Haute at noon Sunday and caused damage amounting to more than $20,000. The little daughter of J. V. Chatfelter, who was with her father when their buggy was overturned, was seriously injured. Large plate glass store fronts were wrecked and hundreds of smaller windows were broken. The heaviest damage was caused at Goldsmith's wholesale commission house, where the roof was lifted up and then crushed down in the wrecked building. The roof of the Hulman and company's wholesale grocery house also was wrecked. The walls of the Wabash distillery collapsed.

BOY OF 16 KILLS PLAYMATE.

Slayer's Mind Said to Have Been Inflamed by Reading Dime Novels.

Claude Williams, 16 years old, his mind inflamed from reading dime novels of blood curdling climaxes, shot and killed little James Hall, 13 years old, in Cannelton, then eluded the sheriff and escaped to the Kentucky shores, where he still is in hiding in the woods. Although the youngest child of respectable parents, the Williams boy has shown an ugly disposition, it is said, since he began reading novels of a lurid type. He quarreled with the Hall boy over a trifling matter, when, it is alleged, he deliberately aimed a rifle and shot the latter in the forehead and eye.

TRAIN WRECKS DEPOT; 6 HURT.

Mail Clerk Probably Fatally Injured in Accident on Railway.

Six persons were injured, one probably fatally, and the station at Lewisville demolished when the Pennsylvania Railroad St. Louis-New York flyer ran into a defective switch. Otto Schoen, a mail clerk, was seriously injured. No passenger was hurt. The engine and first car passed safely over the switch, but the rest of the train took the siding. The first mail car plunged down a fifteen-foot embankment. The second mail car dashed into the depot. All the injured were mail clerks.

NEW RAILWAYS IN CENTRAL CANADA.

American Settlers Welcome and Doing Well.

The Portland Oregonian, of Portland, Oregon, published a cartoon on the immigration of U. S. people to Canada, in its issue of October 5, 1909. The picture was accompanied by the following article:

"Losing American Citizens. The exodus of American farmers to Canada continues to be a phenomenon of the first importance. More of them are crossing the border this fall than ever before, and they are flocking thither from all parts of the country. Formerly it was the Middle West alone which thus lost the heart of its citizenship. Now all sections of the Union suffer alike. The regret which we cannot help feeling over the migration of many thousands of excellent citizens has an economic side which causes some concern. The 70,000 farmers who will go to Canada to live this fall will take with them some $70,000,000 in cash and effects. This is by no means a negligible sum, and makes a very appreciable drain on our resources. But, of course, the most serious loss is the men themselves and their families, who have forsaken the land of the free and the home of the brave to dwell under the rule of a monarch.

"Why do they go? Naturally the cheap and fertile land of Western Canada attracts them. Each emigrant goes with a reasonable expectation of bettering his fortune. Indeed, in a few years he may grow rich through the abundant crops he can raise and the increase of land values. But perhaps that is not the sole reason for the astonishing migration. There is a common notion abroad that in Canada life and property are appreciably safer than they are here. Murders are not so frequent, and are more speedily and surely punished. Mobs and the so-called 'unwritten law' are virtually unknown in Canada. Again, the law is a vastly more ascertainable entity there. Canada does not permit its judges to veto acts of a legislative body. When a statute has been enacted it is known to be the law of the land until it is repealed. This naturally imparts to Canadian civilization a security and stability which we have not yet attained.

"We must remember, in the same connection, that the Canadian protective tariff is far less exorbitant than ours, and much less boldly arranged for the benefit of special favorites. Hence there is an impression, very widely diffused, that the Canadians are not so wickedly robbed by the trusts as we are in this country. Reasons like these sufficiently account for the exodus of a body of citizens, whom we can ill afford to lose, but they do not much assuage our regret that they cannot be retained in the United States."

Speaking of this, a Canadian Government representative says that the Americans who cross the border are most welcome. The splendid areas of virgin soil, a large quantity of which is given away as free homesteads, lies close to existing railways and to those under construction. The railway lines that are assisting in this development are the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific. The latter is built entirely on Canadian soil, and has opened up a wonderful stretch of land. Along this line during the year about closed thousands of American settlers have made their homes. They have built the towns, and immediately began as factors in the building up of the great Canadian West.

Agents of the Government are located in various cities throughout the United States who will be pleased to give any information that may be desired to further the interest of the settler.

A Mild Hint.

Two guests came to spend the evening and didn't know when to depart. The host and hostess were patient with them, very patient, but when 11, 12 and finally 1 o'clock struck, the husband realized that something must be done. He was an original chap, and in his droll way he looked over at his wife and said mildly:

"My dear, hadn't we better get up to bed? Our friends may want to be going."

Died at Eighty-eight as Predicted.

Prophesying early in life that she would live to see her eighty-eighth birthday, Miss Julia H. Hancock, of Brockton, Mass., died a few days ago on the day she had previously set for her death. Infirmities of age are given as the cause. She gave no particular reason for her prediction, although she seemed imbued with the belief that her prophecy would come true.

Be Careful with Guns.

We desire to give our young friends a bit of advice and that is, be careful with your guns while hunting. Several instances where young men have met sudden death in this way have come to our notice. Last Saturday morning, Allen, the 16 year old son of Carl Germer and wife of Waterloo, was instantly killed, while he and his brother were enjoying a little hunt. The load entered his breast and death was instantaneous. Just two weeks ago a young boy east of Hicksville met death in the same way.

Indiana Win Corn Prizes at Corn Show.

Fred C. Palin of Newton, Ind., has won the prize for the best ear of corn in the world at the National Corn Exposition being held in Omaha, J. R. Overstreet of Franklin has won the grand champion sweepstakes for the best ten ears and another Indiana man, C. L. Kerlin of Franklin won the first prize for the best bushel of seventy ears in the world.

The exposition opened in Omaha, Monday, December 6 and continues until December 18. The judging was all done before the gates opened and the three Indiana men had the honors.

Mr. Palin wins the famous Kellog trophy, worth $1,000; J. R. Overstreet gets the $1,000 silver trophy offered by the Indiana Corn Growers Association, while Mr. Kerlin wins prizes worth $500.

This is the third year in succession which Indiana has won the grand champion sweepstakes at the National Corn Expositions.

"I have worked seven years to grow the best ear of corn in the world," said Mr. Palin. "Its parent stock consisted of Reed's Yellow Dent and Alexander Gold Standard. We planted two rows of one and then two rows of the other, cutting off the tassels of the Golden Standard corn the first two years. This gave us the seed from which the best ear of corn in the world was grown."

Judges who passed on the single ear said: "It is the best ear the world has ever produced. Indiana is to be congratulated as the ear is far superior to the famous Pascal ear. It is the most perfect ear we have ever seen, its kernals ⅔ of an inch deep and very little room is left for cob."

Bill Allowed by Town Dads

A regular meeting of the town board was held Monday night and all members were present and after the meeting was called to order and the minutes of the previous meeting was read the usual order of business was taken up and disposed of. First was the approving of the bonds of the newly elected Clerk and Marshal. After which a bunch of claims were allowed as follows: H. A. Kees for team work on the road west of the creek bridge and for gravel $57.70; to C. B. Leighty, town marshall, $25.50; to D. M. Link legal service $12.00; to John Betz, for cement work $6.00; to Sam Warner, for cement work $5.00; to Sol Barney, for cement etc., $5.10; to Bert Woodcox for labor $3.00; to Etza Kinsey for labor $1.77; and to Wm. A. G. Smith for lantern $1.00. This concluded the business for the evening session and adjournment was taken for two weeks.

The Drug-store Sold

A contract was made Tuesday between Harry Milliman and Mr. H. L. Dunkle of Hicksville, for the sale of the drug store and his residence. Mr. Dunkle will take possession of the store after Christmas and Harry will occupy his home until the first of March. Mr. Dunkle is a man of 12 years experience and is a successful drug dealer. He comes to us well recommended. Mr. Milliman has been in business here for a number of years and has made a grand success of it and St. Joe today has one of the finest drug stores in the state. The cause for Mr. Milliman disposing of his store is that his health does not permit him to stay so closely confined and for that reason he decided to let it go. The stock is up-to-date and is a desirable one. We welcome Mr. Dunkle and family to our city.

Tell me not in mournful numbers that the town is full of gloom, for the man's a crank that slumbers in these bustling days of boom. Life is real, life is earnest, and the grave is not its goal, every dollar that thou turnest helps to make the old town roll. But enjoyment and not sorrow is our destined end or way; if you have no money borrow—buy a corner lot each day! Lives of great men all remind us we can win immortal fame. Let us leave the chumps behind us and we'll get there just the same. In this world's bread battle, in the bivouac of life, let us make the dry bones rattle—buy a corner for your wife! Let us then be up and doing, with a heart for any fate; still achieving, still pursuing booming early, booming late.

READY FOR CROWDS

All Chicago Prepared to Entertain the Visitors to Land Exposition.

Never Such an Interest in Land and Irrigation Before—All Parts of the Country Responding to the Call to the Great Land Rally.

When the Chicago Tribune first proposed the Land and Irrigation Exposition the public little realized the furor it would create throughout the country. The emissaries of the exposition management have gone into every western state and aroused an interest that will have its climax on the opening day of the coming show.

Other representatives were sent throughout the east and south, calling to this great convocation everyone who is interested in land development.

The work has gone on and on with such energy and united effort that the coming event will be one of the greatest in Chicago since the Columbian exposition in 1893.

Approximately half a million dollars will be expended on this magnificent display of western and southern products and the marvelous possibilities in the states of the west and south.

Never has an exposition been undertaken in Chicago where the entire scheme of installation has been planned on such a harmonious scale. The great Coliseum will be a thing of beauty throughout its vast interior. The decorations will be true to the spirit of the whole enterprise. Coming as this exposition does at the time of the International Live Stock Show, Nov. 30 to Dec. 4, Chicago will offer, as theatrical people express it, a "double bill" to the people of the country. It is the greatest "combined show" of the period.

All the railroads centering in Chicago, and all of their connections at distant points have prepared for a large traffic in view of the widespread interest which this exposition has created.

Chicago is unquestionably the greatest land center in America. All of the large companies which are developing the country have their headquarters here, and it is entirely fitting that Chicago should take the lead in planning and carrying out an exposition on the grand scale which is now reaching a stage of completion. There will be no disappointment for the coming visitor. The vastness of our land interests will amaze those who consider themselves familiar with this nation's development.

The orchards of the northwest and the central mountain districts; the great stock ranches of Montana and other states; the orange groves and peach orchards of California; the rich valley lands of Arizona where all subtropical fruits grow in such wonderful abundance; the great coastal plains of Texas and Louisiana with their vast sugar and rice plantations, will all be represented in the exhibits, and the homeseeker may have a choice of countless opportunities which these various regions offer.

The United States government is lending its aid to this enterprise and will have numerous exhibits. The great work of drainage and irrigation and the equally important work of soil survey and crop production will all be in charge of experts who will give first-hand information to every inquirer. It will be a splendid school for everyone who is at all interested in the great land movement of the present day.

The invitation to attend this exposition is extended to everyone by Chicago, and by the Tribune management, to whose energies and financial support the country is indebted for this magnificent enterprise.

A Highway Robbery

About three month ago word was received in this community that John Wildeson, a United States sailor, who's home is at this place, and who enlisted in the navy about two years ago, was arrested in the state of Colorado charged with highway robbery. It was true of the arrest, but it was a suspicion on his part. And he was released by the courts of Colorado under the circumstances of being an innocent man of the charge. Another sailor by the name of J. C. Melton, was tried by trial and found guilty of the unlawful deed. He was convicted and John was released after the trial of Melton, for there was no charge against him Melton confessed he did the deed after he had been convicted, but John had a trip of seventy-five days in the county jail at Las Animas, Colorado, under the sum of $500 bonds, waiting for trial which was a few days ago in the district courts of Colorado, and we feel that John will never forget this trip to jail. He was on his way to town when the robbery occurred and was in the community of the tragedy, which occured last August. He was sent out West to do land duty at Fort Lyons, Colo., last spring. He says he likes the navy splendid, but does not care for any more trips to jail. He was turned back to the navy and will draw his full pay as before, and for the time spent in jail.

Under All Moods.

We are so apt, when everything seems desolate, to think that there is nothing in the world but our own mood. It comes like sunrise, sometimes, to remember that under all moods is the will of God.—George H. Morrison.

A. H. Bittinger Dead

Death called to rest Saturday afternoon Adam H. Bittinger, one of the best known, as well as oldest attorneys of the Allen County bar. A week previous he had been operated upon and following the operation appeared considerably improved but he suffered a relapse. The deceased was a brother of Mrs Peter Bisop of Auburn, who makes her home with her daughters, Mrs. Alice Zimmerman and Mrs. Kagey, and a brother-in-law of Elias Zimmerman. Mrs. Bittinger,s maiden name was Mary Hamilton, she was a member of the well known Hamilton family near here. Mr. Bittinger was born in Pennsylvania, January 24 1835, making his age 74 years. He came west in 1846 and to Indiana in 1857 locating in DeKalb county. In 1867 he began the practice of law in Ft. Wayne where he met with marked success. He has the distinction of being one of the attorneys in the longest trial ever held in Allen county the Neatel will case lasting nine weeks. He was a thirty-second degree mason taking this degree last November. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon under the auspices of the Scottish Rite Mason. His sister, Mrs. Bishop, who is now 83 years old, attended the funeral. Mrs. Bishop was the oldest of six children of whom but herself and the youngest brother, George L. Bittenger, of Kokomo, survive.

The Census Man.

When a gentlemanly individual appears at your door, pretty soon, feels your pulse, takes your temperature, asks you whether you are black or white, married or single, man or woman, and if so, why; whether you believe in the Monroe doctrine or are subject to the backache and whether you think the whale swallowed Jonah or Jonah swallowed the whale, don't be rude to him. He means well and he is merely asking the questions that the United States government says he shall ask. If he makes respectful inquiry as to the condition of your liver, just remember that the government is perhaps vitally interested in livers.

If he intimates that your ancestry is bad and your progeny is worse, try to think calmly that the government likely is concerned in, in enumerating family trees and may have some remedy to protect them from blights. A census enumerator does not really intend to insult you by his questions. If he does so it is an accident and you should not be offended. Besides, he only goes around once in ten years, glory be!

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

Train Goes Into Ditch.

Local passenger train No. 11, on the Southern railway, known as the Richmond and Atlanta train, was wrecked at Reedy Fork trestle, ten miles north of Greensboro, N. C., and eleven dead bodies have been removed from the wreckage. Fourteen in all are reported dead, and twenty-five injured are being cared for at St. Leo's Hospital. George J. Gould, who with his son, Jay Gould, was in one of the Pullmans when the train jumped the track, escaped uninjured. The derailment of the train was caused by a broken rail about two hundred feet from the trestle that spans the small stream. The train was composed of two baggage, express and mail cars, three day coaches and two Pullmans. The engine, baggage, mail and express cars passed over in safety while the day coaches and Pullmans were thrown from the trestle into the creek and along the banks some twenty to thirty feet below. At the point where the first coach left the track the right hand rail was broken into fragments for several feet and torn entirely from the ties. The truck wheels ran on the ties until near the trestle, when they went over, allowing the brake beams and axles to fall on the guard rail of the bridge. As the last coach was almost on the trestle the five coaches toppled over, broke loose from the mail and express cars and tumbled to the mud and water below. The Norfolk Pullman fell in the water submerging many passengers while the Richmond sleeper, just in front landed only partly in the water and was almost totally demolished. Most of the injured and killed in the sleepers were in the Richmond sleeper.

Girl Lives Long Under Ice.

Delia Krug, 11 years olds, of Denver, Colo., risked her life and nearly lost it in rescuing her pet spaniel from drowning. She was swept under the ice on the Mullin mill ditch in the suburbs of the city and carried 100 yards down stream. A dozen men who had seen the accident rushed upon the ice searching for a trace of the child, and one of them finally caught sight of her bright colored dress through the ice. All siezed bars and pieces of iron pipe and, breaking through the ice, brought the girl to the surface. She was unconscious and was revived with difficulty. The dog still clasped in her arms, seemed little the worse for its experience.

Fast Train Hits Street Car.

Dr. W. I. Stark was instantly killed and three persons dangerously injured when south-bound Vandalia passenger train No. 43 crashed into a street car at Sixth avenue in Terre Haute, Ind. The car was wrecked. It is said that the crossing gates were up and that the train was running fast to make up lost time. The crossing is considered a dangerous one. Dr. Stark had just boarded the car on his way to answer a professional call.

The will of Charles N. Crittenton, who founded missions bearing the name of his daughter, Florence Crittenton, in seventy-four cities in this country and in Shanghai, Mexico City and other foreign cities, filed for probate in New York City, leaves half his estate, estimated at between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000 to the National Florence Crittenton mission.

Wood to be Army Head.

Major General Leonard Wood, now in command of the Department of the East, will be the next chief of staff of the army. Secretary Dickinson recently made this announcement. General Wood will succeed General J. Franklin Bell, whose term at the head of the general staff will expire next spring.

Ship's Crew Goes to the Bottom.

The five-masted schooner Governor Ames, bound from Brunswick, Ga., to New York, with a large cargo of railroad ties, grounded and went to pieces off Wimble Shoals, twenty-five miles north of Cape Hatteras. The captain, his wife and the crew of twelve men were all killed or drowned.

The American Sheet and Tinplate Company, a subsidiary of the U. S. Steel corporation, will start at once the building of a large sheet and tinplate plant at Gary, Ind., at a cost of $45,000,000.

Boy Loses Leg Under Train.

Emil Auder, aged 12, fell under the wheels of an Illinois Central train at Evansville, Ind., and lost his right leg. The boy will die from his injuries.

RAILWAY RATE FIGHT OPENED BY CUMMINS

Iowa Senator Introduces Bill at Washington for Radical Changes in Law.

POWER TO THE COMMISSION.

Uniform Classification, Interstate Body to Act on Own Motion and No Court Interference.

A controversy over railroad legislation which for interest and importance promises to surpass the legislative conflict over railroad rates four years ago will be precipitated in Congress this winter. The first gun was fired by Senator Cummins of Iowa when he introduced a bill proposing radical changes in the interstate commerce act.

In brief, the Cummins bill requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to promulgate a uniform classification of freight and to prepare a plan for the statement of rates, which thereafter would be made in a uniform way. The carriers are required to adopt this classification. The commission is to be authorized to consider rates on its own motion, with a view to determining their reasonableness, and is empowered to fix maximum and minimum rates. In an action in court to set aside an order of the commission respecting rates, the courts would be prevented from inquiring into the reasonableness or sufficiency of any rate fixed by the commission.

The bill also provides that changes shall not become effective before they are approved by the commission. It prohibits acquisition of control of parallel and competing lines by any common carrier, or acquiring of capital stock or bonds of any other carrier that is a competitor.

A carrier is prohibited from issuing capital stock without payment at par either in money or in property, and, in effect, the commission shall have supervision of issues of stocks and bonds by any carrier. Specific directions are set forth for the disposition of the proceeds of any sale of bonds. After Jan. 1, 1911, no railway doing interstate business shall be permitted to engage in other business than that of a common carrier.

A resolution authorizing the President to take the necessary steps for the apprehension of President Zelaya of Nicaragua and for his punishment on the charge of murder, if the facts in the possession of the State Department warrant such action, has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Rayner. The resolution recites the circumstances connected with the execution of two Americans, Grace and Cannon, by order of President Zelaya, as generally understood through published reports from Nicaragua.

TWO DIE IN FLYER WRECK.

Northwestern Train Jumps Track at Northern Limits of Chicago.

The Chicago and Northwestern flyer No. 6—the 11:30 a. m. limited between Chicago and Milwaukee—while running forty miles an hour jumped the tracks at noon the other day at Howard avenue, the boundary line between Chicago and Evanston. The train was jammed into smithereens, two immigrants were killed, and at least eighteen passengers injured. The wreck took place in Chicago. The victims were killed in Evanston. The train jumped the track within the city limits, but had passed the boundary line before death visited the passengers. Just beyond the limits the locomotive, which had left the tracks, dislodged a rail. The rail curled up beneath the locomotive, punctured the floor of the baggage car like a great knife, and slit this car and the one behind it into distinct halves.

GROCERS CHARGE CONSPIRACY.

Government Begins Investigation of High Prices of Foodstuffs.

High prices of foodstuffs are being investigated by the United States District Attorney's office in New York, because of complaints by the largest wholesale grocers that there seems to exist a conspiracy among some manufacturers to maintain prices to the consumer. It is learned that several leading manufacturers of food products have been called before District Attorney Wise and informed that the contracts they have been using to force wholesalers to keep up prices are in restraint of trade and a violation of the anti-trust law.

U. S. WANTS YOUNG FIGHTERS.

Osterization Campaign Inaugurated in the Army and Navy.

An "Osterization" campaign in the army and navy has been inaugurated. Secretary Dickinson and Secretary Meyer announced in their annual reports that the time has arrived to put younger men at the top of the armed organizations of the country. The reform in the navy is made easier because of the general reorganization now in progress there. At present officers of sea fighters are promoted according to seniority alone. Selection for promotion and more retirements annually are changes urged.

SPECIAL DELIVERY.

BIG FIRE AT KALAMAZOO.

One Life Probably Sacrificed and Much Property Destroyed.

One life probably was lost, many firemen were overcome by smoke, 300 hotel guests were driven into the icy streets and property valued at $1,000,000 was destroyed by a fire which started in Kalamazoo at 10 o'clock the other night and was extinguished after an all-night struggle by the combined fire-fighting forces at Kalamazoo, Battle Creek and Grand Rapids.

Originating in the basement of the Star Bargain house, a 5 and 10-cent store on West Main street, the flames, fanned by a strong southwest wind, spread east along the north side of Main street, destroying the Burdick House, a four-story hotel and store building covering more than half a block. Along an arcade running north through the Burdick building to Water street were half a dozen small establishments, and these were burned. Sweeping east on Main street the flames made their way through the Postal Telegraph and American Express offices, Chase's shoe store, Cowlbeck's furnishing store, Kennedy's drug store and smaller business places.

To low pressure in the mains is attributed the spread of the fire. The city depends for its supply on artesian wells and the water from this source was inadequate. A large standpipe at the asylum was connected with the mains, but gave only a temporary advantage.

35 HURT IN CAR ACCIDENT.

Hit by Pennsylvania Train at Indianapolis and Hurled 30 Feet.

Thirty-five passengers on a street car were injured, none fatally, and few seriously, when the car was struck by an inbound Pennsylvania passenger train at the South street crossing in Indianapolis and hurled thirty feet. The car fell on a cement sidewalk and lay across the track, but the engineer stopped his train before hitting it a second time. Most of those hurt were injured in the panic which followed the crash.

It is reported from Rome that the Duke of Abruzzi has been promoted and is now a rear admiral.

Twenty sailing vessels went to the bottom and an unknown number of sailors were drowned in a storm which recently swept the Mediterranean sea from Port Said to Gibraltar.

An effort to draw the United States into the revolution in Nicaragua is being made by many who are circulating a petition asking this country to restore peace. The United States, the petition says, is the only country to which the Nicaraguans can look for assistance.

Canada's naval plans have been laid before Parliament. They provide for the construction of three cruisers of the "improved Bristol" class, and four destroyers of the improved river class. The cost of the cruisers is estimated at $75,000,000, and that of the destroyers at $1,500,000. The annual cost of maintenance of the vessels is estimated at $3,000,000.

TO DIE FOR MUTINY.

Members of Native Constabulary Will Be Executed in Davao Plaza.

Fourteen men of the Second company of native constabulary, stationed at Davao, Mindanao, which mutinied on the night of June 6, were sentenced to death after being convicted of murder. The murder charge was based on the killing of Roy Libby, a planter, when the mutineers attacked the town. The executions will take place on Davao plaza, the scene of the uprising, providing the Supreme Court upholds the decision. The trials were held at Davao, Judge Gate presiding. Twenty-three men mutinied, eight of whom were killed resisting arrest, while one turned state's evidence.

CHILD'S MURDERERS GET LIFE.

Hattie Zinda's Slayers Sentenced at Milwaukee After Confession.

Carl Wojciechowski and Adam Pietrzyk, the confessed murderers of 14-year-old Hattie Zinda, were taken into the Municipal Court in Milwaukee unexpectedly the other night and pleaded guilty. The men were about to be sentenced for life when Pietrzyk, who confessed that Wojciechowski committed the murder while he himself stood guard outside, asked for an attorney to make a plea for clemency. This request was granted. After a hearing, lasting three hours, both men were sentenced to life imprisonment and arrangements were made to start them to the state prison before daylight.

BOYS SEIZED AS MURDERERS.

Two of Trio Arrested for Robberies Are Identified as Slayers.

In the arrest of three youths, aged 17, 19 and 21, the Kansas City police believe they have found the perpetrators of numerous holdups. Two of the boys, Ralph Clyne and Louis Dye, were identified by a witness as the men who shot and killed M. A. Spangler Nov. 24. Spangler was killed in his saloon during an attempted holdup. His son, Samuel Spangler, was shot in both arms. The third prisoner, Harry Shay, was identified as the youth who accompanied Dye and Clyne on several expeditions.

RUINOUS STORM BRINGS JOY.

Drought Is Relieved and Thousands of Miners Can Get Work.

Wind and rain has done thousands of dollars damage in the coal regions of eastern Pennsylvania, but in relieving a long drought the storm brought untold benefit. During the last sixty days thousands of miners had been idle or working on less than half time because of the lack of water at the collieries. The mines can be put in full operation now. The wind in some places stopped the running of the electric lines and unroofed many buildings.

Injured in Train Wreck.

The Denver-Chicago east-bound express on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad was derailed at Exeter, Neb. Eight passengers were injured, only one severely.

Officials of New Mexico Named.

President Taft sent to the Senate the names of William J. Mills and William H. Pope, both of New Mexico, to be Governor and chief justice of that territory.

FROZEN TO DEATH IN SWAMP.

Lutheran Missionary Meets Fate in Effort to Keep Appointment.

Rev. Ole O. Fugleskie, missionary of the United Lutheran Church, disciple and associate of Rev. Frank Higgins, better known as the "Lumberjack Sky Pilot," was found frozen to death in an uninhabited and swampy region, southeast of Spooner, Minn., by a searching party of homesteaders. The hardy missionary left Nels Rippes' homestead hut at Silver Creek, afoot, at 2 o'clock on a recent afternoon for Clementson, thirteen miles away, where he was due to hold services that evening. When he did not arrive it was taken for granted by the assembled lumbermen and homesteaders that he had not started out, as a heavy snow was falling. He was found about ten miles from Rippes' place, at the edge of a floating bog, where he had dropped exhausted with his Bible open at his side.

LAKE SHORE TRAINS WRECKED

Twentieth Century Limited Collides with Slow Passenger Train.

The east-bound Twentieth Century Limited, shortly before 11 o'clock the other night, ran into the rear section of Lake Shore passenger train No. 10, also east-bound, at North East, Pa. Four persons were killed and many were injured, but all of the victims were on the slower train. The passengers on the Twentieth Century Limited were badly shaken up and scared, but no one was injured. One of the wheels of passenger No. 10, it is reported, broke down and the limited crashed into the rear.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, which instituted freight traffic on its new Puget Sound extension by rates independently of the other transcontinental lines, with some especially low tariffs on Oriental export and import business, has abandoned its independent attitude so far as the import traffic is concerned.

One hundred miles of eighty-five-pound rails have been ordered for the improvement of the Central branch, a subsidiary road of the Missouri Pacific system. The line traverses a rich section of Kansas. Governor Stubbs, of that State, recently threatened to institute receivership proceedings against the line unless it was speedily improved.

We are moving freight at the rate of a billion gross tons a year, and to do this we employ nearly two million and one-half freight cars, and nearly fifty thousand locomotives. We import about nineteen million gross tons of merchandise yearly, and export about fifty-two million gross tons. Our foreign trade shows a return of $3,000,000,000, and our domestic trade one of $21,000,000,000, annually. One-half of the world's ocean commerce moves along North Atlantic routes, and for the greater part of it our foreign trading is responsible. At this its volume is a drop in the bucket as against the great trunk-line tonnage in this country.

The Week in Congress

The Senate met promptly at 12 o'clock Tuesday, with a full attendance of Senators on the floor. The President's message was brought in shortly after the call to order and the reading began. The Senators manifested deep interest in the document, some following the reading and others turning over the printed pages to find subjects in which they were specially interested. Following the custom the message was referred to the committee of the whole. The Senate then held an executive session until 2:30 o'clock, adjourning to meet Friday. The House assembled at 12, and a few minutes after when the President's message was brought in there was a scramble to get copies. The actual reading of the document consumed a little more than an hour and a half. The message was referred to the committee of the whole and the House adjourned until Friday.

More than 350 bills and resolutions were introduced in the Senate Friday. A resolution presented by Senator Rayner authorizes President Taft to cause President Zelaya of Nicaragua to be apprehended as a common criminal for murdering two Americans. Ajourned until Monday. Many bills were introduced in the House, including one by Mr. Lundin, of Illinois, for a $2,000,000 postoffice on the West Side in Chicago; one by Mr. Sabath, of Illinois, providing a jury trial for persons accused of contempt of court, and a resolution by Mr. Sabath providing for an investigation of sugar frauds. Mr. Moxley, of Illinois, was seated. Mr. Kustermann, of Wisconsin, denied his interest in German shipping trade made him antagonize American ship subsidies. Adjourned until Monday.

Senator Raymer made a bitter indictment of Zelaya in the Senate Monday, calling for his trial for murder. Senator Depew introduced a bill for an exposition in 1913 to mark the emancipation day semi-centennial. Adjourned until Thursday. There was no session of the House.

There was no session of the Senate Tuesday. The President's annual message was referred by the House and distributed among the various committees after Mr. Payne and Mr. Fitzgerald, of New York, had clashed over a statement by the former commending the President's recommendations for economy in government departments. Mr. Hobson, of Alabama, gave warning of the nation's unpreparedness for war in a speech in favor of more liberal navy policy. Mr. Richardson, of Alabama, spoke for a liberal water way policy. Mr. McDermott, of Illinois, advocated free wood pulp. The District of Columbia appropriation bill was reported. The House agreed to adjourn from Tuesday, Dec. 21, over the holidays, reconvening Jan. 4.

BLIND EYEBALL TATTOOED.

White Surface Made to Match Young Girl's Healthy Optic.

An operation performed only a few times by the greatest eye specialists of the world was recently successfully completed in a Philadelphia hospital clinic. By the use of six needles, indian ink and a vegetable dye, the doctor succeeded in tattooing the perfect semblance of an eye on a young girl's blind eyeball, which was covered by an ugly white blemish the size of a 5-cent piece.

The girl sought to have a glass eye in place of the diseased tissues, which made her face repulsive to look at. The doctor, upon examination, found that the growth over the cornea was so strong that the delicate operation that came in his mind could be performed with a chance of success. Cocaine was inserted to destroy whatever sensibility remained, but no anesthetic was administered to the patient, who did not appear to suffer any pain while the operation was going one. The students saw the skillful hand of the doctor guiding the tattooing needles produce the semblance of an eye with the skill and patience of a trained artist on a surface that had been a blank white. India ink was used for the pupil. For the iris a vegetable dye which had been carefully experimented with was employed, and the brown color of the other and healthy iris in the girl's other eye was duplicated.

Alps Attract Hertzian Waves.

The fact has been established recently by military aerographists, showing that Switzerland is able to intercept any wireless message within a radius of 6,000 miles, owing to the attraction of the Alps Mountains for Hertzian waves.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

"The general conditions indicate that business is progressive, despite the hindrances interposed by rough weather, freezing and railroad difficulties in the Northwest. Bank clearings show a satisfactory gain, money is in broad request for commercial purposes and trading defaults have declined. Factory outputs in the principal industries exceed all former aggregates.

"Specifications assure considerable forward work at rail mills, forges and car shops. Improvement is maintained in structural steel activity, wire, machinery, hardware, electric and woodworking. The leather market is steady in values.

"Further increase is noted in factory capacity and hands employed in the Calumet district and additional furnaces are operating at South Chicago.

"Snowstorms impeded crop marketings and heavy freight and merchandise movements, but the lower temperatures stimulated a brisk demand for seasonable wares. Heavy-weight apparel, furs, jewelry, art and Christmas lines are freely bought. Mail and road orders continue their favorable comparison with a year ago in dry goods, footwear, clothing, woolens, men's furnishings and food products.

"Lake navigation closed for the season with results satisfactory to vessel owners. Earnings of the Chicago steam roads disclose notable gains in gross over those at this time last year.

"Bank clearings, $270,717,579, exceed those in the corresponding week last year by 6.5 per cent, and compare with $193,271,971 in 1907.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 20, against 30 last week, 41 in 1908 and 23 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 7 last week, 13 in 1908 and 5 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

Colder weather and the nearer approach of the holidays have stimulated trade generally throughout the North and West, and have even helped Southern trade. As the week advanced there seemed to be evidence that the railroad strike was losing its effectiveness as a trade deterrent.

In wholesale lines there is something like a seasonable quieting down shown. There is no particular evidence of slowing down in industrial operations.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Dec. 9 were 259, as against 230 last week, 293 in the like week of 1908, 284 in 1907, 220 in 1906 and 226 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 30, comparing with 25 last week and 60 in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

SAVANNAH IN A FRENZY.

Enraged Citizens Aid Police in Hunt for Murderous Negro.

Savannah was swept by a dragnet of police officers and enraged citizens the other night who were seeking a negro, charged with attack on one woman and the murder of his victim and two women companions in a home in the very heart of the city.

Sprawled hideously about the hall and rooms of their home, Mrs. Eliza Gribble, aged 70 years, and her daughter, Mrs. Carrie Ohlander, were found dead early in the afternoon by a patrolman, who was attracted by the moans of a third woman, Mrs. Maggie Hunter, aged 32, who died later, with her skull beaten in, at the Savannah Hospital.

An ax was used, and physicians say Mrs. Ohlander was attacked. A negro woman who, it is said, lived for two days in an outhouse in the rear of the Gribble home, is missing. The murders were most brutal. Mrs. Gribble was killed as she sat in her easy chair reading. Her gray hair is blood-clotted where the ax crushed her skull. Beside her body on the floor were her newspaper and her spectacles. One blow, or two at the most sufficed to end her life. Mrs. Hunter was found by a patrolman as he stepped inside the front door. She was probably struck down as she attempted to escape from the house.

In the hope of securing the murderer of the three women the police dragnet in Yamacrow, a negro district, caught 150 negroes. This is only a start, as the police are determined on the arest of every negro in any way resembling the description given of the murderer.

DIE IN TENEMENT FIRE.

Sleeping Families Trapped in Burning Building in Cincinnati.

At least seven lives were lost and scores more injured in a tenement house fire at 327 and 329 East Third street, Cincinnati. The building is a four-story structure with tenements on every floor except the first. The hallways are lighted by kerosene lamps, and in some way the lamp on the second floor was upset and in a very few minutes the dry wood work in the hall was aflame. The blaze shot upward, making it impossible for the tenants to get out by way of the stairs. Some of them jumped out of the windows and were badly hurt. There were fifty people in the house at the time.

The first fireman to reach the scene saved several persons from the rear of the burning building. One captain carried down two dead bodies on the ladder and several others were found huddled together on the fourth floor.

While the fire was still burning it was estimated that fully half of the fifty occupants of the tenements were either dead or badly injured. The bodies taken to the morgue were so badly burned that identification was impossible.

LOST IN LAKE SHIP FIRE.

Clarion of Anchor Line Is Swept by Flames.

Two men lost their lives and thirteen others are believed to be near death as a result of the destruction of the steamer Clarion by fire near Point Peelee, in Lake Erie. The cause of the fire is not known. The first mate and one of the crew perished. The captain and twelve members of the crew are adrift in a steel lifeboat. They have not been heard from since leaving the ship. One of the victims was frozen to death and another was drowned. Six men were taken off the burning boat by the steamer L. C. Hanna, bound for Buffalo. It is feared that the thirteen adrift in the lifeboat will succumb to the cold.

EDITORS TARGETS FOR BOMBS.

Two Explosions in St. Louis Are Aimed at Lives of Writers.

Dynamite bombs have been the weapons used against two newspaper men in St. Louis. The residence of Harry B. Wandell, city editor of the St. Louis Star, was dynamited at an early hour the other morning. The front door and windows of the Wandell house were blown out. A man was seen running away. No one was injured. Wandell refused to discuss the cause of the explosion. Recently he was slugged as he was entering the Star building. Explosion of a bomb in the desk of George C. Dyer, publisher of the Censor, a weekly publication devoted to scandals, completely wrecked his offices.

FIVE DROWN SLEDDING.

Father and Four Children Break Through Ice in River.

A hole in the ice and a sled floating in the black waters bore mute evidence of a drowning accident on the Cuyahoga river at Kent, O., in which five persons went to death unseen. Of a family of seven, the mother and her young baby only survive. The dead are: Frank Cormanie, aged 33 years, and his children, Florence, aged 9; Helen, 7; Mabel, 4, and Russell, 2. Shortly after noon the other day Frank Cormanie took his three daughters and little son to the river for a sled ride on the ice. A neighbor who visited the Cormanie home in the evening and found the mother distracted went to the river and discovered a hole in the ice and the sled floating in the water. Further search resulted in finding the bodies.

CHAPTER XXV.

Irene Garland had gone out driving that afternoon in Mr. Taunton's phaeton. During that drive she was absent and preoccupied; Joe had once or twice to ask the same question several times before she heard him, and her far-away eyes saw no one in the crowd of faces that she passed along the streets. She had certainly never noticed poor Algy Dessinger—who imagined himself to be intentionally slighted, and who went his way to say hard words about her to his friends at the club.

"Are you feeling ill, Irene?" inquired Joe Taunton, looking down anxiously at her, after they had driven to her home.

"I have a headache," she answered, evasively.

"That day at Chatswell yesterday was too much for you. Your aunt shouldn't have allowed you to go. What is the use of your fagging yourself over a parcel of ragged children?"

"I like going there," she replied, faintly. But she knew that Mr. Taunton was right, and that it was the day at Chatswell that had upset her.

It seemed to her now to be certain that she had been the victim of circumstances of almost unparalleled fatality; and at least one-half of the hard things she had laid to Rupert Carroll's account had no truth in them. He had been prevented by a ruffianly and brutal assault from returning to her at Chatswell; and this assault had apparently been made upon him in error, and because he was curiously like some other man. It had now become revealed to her, little by little, that it was this other mysterious person whom she must have mistaken on several occasions for him. He it must have been whom her aunt had seen and spoken to, long ago, and who had denied all knowledge of herself and her mother. He again was the man she had seen at Monte Carlo; then at Lady Clothilda's ball; and lastly at the picture gallery! Who was he, this double of Rupert Carroll's, who resembled him in such an extraordinary manner?

She said to herself, with mingled feelings of self-reproach and of joy:

"How could I suppose that Rupert would cut me? How would it have been possible for him to do that? What a fool I must have been not to know that he was incapable of such baseness!"

Yet still there remained the fact of his marriage. That, she could neither understand nor get over.

Why had he married? Why, when he got well enough, did he not write to her at once and tell her what had happened to him, and explain his silence? She thought and thought about it till her brain went round, and there was no untruth in the statement she made to Joseph Taunton, that she had a headache.

"Come," he said to her, seeking to cheer her up, "let us go to old McGillup's and get you a new bracelet. I saw a beauty there yesterday."

"You are very kind, Joe, but I don't want anything."

Then after a moment's pause she said suddenly:

"Joe, if I weren't to marry you after all, would you care very much?"

Mr. Taunton started so violently that he pulled his handsome bays back almost on to their haunches.

"Irene! What an awful thing to say!" he cried, his ruddy face paling into a pasty yellow. "You can't mean it, Irene! You can't mean it!" he repeated with such a face of horror and dismay that she laughed again. But her laugh died away into an uneasy sigh, and she did not say that she did not mean it.

Suddenly he turned round to her and said:

"I know that you are a million times too good for me, Irene! I know it quite well; you are such a beauty, and such a little lady, too, and I am only a common sort of chap, with nothing on earth but my money to recommend me."

It was an unanswerable truth, and Irene could only bend her hear and murmur:

"Oh, Joe!"

"Yes, that is all," he continued; "and I used to think a lot of my money once, and that I could buy anything with it—anything, including a wife, my dear—and when I saw you I said to myself that you were the wife for my money, and that I would buy you. But I've found out lately that there is just one thing all the money in the world can't buy, no, nor yet the diamonds, nor the horses and the carriages either, and that is a girl's heart."

"Joe," she said below her breath, "do you—do you wish to be rid of me?"

"Rid of you, my dear? No, no! not that! You know I worship the very shadow of you, but that is just why somehow I don't want to tie you down if it's not to make you happy. I don't want to be one of your fashionable husbands, whose wife is surrounded by other men, and who would rather be along with any one of them than with her own husband. I want my wife to be my very own, and to like me better than all the rest—but I'm pretty sure you couldn't do that, no, not if I were to buy up all the diamonds and all the finery in London to give you!"

Then Irene lifted her beautiful grey eyes, and looked at him gravely and fixedly.

"Joe," she said, a little tremulously, "I have never liked you so well in all my life as I like you at this moment. I did not know it was in you to be so good and so generous. I feel myself to be mean and hateful, because I have taken so much from you, and I can give you back so little. But, anyhow, I won't deceive you. I like you and I honor you—but I don't love you, Joe, and what is more, I never shall, because I love someone else."

He turned away from her to hide the distress that her words caused him.

"You shall be my judge, Joe," she continued, laying her hand softly and caressingly on his coat-sleeve; "it is you who shall decide for me. This man—I knew him a long time ago, and we were engaged, then we were parted, an accident—that seems like the work of a malevolent fiend, so strange and so mysterious was it—divided us as completely as death itself could have done. Until yesterday I did not know the truth. I believed him to be false and base and cruel, and I strove with all my might and main to hate and to forget him."

"And yesterday?" he inquired, faintly. "Did you see him yesterday?"

She shook her head sadly.

"No. I have not seen him. But I learnt something I had never known before—enough to piece together the disjointed ends of the miserable story. I learnt that it was not his fault at all, and so—I can no longer hate him. I wish to tell you this, Joe, it is only right you should know it."

"My dear girl," said Taunton, earnestly, in a low voice, "I honor you for telling me, and since you love this man, and not me—well, let me go out of your life, and be happy with him."

"That is impossible, Joe!—for he is married!"

"Married!" and the blood flushed hotly up into Mr. Taunton's face. "Then there is no reason why you should give me up, then?"

"Not—if you wish me still to be your wife."

He thanked her and he blessed her effusively with joy and gladness, and yet her white face of patient sadness must have been a reproach to him. Irene was standing where he had left her, in the center of the room. She looked pale and sorrowful, her head was bent, her eyes were filled with tears, her hands closely locked together.

"Look here, my dear," he said to her, with a certain awkward bluntness that was natural to him. "I want to say one more word. I am a selfish beast, I know, yet I love you so much I can't bear to think of your being unhappy. If by any chance you should change your mind—between now and to-morrow morning, say—well, you let me know. I won't complain, only if I don't hear from you by first post to-morrow, I shall know it's all right—and you won't chuck me over after that, will you?"

"I won't 'chuck you over,' Joe, at all!" she answered, with a little smile, and she meant it. For she said to herself: "I have treated men badly, but this one man has treated me so well, that I will not behave ill to him. I took him for his money, simply and solely, and I have found out that, vulgar and purse-proud and common as he is, he has got a good heart and a generous nature with it all, and I will not reward his goodness to me with evil."

"Heaven bless you, my dear girl," he said, turning back to look at her once more, as he left the room. She smiled back at him kindly. Neither of them knew that it was their last parting on earth!

After he was gone, she put on her hat again and went out. She felt a need of fresh air and of exercise. Chance—or was it fate?—led her aimless steps in the direction of Chester Square. It was now about half-past 6 o'clock.

As she turned out of Eaton Square, she suddenly saw a gentleman walking along the pavement in front of her. His figure, his walk, a something in the swing of his footsteps, set her heart beating strangely. She followed him at a distance; she saw him turn into Chester Square, and go up to a certain door. There were two carriages standing before the house. As he pushed latch-key into the door, he looked round, as though in surprise that they should be standing there empty, and as he looked round, Irene Garland saw his face quite plainly, saw, too, that his hair, thick and curly as of old, had turned nearly white—but the face, the features, the eyes, there was no mistaking them!

At last she had seen Rupert Carroll himself! She turned away quickly and went home. And all that evening she sat up in her room writing to Joseph Taunton; and just before going to bed, she slipped out and posted the letter herself in the pillar-box in front of the house, so that it might reach him by the first post in the morning.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Lady Garland came down to breakfast the following morning some minutes earlier than her niece. She made the tea, and then she began to look through her morning's letters. Most of them were bills, and she flung them down one after the other in a heap on the table beside her.

"One comfort is that nearly all of them are for Irene's trousseau," she said to herself with satisfaction, "and that generous fellow Taunton will pay every one of them!" and then she chuckled to herself over her own cleverness in having managed that her own wedding garment of expensive heliotrope satin, profusely trimmed with lace, should be entered in Irene's bill, and that it was therein described in such vague terms that Mr. Taunton would certainly pay for it with all the rest without a suspicion of its being hers!

She had scarcely finished reading her letters when a cab dashed up to the house, and the door-bell was rung loudly. After a few minutes' delay the butler opened the door.

"If you please, my lady, Mr. Taunton's valet wished particularly to speak to you."

A man came in whom she had frequently seen in Grosvenor Square. His appearance struck her as odd. He was unshaved and unkempt, his eyes were wild and bloodshot, he trembled very much, and seemed scarcely able to speak. He wasted no time in preliminaries, nor in beating about the bush, that which he had to say he said quickly, and with no preamble whatever.

"If you please, my lady, Mr. Taunton, my master, died in his bed not an hour ago!"

"Great Heavens! you cannot mean it!—it is impossible," cried Lady Garland, in positive horror.

"No, my lady—it was not impossible, my master was subject to fits. I believe it was his heart. I had just taken him in his hot water and his bath, and then I went to fetch him his letters."

"His letters—yes?" said a faint, suffocated voice behind him.

Irene, as white as the white morning dress she wore, had stolen into the room—she had overheard the news he brought.

"Go on, Barker, and the letters?—the letters?—did he open them?"

"No, miss—not one. I gave him his letters and I drew up the blinds, and then I went away to get his shaving water—I couldn't have been gone five minutes—and when I came back again he was lying back dead on his pillow with a letter—yes, I think it was in your handwriting, miss, clutched tight in his hand."

"He had read it?" she faltered.

"No, miss, the envelope was not broken—he must have died in a minute—he just took up the letter from the tray, I suppose, and then fell back dead!"

"Oh, thank heaven for that!" cried Irene, and she burst into a tempest of passionate tears and sobs, that were almost more of gratitude than of sorrow.

WON'T SUPPORT DIETETICIANS

Just as Well to Eat What You Fancy, Declares a Medical Editor.

"Many millions of quiet citizens eat what they please, achieve as green an old age as the most pig-headed dietetician, are for the most part unconscious of the workings of the alimentary canal, yet do not suspect they are the most wretched of empirics, in groveling ignorance of the glorious accomplishments of a priori conclusions on questions of diet," says the New York Medical Journal.

"We are informed that there are, in divers parts of our fair land, sanatoria where the bills of fare are arranged in tabular form to enable one to calculate quickly the proteid, carbohydrate, and saline percentages of the various items. Carefully instructed by the house physician, the long lines of patients, pencils in hand, add and subtract till the proper proportions for each individual diathesis have been ascertained, when the orders are given to the keepers—we mean waiters.

"We understand that a strict Fletcherism is enforced in these places, no fewer than thirty-five jaw movements being permitted to each mouthful; conversation being impossible, the feeders sitting 'all silent and all damned,' an orchestra is permitted to do its worst. If we have confounded the rituals of two sects of the dietreligion, we apologize.

"What do our neurologists think of thus centering the mind on the digestive system? If there is a law of diet it is that there are as many laws as individuals. 'One man's meat is another man's poison' is an aphorism founded on profound observation; to attempt to marshal the multitudinous dyspeptics into platoons and regiments is useless and unkind. Vegetarians there are, but they quarrel among themselves as much as they do en masse with the carnivorous; the utmost freedom of individuality should be accorded them.

"Raw meat feeders may deserve respect if not imitation; breakfast food devotees, who prefer to pay four times the price of bread for the same thing, are harmless under persecution; back-to-nature cranks should be permitted to proceed thither, crabwise, unhindered.

"Never should a concerted attack be made on these people; they should be allowed to destroy themselves individually. They should not be permitted to organize in gangs to molest normal diners; we object to these monomaniacs, as we do to prohibitionists precipitating themselves upon persons of normal appetite and thirst who wish to be let alone."

Out of Practice.

"Well, I've got a job at last. It begins to-morrow morning and it's in a factory where there are a lot of girls. I'm more than half afraid to tackle it."

"Afraid of the girls?"

"Naw. Of the work."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Polar Perils.

"So you think that the danger of arctic expeditions has increased."

"Yes," answered the explorer. "New perils confront us. We will now have to take chances on the rivals who may be trying for one another with snowballs molded around brickbats."—Washington Star.

False Teeth Trade.

Some idea of the general use of false teeth may be gathered from the statement that 20,000,000 of them are exported from America to England every year. When we consider that probably not more than half the inhabitants of Great Britain indulge in the luxury of false teeth, no matter how many grinders they may have lost, these figures would seem to indicate that nearly everyone in England suffers from defective or missing teeth. As far as observation goes, the United States is no better off than England in this respect.

STEADILY GREW WORSE.

A Typical Tale of Sufferings from Sick Kidneys.

Mrs. L. C. Fridley, 1034 N. Main St., Delphos, Ohio, says: "Five or six years ago I began to suffer with kidney trouble and grew steadily worse until my health was all broken down. For weeks I was in bed and could not turn over without being helped. My back was stiff and painful, I was tired and languid, and when I was able to get around I could not do my work. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills helped me so much that I kept on using them until rid of every symptom of kidney trouble. During the past three years I have enjoyed excellent health."

Consular Tasks.

The American consul is a very popular and useful person, especially if there happens to be a celebration of any sort in his city. Mrs. Maud Howe Elliott, in her pleasant book, "Sun and Shadow in Spain," tells of the representative of the United States at Madrid during the strenuous days that preceded the wedding of the king of Spain. A friend dropped into his office to see him one day.

"Listen to this letter," said the consul.

"Dear Sir. My daughter and I arrive in Madrid on Saturday morning. As I hear the city is full on account of the wedding fetes, I must trouble you to engage rooms for us. They must be in a stylish but not too expensive house. We wish to go to the wedding, the ball at the palace and all the other entertainments. If you should be unable to secure us invitations, kindly ask the ambassador to attend to the matter. Yours truly, Mrs. Emerald Green."

Just as he stopped reading, a telegram was brought in by Pepe, the cherubic office boy. The consul sighed again as he read it out loud:

"Please wire answer to my letter immediately, stating address of rooms. Am sending large trunk to your care.

"E. G."

"Friends of yours?" asked the visitor.

"Never heard of them," said the good-natured consul. "Anyway, it's all in the day's work."

HABIT'S CHAIN.

Certain Habits Unconsciously Formed and Hard to Break.

An ingenious philosopher estimates that the amount of will power necessary to break a life-long habit would, if it could be transformed, lift a weight of many tons.

It sometimes requires a higher degree of heroism to break the chains of a pernicious habit than to lead a forlorn hope in a bloody battle. A lady writes from an Indiana town:

"From my earliest childhood I was a lover of coffee. Before I was out of my teens I was a miserable dyspeptic, suffering terribly at times with my stomach.

"I was convinced that it was coffee that was causing the trouble and yet I could not deny myself a cup for breakfast. At the age of 36 I was in very poor health, indeed. My sister told me I was in danger of becoming a coffee drunkard.

"But I never could give up drinking coffee for breakfast, although it kept me constantly ill, until I tried Postum. I learned to make it properly according to directions, and now we can hardly do without Postum for breakfast, and care nothing at all for coffee.

"I am no longer troubled with dyspepsia, do not have spells of suffering with my stomach that used to trouble me so when I drank coffee."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

If you are suffering from biliousness, constipation, indigestion, chronic headache, invest one cent in a postal card, send to Chamberlain Medicine Co., Des Moines, Iowa, with your name and address plainly on the back, and they will forward you a free sample, of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. Sold by H. M. Milliman, St. Joe; W. L. Wernert, Spencerville.

Why should people shy at the number 13? Is there any better number in existance? Doesn't the moon go around the earth thirteen times in a year? Didn't Uncle Sam start out with thirteen states? Look at "Old Glory." He waves his thirteen stripes forever. Look at the half dollar, thirteen stripes around the margin; thirteen leaves that deck the brow of the maiden fair. See the other side. Thirteen stars over the eagle's nest; thirteen arrows in his left talon; thirteen leaves on the laural branch in his right; thirteen quills in his tail and thirteen in each wing; thirteen bars in the shield on his breast and thirteen letters in "E Pluribus Unum." And then there were thirteen who sat at the "Last Supper" of Christ and the apostles. There are also thirteen letters in "Lucky thirteen."

Traveling Libraries.

One of the popular features of the Public Library Commission's work in Indiana is the loaning of the best fiction, history, travel and children's books free of charge to the people. For nine years these books have been sent to every section of the State, but there are many people who are still unaware of the free reading privileges they might have for the asking.

The only expense connected with the books is the prepaid round trip express rate. They are sent to any locality in the State for three months and may be retained for another three without extra expense. The libraries containing forty volumes are loaned to granges, reading circles, schools, Sunday schools, stores, clubs and into farm homes. The books consist of histories, biographies, agricultural books, volumes on finance, sociology, religion and others. With these are volumes of action, both standard and current also a collection of carefully selected books of a like general nature for the young people which are read as largely by the adult members of the family. The Commission sends out collections of fourteen to sixteen books for use in the study clubs and schools. There are nature study collections, domestic science, Shakespeare, Browning and Tennyson collections, libraries on the history, literature and art of the various countries, music, collections relating to the study of the Bible and others.

Finding lists are furnished on application so that the selections may be made from the different libraries.

The books will be loaned to any locality where five or more citizens will fill out the application blank sent to them by the Public Library Commission office, Room 58 State House, Indianapolis.

Stereoscopic views on the United States, Great Britian, Russia, Japan, China, Germany, France also folios of pictures on Europe, Asia, Africa, Central America, Canada, animals and birds, famous gardens, etc.

Letters are received from all parts of the State expressing gratitude for the books in the homes and schools.

There are 7600 books in the Traveling Library department loaned through out the State.

The Library Commission wishes to urge upon you the value of these books which in many instances means having the use of forty books for ten per cent of the cost of one.

If you are not interested for yourself endeavor to interest your neighbor and the young people of the locality. The Traveling Library department receives its appropriation for this work from the State and is therefore supported by the tax-payers. Why should not each one receive the benefits of the educational feature of State work he is helping to maintain?

LOCAL OPTION LAW UPHELD

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 16.—By virtue of a decision rendered today by the Indiana supreme court, the county local option law, which has caused the enlistment of much anxiety among supporters and non-supporters of the anti-saloon movement, has been declared constitutional and will remain on the statute books as an effective edict until its repeal by the legislature.

Two judges, Montgomery and Gordon, returned dissenting opinions in relation to the case up for disposal and Judge Hadley wrote the affirming opinion and Judges Meyers and Monks voted with him, therefore declaring the law constitutional.

A case involving the constitutionality of the county option law was appealed to the supreme court some time ago and that august body deferred action on it indefinitely. A decision was promised on December the tenth and since that date thousands of people have awaited with intense interest, the outcome of the deliberation of the jurists.

The supreme court canvassed the proposition thoroughly and accordingly rendered the decision. That the law is held constitutional will be welcomed by innumerable people over the state who have had opportunity to cast their votes against the open saloon.—Auburn Courier.

Notice to R F D Patrons

From a recent count made by rural carriers in one of the counties in the state of New York, of coins deposited by patrons in their boxes for the purchase of stamp supplies, it was found that each carrier in the county was collecting an average of 115 one-cent coins each week. This average applied to all the routes in operation throughout the country would give the enormous total of about 300,000,000 one-cent coins. As most of these coins are deposited loose in boxes, it is desired that patrons of rural routes provide themselves with supplies in advance of their needs, and to equip their boxes with suitable coin holding receptacles. The picking of loose coins from boxes not only results in needless hardships and sufferings to carriers in winter weather, delays the delivery and collection of the mails, but frequently results in actual money losses to the carriers, for, if in collecting coins from boxes, they drop them into the snow or on the ground without recovery, they are required to replace the amount out of their own funds.

We wish to kindly remind patrons of Rural Routes from this office to supply themselves with stamps and save the carriers this extra trouble and annoyance. Very Truly,

D. J. Baker,
Postmaster.

SPENCERVILLE NEWS.

A Department of the ST. JOE NEWS for the Spencerville People.

Elected Supervisor.

Supervisors were elected all over the state on last Saturday and the results were of interest to the voters of the rural districts only. The election here was an exciting one as it seemed to involve the wet and dry question more than that of the capability of the men making good roads. Spencer township had four candidates in the field and in all 127 votes were cast. The candidates and their respective votes were as follows:

John Bowman	4
Benjamin Wasson	10
Jerry Markle	51
Israel Horn	62

Mr. Horn made a firm stand on the dry question and as he had been supervisor for a number of years in this district, everyone knew that he understood the business and there was no use of changing men. While the other men for the office were probably capable, there is not much use of changing every year.

SETTLEMENT NOTICE.

Fell Upon Stick

Splinter Pierced Tonsils of Little Alva Rhorabaugh.

Dispatch

Alva Rhorabaugh, the little son of Mrs. Rheba Rhorabaugh, not yet three years of age, met with a very unfortunate accident Thursday morning. In playing with a stick the child fell upon it, running it in his mouth, a splinter breaking from it and lodging in his tonsils. Dr. Scuders was called and removed it. The splinter measured nearly one and a half inches in length and one-half of an inch in thickness. Mrs. Rhorabaugh will be remembered as Miss Rheba Spitler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Spitler of here.

Stolen Robes Turn Up

Some several weeks ago a blanket and robe was taken from rigs while hitched in town and last Saturday night they turned up. The blankets were taken from buggies owned by Argyl Beams and Roscoe Rickett. As they went in the Kline restaurant the blanket and robe was taken and no trace of it was to be had. Last Saturday night the party drove to town and hitched. As Mr. Beams passed the rig he noticed a blanket that resembled his and the party was setting in the buggy with the robe over his lap. Argyl went back to the store and the party left town without taking the blanket from his horse. In about a half hour the party came back but he failed to have either the robe or blanket. He was arrested by Esquire Allen and held until the sheriff arrived on Sunday morning, when he was taken to Auburn and is now a star boarder at the Thomas hotel. It proved to be Mr. Barney Kallener of near Newville. He was accompanied by two of his chums namely, Mr. Hart and Tomlinson, but they stated that they knew nothing of the affair. A party of five was formed and a search was made and the goods were found about half way between the S. H. Maurer and Warren Silberg farms in a fence corner. The prisoner claimed that he left town to avoid trouble and that the blanket and robe were bought from two tramps not long ago and he thought that they were stolen goods at the time. Perhaps the statement may be true but when the trial is called such gush won't go as he has been up before for misbehavior. Mr Kallener offered to settle for $25.00 or he would give his note for $200, but no settlement was made. If Mr. Kallener is guilty he should be dealt with severely as there is no cause for him doing such things. It is necessary that an example be made of persons who indulge in such things. What the outcome will be is to be determined.

Later we learned that he was arraigned before Justice Green at Auburn Sunday afternoon, charged with petit larceny and, waiving preliminary hearing, was bound over to the circuit court under $300. The trial has been set for the December term of court.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beams, Mrs. Rose Beams, Wm. Erick, Clem Treece, Frank Rhoads and wife, Emory Smith, wife and son, Ferne Wearley and Clara Keesler were holiday shoppers at Ft. Wayne, last Thursday.

Ethel Baker returned home Saturday evening from Auburn. Mrs. Baker will leave this week, to visit during the next few weeks with relatives at some point, we were unable to learn where.

Those boys who seem to think they are having a good time by annoying the church services, had better be a little more quiet. If this matter continues as before the boys will be dealt with severely. We hope this warning will be sufficient.

The last reports from Wm. Rhoads, who is now at the Lutheran hospital at Wayne, says that he is holding his own. He was operated on Wednesday of last week, and the cause of his illness was found to be a cancer in the stomach. The operation was performed as successful as possible, but it seems as though his trouble had been running for sometime and it is thought that his condition is serious. No one but the relatives are permitted to see him at the hospital.

Ring, merry bells, once more repeat
The old familiar story,
How the beloved Son of God
Came down from the realms of glory,
A blessed infant messenger
Of tidings glad and holy!

Ring, merry bells, and in the poor
Awaken hopes fast dying;
Ring! Let your sympathetic tones,
With human love complying,
Cheer the cold heart and colder breast;
Give faith in place of sighing.

Ring, merry bells, where homes are bright,
And plenty adds to pleasure;
Touch tender chords, that wealth may mete
From out her bounteous treasure
Gifts to the needy, joy to those
Who have but scanty measure!

Ring, merry bells, that youthful hearts,
And all whose heads are hoary,
May hear rejoicingly again
The angels' welcome story
Of Peace on Earth, Goodwill to Men,
And in the Highest—Glory!
—Needham Phillips.

"I have been in the habit of consulting my sons concerning their Christmas gifts for the last two or three years," said the grain broker to the man at the office-building cigar stand. "I mean that I have asked William what Richard would like and Richard what William would like. I have done that because I believed they would be in a position to know, and then it sort of flatters a kid's pride to share a secret with a grown-up person, besides establishing the right sort of confidence between father and son, which I think is a mighty good thing, too."

"It certainly is," agreed the cigar man.

"Yes," said the grain broker, reflectively, "it's a good thing. I called William into the library—he's 11—and I said: 'Bill, old boy, what do you suppose Dick would like for Christmas?

"'I think I know what he wants,' William replied. 'I heard him wishing the other day that he had one of these pearl-handled knives with four blades and a toothpick and a corkscrew and a little pair of tweezers and a thing to pull stones out of horses' feet and a saw blade and a gimlet and a can opener. And then,' he added, 'he's been wanting a fountain pen.'

"Soon after I took opportunity of calling Richard aside. 'Christmas is coming along here pretty soon, Dickie boy,' I said, 'What are we going to get for Brother Bill?'

"'He wants a watch,' said Richard, 'and his wheel's about worn out, and it's getting too small for him; and these air rifles—you know. He'd be awful pleased if you got him an air rifle.'

"Presently I heard a racket in the next room. I could make out Dick's voice raised in anger and now and then Bill chipped in. I opened the door and stood out in the hall. I was just going to holler at them to keep quiet when Richard shouted:

"'Yes, I did, too. You're a lobster.'

"'You didn't,' said Bill.

"'I did. I told you plain. I said a punching bag and a pair of skates and a fountain pen and a knife with them fixings and all you told him was just that measly fountain pen and the knife. I didn't leave out anything you told me, and I put in the new wheel that you didn't tell me. If that ain't being a mean sneak I don't know what is.'

"'I don't care,' says Bill, defiantly.

"'All right for you. I'll fix you. I'll go right back and tell him you said you didn't want any watch.

"I went back and closed the door softly.

"But wouldn't that jar you?"

SOME NEW YEAR THOUGHTS.

The Past Is Merely the Expression of the Living Present.

Commemoration of the beginning of the year is sentimental, purely, since the first day of January marks no special epoch in history, nor is it the anniversary of the birth or death of any hero.

In looking for the beginning of this practice, one must go into the prehistoric past, for New Year is the most ancient of all the days which men have set apart for special distinction. In the former days, though, it began with the advent of spring. The Latins, from whom came the months now used, celebrated their New Year as the nations older than they had done, in March. This explains why December, meaning "tenth" month, should be twelfth in our calendar.

The day, then, neither a festival nor a fast, did stand for a most beautiful sentiment—the revivifying of nature. It harbingered the banishment of cold; it gave assurance of a harvest for man, who could see in the bursting of the seeds autumn days of fullness.

Thus was it with the Chaldean, oldest of the civilized peoples, whence came Abraham, the founder of the Jewish nation. They were as puzzled as moderns are over the mystery of death, and that greater mystery, life. Of the generative principle they made a god and worshiped it. The presence of their god was felt, seen, as they taught, in the new garb put on by the trees, in the tiny spears of green grass which peeped through the sere blades of the previous year, and in the many-colored little flowers that nestled confidingly beside the grass-blades. Through century after century this religious and festival observance was had, and the remains of it are seen to-day in the chief holy day of the great Catholic church during the vernal season, although now held in commemoration of a grander and more glorious event.

The New Year observance, then, is the survival of a day beyond the period of its effective use. Once a sublime object lesson, it remains solely as a record of the beginning of a new year, arbitrarily fixed by man. It declares the mortality of all things, and it proves that the mortal shall put on immortality. It teaches the higher lesson that out of death comes life; that the dying year does but make way for the living year, and that the chasm is invisible between the dying and the dead. A single tick, just one tick of the clock, and in the minute interval the Old Year was and the New Year is, and from this lesson one may learn that the sum of all the lives that have been is but the expression of the lives that are, just as the result of all the years that have been is found in the New Year just begun.

Honoring Santa Claus.

Santa Claus was born in Patavia, in Asia Minor. That was not his real name. He was an abbot, and named St. Nicholas. He afterward became archbishop of Myra. At the latter place he died and was duly buried. In May, 1087, his remains were carried by some pious Italians to Bari, on the Adriatic coast. They are now at rest in a splendid church which bears his name. The people round about make a pilgrimage to his shrine every year. No one seeking food on that occasion is refused by the priests, while accommodation is given to as many pilgrims as the edifice will hold. On St. Nicholas day, Dec. 6, a great celebration takes place in his honor. Early in the morning the populace take his image from the priests and carry it through the town. At night the city is grandly illuminated.

CHRISTMAS CUSTOMS.

Gift-Making One of the Most Gracious Features of the Season.

"Gift-making is one of the most gracious features of Christmas, and one that I pray may survive all other outgrown customs," writes Florence Hull Winterburn, in the Woman's Home Companion. "When love and sympathy are close counselors there is little fear that we shall make the mistake of leaving out of our little one's stocking the particular thing he has set his heart upon getting. And if his choice hides its intention until the hour of fulfillment, and then lets out its secret in an outburst of generosity, is the best substitute that is ever offered for the special Providence—Santa Claus, and all other gracious myths.

"An example of generosity is seldom lost upon children if it is true, not artificial. They are very willing to live up to their little knowledge, if we allow them the chance, and part of our duty to the day is to encourage in our young people the same kindliness we cultivate in ourselves. It is so much easier to learn in youth to be genial, sympathetic and generous than it is after embittering experiences have hardened our hearts."

For the Children.

"Yes," said Mr. Blykins, "we always celebrate Christmas for the children's sakes. They expect it, you know, and I wouldn't have the heart to disappoint them." "But you and Mrs. Blykins always remember each other?" "Oh, yes. I am going to give her a two-hundred-dollar coat and I have reason to think she intends to give me a fifty-dollar chair. We always settle well in advance what our presents will be. All we have to think of now is a doll for the little girl and a tin wagon for the boy."—Washington Star.

Christ's Birthday.

There is something akin to sadness in the fact that in tracing the origin of many of our church festivals we find it in pagan celebrations antedating the Christian era. There is nothing certain even about the birthday of Christ. Some authorities assert that December was in the dry season, when shepherds were on duty day and night. In the controversy over the date, extending from December to May, Pope Julius (337-352) had an investigation made by St. Cyril and was satisfied that the 25th of December was correct. It was so established in the Roman church, and before the end of the fourth century the dictum was universally accepted.—Boston Herald.

Willie's Text.

After 5-year-old Willie had gone to bed on Christmas eve his mother went into the room to see if he had hung up his stocking properly for Santa Claus. Much to her surprise she found that the little fellow had appropriated one of hers for the occasion and had attached a slip of paper on which he had printed in a bold hand one of the Sunday school texts: "ThE LoRd LOvvEtH a CheaRfuLL giVveR."—Chicago Daily News.

His Delicate Proposal.

Gladys (on Christmas morning)—What a dear little clock! Who gave you that?

Marjorie—George, of course.

Gladys—Is it going?

Marjorie—Oh, no! George wishes me to understand that I may set my own time.—Smart Set.

Rather Discouraging.

Maude—Did Daisy Freshlight give your Slowboy any encouragement at the New Year's ball?

Clara—No, I think not. She asked him to marry her, that's all.—Chicago Daily News.

Greeting of the New Year.

Hail, Glad New Year! We do not ask
Our woes you should disperse.
We merely urge this simple task—
Pray do not make them worse.

Christmas in the Desert

There is a Christmas which calls up strange memories to me, writes a correspondent of the Montreal Star. I spent it in the Great Oasis of the Libyan Desert. It was full of marvels. We traveled on a railway that was not yet open across a savage and irreclaimable wilderness, which no traveler had even traversed before, save painfully with six days' journeying on camel-back over plains strewn with round boulders like ancient cannon balls, over plains snowed over with alkali, over hummocks of golden sand, over mountains seamed with terrific gorges, over sheets of contorted black rocks, like the lava fields of Mount Etna, always without sign of water, always without sign of life. On the plain behind the mountains as we flew down the swift incline we saw the faint green of the Oasis, and when we drew near it gave us the impression of a man taming the wilderness to grow low crops of bearded wheat and the bounteous berseem; not the palm trees shading clear pools, which were the oases we dreamed of in our childhood. And our party, it was so familiar and so unfamiliar—an Irish girl and Ruahbrooke, the sun-baked man in the government survey department who had surveyed the oasis prior to sale. His Arab servant, always in spotless white, was a picture. We had an absurd dragoman, a little Berberine, who wore a tarboosh and bursting tennis shoes, a black frock coat and trousers, to cook and wait on us in the desert.

The idea of a rest-house had terrified my wife; it was really high up in the scale of hotels. It had a bathroom and bedrooms, lofty and spacious, and in the center quite a fine hall, bay-windowed at one end, verandahed at the other, and with wooden columns up the center, where fifty sojourners could take their meals and refuge from the heat. It is easy to supplement bedrooms with tents, and all this was built of mud—mud three feet thick—its dark brown contrasted very pleasantly with the fresh pine window sashes and doors. There were no mosquitoes, so we could fling our windows wide to the lustrous skies, and hear the night sounds of Africa.

I was up in time to see the sunrise, flooding with golden light the pale green of the crops in front—crops at Christmas!—wide stretches of desert behind, and on the horizon the tumbled sea of mountains, the crest of the desert we had crossed. The angry grunt of a camel disturbed me. I went through the hall, and there, in our kitchen yard of desert, were five tall camels, objecting to lie down, as they would presently object to get up. Breakfast over, my wife, who looks upon the camel as a wild beast, and the manager's wife and the lunch were mounted on a trolley, which was soon flying up the line to the rest-house by the Temple of Darius, propelled by three stalwart Arabs in fluttering white robes, and the solemn camel-mounting ceremony began.

As we drew near Khargo, which gives the oasis its modern name, we saw high on our left the Roman fort where the founder of the Nestorians was an exile and a captive, and on the sand hills to our right saw whole streets of arcaded ancient Roman tombs standing out noble on the rises, like the tombs of the Mamelukes at Cairo, the most picturesque city of the dead among all the Roman ruins of the world. As we rode up to them we passed the camp of a scientific expedition from an American university. Their aims were very practical. The tombs and mummies were nothing to them—they were hunting for lost epistles of the early saints, for Christian papyri, in fact. At the present moment they were cooking a Christmas dinner in a much earlier rock tomb of pagan extraction. Being American, their idea of Christmas was a turkey. They were in the midst of a tragedy. The favorite gazelle, which had never seen a harsh look from man, had just been beaten for making its Christmas dinner off the only papyrus they had found. They had endured with patience its habit of eating mummy bandages. We dismounted from our camels and entered the Street of the Dead, looking as incongruous as possible, for the women were muffled in motor veils against sunstroke and dust.

The temple at Kharga will be very famous. Its pylons tower over a delightful grove of date palms, and when you have passed through the grove on velvety sand you come to a temple of a kind you have never seen before. For it is a Persian temple, built by the King Darius, who tried to conquer Greece. It is very odd, very elegant, very picturesque, and its light, bright colors are admirably preserved. I could have spent a whole day there, but time did not serve. It was 2, and we had breakfasted at 7, and there was much to see after lunch. So we rode down to the other rest-house, which looked like the palace of a New Guinea king, with its straw thatch and verandahs. As we drew near I saw a perfect Roman house, built of mud, of course. I wanted to go over it, but it belonged to a farmer, and he had locked his wife up in it, or perhaps his wives, and gone out into the fields for the day.

After lunch we rode on to Kharga, the oasis village, the most extraordinary sight of the day, for it was all one house, in which the passages are streets, with residences of one, two or three stories opening off them. This vast lump of mud has no exterior windows. The idea was to build a place where quiet people could live without being raided every day by the fierce Bedouins of the desert. Even the Bedouin hesitated to plunge into a ramification of dark passages with various man-traps only known to the inhabitants, and the inhabitants themselves waiting in security to assassinate him. The village is like a catacomb, built up from the ground, instead of tunneled into it. In the Pax Romana of British occupation the principal inhabitants have deserted the catacomb village, and live in large houses with gardens behind it. We were taken to call on the Omdeh, or headman, an infliction you generally have to put up with in Egypt when you are accompanied by residents; but this Omdeh in the oasis at the back of the desert was a most modern old gentleman. Instead of conversing by the hour and giving us cups of Turkish coffee, he gave us afternoon tea and cakes and barbaric fly-switches, which were most welcome, for all the flies which gave Beelzebub his title seemed to be there. The Omdeh took us to see the sight of the village—the lake created by the magic of the Corporation of Western Egypt. The magic was an artesian well. No sooner was the bore down than water came up at such an alarming rate that the natives thought the end of the world had come, and took refuge in the desert.

WESTERN CANADA

What Governor Deneen, of Illinois, Says About It:

Governor Deneen, of Illinois, owns a section of land in Saskatchewan, Canada. He has said in an interview:

"As an American I am delighted to see the remarkable progress of Western Canada. Our people are flocking across the boundary in thousands, and I have not yet met one who admitted he had made a mistake. They are all doing well. There is scarcely a community in the Middle or Western States that has not a representative in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta."

125 Million Bushels of Wheat in 1909

Western Canada field crops for 1910 will easily yield to the farmer $170,000,000.00 in cash.

Free Homesteads of 160 acres, and pre-emptions of 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. Railway and Land Companies have land for sale at reasonable prices. The Fountain Head of Life Is The Stomach

A man who has a weak and impaired stomach and who does not properly digest his food will soon find that his blood has become weak and impoverished, and that his whole body is improperly and insufficiently nourished.

Dr. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY makes the stomach strong, promotes the flow of digestive juices, restores the lost appetite, makes assimilation perfect, invigorates the liver and purifies and enriches the blood. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and restorative nerve tonic. It makes men strong in body, active in mind and cool in judgement.

This "Discovery" is a pure, glycerin extract of American medical roots, absolutely free from alcohol and all injurious, habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients are printed on its wrappers. It has no relationship with secret nostrums. Its every ingredient is endorsed by the leaders in all the schools of medicine. Don't accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this time-proven remedy OF KNOWN COMPOSITION. ASK YOUR NEIGHBORS. They must know of many cures made by it during past 40 years, right in your own neighborhood. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

FARMER PERJURER SENT TO PEN

Court Convicts Man and Employes, but Paroles One of them.

Clinton Cromwell, two months ago a well-to-do and highly respected farmer of Hudson township, was sentenced by Judge Richter in the Laporte Circuit Court to an indeterminate term of from two to twenty-one years in the State prison, following his conviction of subornation of perjury. Judge Richter at the same time, upon pleas of guilty of perjury, imposed similar sentences on Cass Coleman and Orlen Rhodes, farm hands. Coleman later was paroled in recognition of his turning State's evidence and aiding in the conviction of Cromwell. The prosecutions were the result of a neighborhood quarrel.

DEATH TO CROWS BY WHOLESALE

Farmers in Movement to Kill Several Hundred Thousand.

Farmers within six miles of Bedford have organized a shotgun movement against a gigantic crows' roost. Hundreds of thousands of the birds make a field about five miles from Bedford their sleeping apartment and every day they scatter as far south as the Ohio river, fifteen miles away, for food. One man killed several hundred of them with a club recently, but decided that more force was necessary to make an impression. The farmers say the crows have laid waste the corn crop in the counties over which they fly.

CHURCH RUNS GROCERY STORE.

Congregation at Evansville Takes Unique Method to Pay Off Debt.

The congregation of the Twelfth Avenue Baptist Church in Evansville has opened a grocery store and meat market in a building near the church, and the proceeds of the sales will be used in paying off the church debt, which amounts to about $4,000. A manager has been placed in charge of the store, and he has been instructed to conduct it as "Jesus would run it." There will be no short weight and goods will be sold at a small profit.

DYING MAN GIVES ORDER.

"Take That Engine Off Me," Cries Injured Inspector at Logansport.

Joe Dempsey, chief air brake inspector of the Panhandle Railroad, was killed near Logansport when a switch engine ran over him. Trainmen found a man had been hurt and the engine was backed again, running over the injured man and stopping directly over him. Dempsey, who was still conscious, gave the order: "Take that engine off me." The engine backed off. Dempsey died from loss of blood soon afterward.

DYNAMITE FISHING COSTLY.

Wayne County Youth Pays $400 for His Illegal Recreation.

Fishing with dynamite is costly recreation in Wayne County, as Earl Doddridge, a Washington township young man, can testify. After a trial lasting all day a jury in the Wayne Circuit Court returned a verdict of guilty against young Doddridge and he was fined the minimum sum, $250, which, with the court costs and attorneys' fees, will make the total cost nearly $400.

SOUNDS LIKE A FAIRY TALE.

The Farmers of Central Canada Reap Wheat and Riches.

Up in the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the provinces that compose Central Canada have such a quantity of land suitable for the growth of small grains, which grow so abundantly, and yield so handsomely that no fear need be feared of a wheat famine on this Continent. The story reproduced below is only one of the hundreds of proofs that could be produced to show the results that may be obtained from cultivation of the lands in these provinces. Almost any section of the country will do as well.

With the country recently opened by the Grand Trunk Pacific, the latest of the great transcontinental lines to enter the field of the development of the Canadian West, there is afforded added ample opportunity to do as was done in the case cited below:

To buy a section of land, break it up and crop it, make $17,550 out of the yield and $10,880 out of the increase of value all within the short period of two years, was the record established by James Bailey, a well-known farmer within a few miles of Regina. Mr. Bailey bought the 640 acres of land near Grand Coulee two years ago. He immediately prepared the whole section for crop and this year had 600 acres of wheat and 40 acres of oats. The wheat yielded 19,875 bushels, and the oats yielded 4,750 bushels. The whole of the grain has been marketed and Mr. Bailey is now worth $17,550 from the grain alone. He bought the land at $18 an acre, and the other day refused an offer of $35 an acre, just a $17 advance from the time of his purchase. The land cost $11,320 in the first instance. Here are the figures of the case: Land first cost, 640 acres, at $18, $11,320. Wheat yielded 19,875 bushels, at 84 cents a bushel, $16,695. Oats yielded 4,750 bushels, at 28 cents a bushel, $855. Offered for land, 640 acres at $35 an acre, $22,400. Increase value of land, $10,880. Total earnings of crop, $17,550, together with increase in value of land, a total of $28,540.

It is interesting to note the figures of the yield per acre. The wheat yielded 33.12 bushels to the acre, and oats 118.7 bushels to the acre. The figures are a fair indication of the average throughout the district.

AGONIZING ITCHING

Eczema for a Year—Got No Relief Even at Skin Hospital—In Despair Until Cuticura Cured Him.

"I was troubled by a severe itching and dry, scurfy skin on my ankles, feet, arms and scalp. Scratching made it worse. Thousands of small red pimples formed and these caused intense itching. I was advised to go to the hospital for diseases of the skin. I did so, the chief surgeon saying: 'I never saw such a bad case of eczema.' But I got little or no relief. Then I tried many so-called remedies, but I became so bad that I almost gave up in despair. After suffering agonies for twelve months, I was relieved of the almost unbearable itching after two or three applications of Cuticura Ointment. I continued its use, combined with Cuticura Soap and Pills, and I was completely cured. Henry Searle, Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 8 and 10, '07."
